In the Senate on the 21st inst. the resignation of Sergeant-at-Arms Canaday was received and laid on the table. It is to take effect June 30. Mr. Stewart then addressed the Senate on the silver bill. At the conclusion of Mr. Stewart's speech the "original package" bill was again taken up. The purpose of the bill is to nullify the effect of the recent decision of the United States Supreme Court. Its importance is fully realized by the Senate, and the various provisions embraced in it were debated quite fully. Senator Evarts spoke at considerable length urging its passage. No final action was had, however, on the bill and the Senate adjourned after a brief executive session. The House went into committee of the whole immediately upon assembling, Mr. Grosvenor, of Ohio in the chair. After some debate, Mr. McKinley demanded the previous question on the bill and amendments, and the previous question was ordered—yeas 161, nays 143. The amendments were then read in detail. The first amendment on which a separate vote was demanded was one changing the phraseology of the tin-plate clause. It was adopted—yeas 150, nays 149. The amendment which increases the duty on jute yarn from 30 per cent. as fixed in the bill to 35 per cent. was rejected by a vote of 144 to 143, leaving the duty at 30 per cent. An amendment in the section relating to the duty on wool and worsted yarn which provides that the duty shall be two and one-half times the price of first-class unwashed wool per pound and 35 per cent. ad valorem was rejected by a vote of 148 to 137, leaving the duty fixed by the bill at twice the price of unwashed wool of the first class and 35 per cent. ad valorem. The paragraph which fixed the duty on woolen and worsted cloths at three times the value of unwashed wool per pound and 35 per cent. ad valorem was rejected, leaving the duty fixed by the bill at twice the value of wool, with 35 per cent. ad valorem. All other amendments adopted in the committee of the whole were passed by the House, and the bill was then passed by a vote of 162 to 142, all the Republicans present except Mr. Coleman, of Louisiana, and Mr. Featherstone, of Arkansas, voting for it, and all the Democrats against it. The announcement of its passage was greeted with applause on both sides of the House. The House then adjourned.

In the Senate, on the 22d inst., the credentials of Calvin S. Brice, as Senator from the State of Ohio for six years, commencing March 4, 1891, were presented by Mr. Payne, read and placed on file. Senator Daniel addressed the Senate on the silver bill, speaking in favor of silver currency. The naval appropriation bill was then taken up and discussed until adjournment. In the House, Mr. Dunnell, of Minnesota, from the Committee on Census, reported a bill amendatory of the census act, which was passed. It prescribes a penalty upon any supervisor or enumerator who shall receive or any person who shall pay any fee or other consideration in addition to the compensation of such supervisor or enumerator. The afternoon was spent on the river and harbor appropriation bill. Messrs. Blanchard, Catchings, Grosvenor, Henderson and other members of the committee spoke in support of the bill. Mr. Kerr, of Iowa, spoke in opposition to the passage of a bill for $21,000,000 on the small amount of information which the committee had included in their report. Mr. Grosvenor replied that the reports of the engineers were accessible to every member who desired to consult them, and gave the fullest information on the subject. Mr. Boatner, of Louisiana, made an argument in favor of the use of Government funds for the construction of levees.

The Senate spent the 23d inst. in the consideration of the naval appropriation bill. Pending the discussion, the Senate bill for a public building at Canton, Ohio, the cost not to exceed $100,000, was taken from the calendar and passed. By unanimous consent Mr. Stanford addressed the Senate briefly in advocacy of the bill introduced by him some days ago providing for loans by the Government on agricultural lands. Senator Dolph then addressed the Senate at length upon the naval appropriation bill. Mr. Dolph concluded at 5 o'clock, and after a brief executive session the Senate adjourned. The House spent the entire day in the consideration of the river and harbor bill. The appropriations for all harbors were considered paragraph by paragraph, and were all passed by the committee of the whole without change. Mr. Post, of Illinois, offered an amendment to the paragraph relating to the Illinois River providing for a survey from Joliet to the mouth of the river to determine the cost of deepening the river to such a depth as will enable the largest Mississippi boats to run from the Mississippi River and up the Illinois to Joliet, at which point, he said, the State of Illinois would connect the ship canal and enable the steamers to run on from that point to Lake Michigan at Chicago. The Hennepin Canal clause was then taken up and a point of order was made against it. Mr. Henderson, of Illinois, and others argued against the point of order, the argument occupying the remainder of the afternoon. The House adjourned without a decision upon a point of order. No changes of importance were made in the bill, and no opposition of any importance was developed aside from that relating to the Hennepin Canal. Among the paragraphs passed were those making appropriations for the improvement of the harbors at Chicago and other Illinois points, as well as in Wisconsin and Michigan. The House adopted Mr. Hitt's amendment allowing the people of Galena to improve the channel connecting that city with the Mississippi, and engaging to refund $100,000 of the cost in case the work is successful.

THE OLD CRADLE.

I'm banished to the garret now;
My busy days are o'er;
Within my sheltering embrace
The babies sleep no more.
No more, as in the by-gone hours,
My drowsy beat keeps time
In patient, sleepy monotone
With the old nursery rhyme,
"Rock-a-by, baby, on the tree-top,
When the wind blows, the cradle will rock."

The last rays of the settting sun
Slant through the windows small;
They light the garret's dusky gloom,
And on my head they fall.
Along their level bars of gold
Old pictures come and go;
Again I hear the mother's voice
Singing so soft and low,
"Rock-a-by, baby, on the tree-top;
When the wind blows the cradle will rock."

Ah me! where once the baby heads
The downy pillows prest,
Within my ample oaken hood
The spider has her nest.
Empty, forgotten, and alone,
A useless thing am I.
The last words of a quaint old song
Fall like a parting sigh,
"When the bough breaks, the cradle will fall;
Down will go baby and cradle and all."

BOOMTOWN'S COLLAPSE.

BY C. M. HARGER.

You remember, no doubt, the "boom" that struck the West midway in the 80's. You remember how towns sprung up with greater rapidity than was dreamed of in the days of Aladdin; how what was yesterday a prairie became to-day a village, and to-morrow a city; how speculation ran riot and fabulous fortunes, on paper, were made almost in a night. You recall how companies, or rather, syndicates, were formed in every city of the nation for the purpose of taking advantage of this wonderful growth of towns by buying up land, planting it into city lots, and selling again. You recollect how the older cities of the plains extended their limits almost indefinitely, until it seemed as though the saying of an old farmer friend or mine would be realized. "Godliness," he used to remark, "if you town fellers keep on layin' out editions to yer cities there won't be any land left for farmin'. It'll be all cut up inter buildin' lots and railroad right-o' ways."

Boomtown was simply and purely a creature of the speculative form. It had its origin in the back parlors of Henry Manley's law office, in the city of Philadelphia. It was the result of a coolly and carefully conceived scheme to make a fortune easily. And to Henry Manley must be given the credit for the plan.

"Gentlemen," he had said, when the half-dozen of his fellow-capitalists invited to his office one February afternoon had taken their seats, "there is money in this tide of town-building. If we can raise sufficient funds, we can make a fortune as well as the rest of them. I have looked over the ground. We will buy four sections of land, favorably situated, lay out one section in city lots, erect some buildings, advertise the thing, have an auction sale, and sell enough to more than pay for our outlay; then we will dispose of the remainder at our leisure as clear profit. What do you say?"

They were agreed as to the feasibility of the scheme, and by the middle of summer Boomtown was in the height of prosperity, with houses, stores, sites for schoolhouses, churches, and even the State capitol, and other public buildings—and first of all the Boomtown Syndicate (limited) of Philadelphia had more than realized the amount of the investment, and was gathering in the profits.

Then came a lull. Somehow, lots did not sell quite as rapidly as before and some of the stock-holders were becoming a little uneasy.

A meeting was held.

"I'll tell you what is the matter," said Manley, the president of the company; "Boomtown needs a paper."

"That's it exactly," said the spruce little banker's son, who was secretary. "The people must be informed, you know, of Boomtown's existence."

"We must let folks know that there is such a place," translated Manley for the benefit of the others.

"Haven't we advertised?" asked one stock-holder.

"Yes, but, you see, it has all been outside places to get people there. Nov we must keep up their courage, so that they will not go away."

This was good logic, and the directors ordered the officers to arrange for starting a paper in Boomtown.

It was done. In answer to an advertisement, one A. C. Chelton was engaged as editor, and money enough furnished for the "plant."

Henry Manley, as he corresponded with the future editor, became much impressed with the vigorous character of that individual, and actually longed to leave his law practice and go and assist in getting out the first number of the Boomtown Herald—for he had "stuck type" once upon a time himself.

Six months went by. If Boomtown belied its name, and did not boom, it was not the fault of the Herald. There never was a paper which did so much arguing for its home city. Vigorous editorials, pithy locals, sharp criticisms, all told of a mind alert to the best interests of the place. The paper had not made money, but it "pushed" the town.

Manley watched for its weekly coming with as much avidity as he did for his meals. He read it before he did the metropolitan journals. He formed a liking for the editor, and often wished he could meet him face to face.

"If I did not know otherwise, I should suspect that you had a sweetheart out in that Western village," said his mother one day, when her bachelor son was poring over a letter from Chelton.

"I have," he replied, "the Herald. I'm in love with it, and am going out to call upon it next week."

He was as good as his word, and, ten days later, as the overland express halted at Boomtown, an elegantly-dressed stranger alighted and stood gazing about him in a bewildered manner.

It was not exactly what he had expected. He had too high an ideal in his mind. The straggling village looked rather unkempt and ill-shapen, and scarcely realized the rosy descriptions sent the syndicate by its agents.

Despatching his satchel to the only hotel by a depot lounger, he sauntered up the street toward a little frame building with the words "Herald Office" displayed thereon in mammoth letters.

Reaching the door, he looked in. It was a typical country newspaper office, with exceptions. The cases had pictures hanging above them. A few plants stood in the window. Some faded cut flowers were on the desk which occupied one corner of the apartment, and was plainly the editor's sanctum.

A lanky boy, whose close-cropped head displayed the bumps of obstinacy and reticence well developed, was lazily setting type at one of the two cases.

"Is the editor in?" asked Manley.

"No-ap," was the laconic response.

"Where can I find him?"

"Dunno."

"Coming down to the office soon?"

"No-ap."

"Why not?"

"Gone away."

"But to day is the day for the paper, isn't it?"

"Yep."

"But it isn't printed yet?"

"No-ap."

"How much more type have you to set?"

"A column."

A brilliant thought struck the Quaker City lawyer. He would help the boy get out the paper and enjoy Chelton's astonishment. But he determined to sound the boy a little further, so he asked, unconsciously adopting the latter's laconic method,—

"All alone?"

"Yep. Can't get nobody to help."

"Could you get out the paper if you had a hand?"

"Guess I could."

"Supposing I help."

If the boy was startled he did not show it, but only answered,—

"All right."

Manley wasted no words, but threw off his coat, and with his shirt sleeves rolled up, took his station at the other case and began on an editorial written in Chelton's bold, manly chirography, and entitled, "The Future of the West."

After the first few minutes the old facility came back to his fingers, and "stickful" after stickful was placed in the "form," with a rapidity that won the respect of the assistant.

The forms were locked and put on the press. Manley took hold of the crank and turned the great wheel, while the boy fed through the papers. It was no child's play, turning the ponderous wheel, perched as he was on a dry goods box, which swayed and creaked beneath his weight.

He had had no dinner, and this fact, combined with the unaccustomed employment, made him actually faint.

"How stupid I am," he meditated, "to be turning a one-horse press out here on the plains, a thousand miles west of the Mississippi River, when I would sooner be shot than do such a thing at home."

On went the iron machinery with its steady "click, click," and its regular laying down upon the slowly growing pile of sheet after sheet of damp paper. They were nearly through with their task, and the room was beginning to grow a little dusky when, suddenly, the door of the office opened, and a straight, lady-like form entered.

She was not really beautiful, but she had that inexpressible charm about her that characterizes the Western girl, that something that makes her self-reliant and independent, and drags in absolute slavery the men with whom she becomes acquainted.

"Why, Joe," she exclaimed, when she saw the new form at the press, "who has been helping you?"

"A man wot come in," was the office boy's laconic answer.

"Why didn't you wait for me?"

"What business of hers is it?" thought Manley.

"He wanted to help, an' I let him," replied Joe.

"Did you get in my editorial that I left here?" imperiously demanded she.

"Yep."

"Her editorial," thought Manley, tugging away at the wheel with a dogged determination, "what has she to do with it? I'll give this old thing a few more whirls, and then—"

His mental sentence was never finished. There was a crackling of the box beneath him—a swaying motion—an attempt to regain his balance—a crash—a fall—a sharp, quick pain in elbow, shoulder, brain—and unconsciousness.

When he recovered, he was lying in the office corner of the room, and a very much frightened but very pretty young lady was bending over him and bathing his forhead in water. He attempted to move, but a twinge in his arm warned him that he must not.

"I have sent for a doctor," said the lady. "Will you give me your name, please, so that I can tell him?"

He motioned toward his coat which had hung on the case while he was turning the press.

She comprehended, and going to it took out his letter case and card book. When she read the inscription on the cards, she started back with surprise, and then, alternately blushing and paling as if guilty of some crime, returned to his side.

"Not the president of the Boomtown Syndicate?" she stammered.

"The same. And you?" he whispered.

For an answer she reached to the desk and holding before his eyes a copy of the Boomtown Herald, a copy of which he had a few moments before been grinding through the press, pointed to the head of the first column. He read:—

"A. C. CHELTON—Editor."

There was no more time for conversation; the physician had arrived.

"How did this happen?" he asked with a profound bow to the lady, a bow eloquent with suggestions of such epithets as "courtly," "accomplished," etc., to be applied to him in future references in local items.

"He was standing by the press, when the box upon which he was, gave way, and he fell. In the fall his arm caught in the press and was wrenched," was her summing up of the situation.

The doctor took hold of the arm, gave it a twist—and Manley dropped off into unconsciousness again.

* * * * *

It was something of a nine-days' wonder in Boomtown—the nine days during which the stranger lay in his room in the hotel, nursing a broken arm, and building up a system which had given way under the strain of several months' hard work, ending with the long journey and the events of the afternoon of his arrival.

His first call, when he was able to leave the hotel, was at the Herald office. The same little lady who had startled him before was sitting at the desk.

After some preliminary congratulations had been disposed of, he felt a decided embarrassment in carrying on the conversation. At last he blurted out, with characteristic bluntness,—

"Are you the editor?"

"Didn't I tell you so," she replied, with a twinkle in her eyes.

"Yes, but—but—it was A. C. Chelton," he stammered.

"That is right. Alma Caroline Chelton—that's my name," and she straightened up haughtily.

"And you have run this thing all the while?"

"Yes, all the while. I would have let you know, but I was afraid you would not like it, and as the company were apparently pleased with my work, I thought I must be doing as well as a man."

"You did do as well as a man," said Manley impulsively. "You did splendidly. The paper was as strong as a man could have made it. I liked the style. Couldn't have improved on some of the editorials myself."

Manley liked the Herald—that was very evident. It also soon became evident to the Boomtown folks that he liked the editor—or editress, as some would call her. His trip of a few days lengthened into weeks, and all that time he was loitering around the printing office. It seemed to him as though that was the brightest spot on earth. He conferred with the villagers, he launched new plans for the improvement of the place, but he gave his best efforts to making happy the hours of the writer of those editorials which had so caught his fancy.

When at last an imperative summons from the Quaker City called him home, he asked that writer to accompany him.

"Why," said she roguishly, "What will the Herald do without an editor?"

"It never shall have another editor," returned he impetuously. "I'll dump the whole office into the ravine yonder. No other name shall profane its columns."

He did not exactly do that, but on the day that he and his newly-made bride were carried away eastward, they saw from the windows of the Pullman car, three wagons stringing off to the south, mounting the slope that led after a few miles, to the foothills of the Rockies. "There, Alma," said Manley, "there they go. They are moving the Herald to Gold City. I sold the whole outfit yesterday."

Boomtown never recovered the loss of both its paper and editor. The down grade upon which it had started when Manley went West had no end short of that vuality called "deadness."

It went rapidly through that metamorphosis which Henry Manley and his wife, as they talk over the affair in their luxurious Philadelphia home, term "Boomtown's Collapse."—[Yankee Blade.

Daring Band of Thieves.

It is not so very long ago that commercial London went wild over the operations of a daring gang, all the members of which eluded capture, after realizing huge profits from their transactions. The principal in the various "affairs" was a handsome young woman, elegantly dressed. She would enter a jeweler's shop and ask to look at some gems. While engaged in her selections the music of a hand organ would be heard in the street. The woman would pause, open a pocketbook, take out a shilling, and say: "It always makes me feel charitable to hear that tune. Pray give me coppers for the silver." On receiving the change, she would wrap a portion of it in a piece of paper and add; "Please have one of your young men give that to the organ grinder."

After the request had been complied with she would resume the inspection of the precious stones, make some small investment and prepare to depart. Usually the salesman would discover the absence of from one to three costly gems and detain her. She would grow indignant, he more firm and insistent. The messenger boy sent for a policeman would find one right at the door and call him in. He would place the woman under arrest, and she would beg him to spare an innocent person the disgrace of being dragged through the streets to jail. A cab would be at hand, and in it the policeman and his prisoner would drive away, after the former had warned the jeweler to be in court promptly next morning. And that was the last the merchant would ever hear of the woman, the organ grinder, the policeman or the cab driver.

All, of course, were confederates. When the female customer sent out the parcel to the street musician it contained, besides the coppers, the stones she had abstracted from the tray. With these in his pocket the organ grinder promptly disappeared, the bogus policeman took his station within call and an humble but useful member of the gang took care that meanwhile the genuine policeman on the beat was getting his fill of beer at the most convenient public house. The grand exit to the waiting cab of the stern officer and the weeping female completed the artistic details of the swindle. In two days thirty-eight complaints reached the authorities of thefts of this sort, but by the time they got ready to act no one could be found for them to arrest.—[New York Press.

The Man Frog and the Goose Boy.

The man frog was first exhibited at a country fair in one of the rural districts of France in 1866, and at Paris during the whole of the following year. He had a stout, ill-shaped body, the perfect counterpart of that of a frog, and thick skin, cold and clammy, covered with numerous welts and blotches. His great frog-like face, eyes five inches apart, and enormous mouth, was hideous to behold. He attracted a good deal of attention from the Academy of Medicine, Paris, and delegates from that institution were deputized to make him an object of study. During the four years following 1866 he traveled all over France and parts of Spain, and made quite a fortune for himself and his exhibitors. He retired to his native city, Puyre, and died of a fever in 1874.

The man with a goose's head first appeared before the public at a famous "Gingerbread Fair" at Liverpool in 1872. He was twenty years of age at that time, had eyes perfectly round and a nose eight inches in length, flat, and shaped exactly like the bill of a goose. His neck was three times the length of that of an ordinary person, surmounted by a round, flat head, without a single hair. He seemed to have as much common sense as the average country boy of his age, learned very fast and soon quit the show business and studied the photographer's art. His name is Jean Rendier, and he now lives at Dijon, France.—[San Francisco Chronicle.

Kettle Falls of the Columbia.

Kettle Falls is the name of the only distinct waterfalls in the main channel of the Columbia River, in Oregon. They completely prevent the safe passage of boats at all seasons of the year. They are on the Upper Columbia, nearly a score of miles south of the international boundary. The vast volume of water pours over great rocks, jutting out from the shores and lying across the bed of the stream. The Upper fall is about twenty feet of vertical distance. Two or three hundred feet below that is a second fall, which is more in the nature of rapids, because of the huge broken rocks among which the water flows.

The great volume of water in the Columbia makes Kettle Falls one of the most powerful water powers in the country. No reliable estimate of its power has ever been made. The falls of Kettle River, a tributary of the Columbia, joining it near Kettle Falls, are often confounded with those of the greater stream, because of the similarity of name. Kettle River Falls are in British Columbia; Kettle Falls of the Columbia are in the United States, and constitute one of the rare bits of scenery in which the Columbia excels many other streams on the American continent.—[West Shore.

CHINESE BABIES.

BY EMILY VILO.

FEW people probably are aware that one of the first things that happen to a Chinese baby boy after he is born is to be shaved. But such is the fact. A barber comes with his razor and all the hair is shaved off the poor little fellow's tender scalp.

After that, baby has to go the barber for his shave, just as a grown man with a beard might go in this country; but he never seems to enjoy it, and cries pitifully every time the sharp razor mows down the hair. After a while, when the hair begins to grow thicker, the head is not shaved all over, but is left untouched in spots, just as the parents think will look pretty.

Sometimes there will be three tufts, each as big round as a silver dollar, one just over the middle of the forehead, and one over each ear. When the hair grows long enough in these tufts, it is braided and tied with a bright cord, and then the baby looks funny enough to a foreigner, for each little braid stands stiffly up for about two inches, and then lops over. The braids look like horns on his head, and holes are cut in his green and red cap to let the horns come through. When he grows older, he is allowed to wear a queue like the men.

When baby is about a month old he is given his first name, or milk name, as the Chinese call it. A feast is prepared, the friends are called in, and papa gives baby his name. This name is used only until he is ready to go to school, when a new name is given him and another feast is offered to his friends.

The names given to the boys are odd to us, but they seem all right to them. Think of being called Ink-grinder, or Promising-study! But even this name is not kept, for when the boy grows up and is married he takes a new name, which he keeps for the rest of his life.

If baby's papa is rich, baby is well taken care of, carried about tenderly and amused to his heart's content; but if papa be poor, then the boy, very likely, will be tied to an older sister's back with a broad piece of cloth, so that his legs dangle down by her sides and his poor little head wobbles about over the top of the cloth as if his neck were made of India rubber.

The little nurse goes about her work or runs at her play and never seems to give a thought to her little brother and his bobbing head; and he does not seem to mind it, for, when it looks as if his head must be almost shaken off, he, very likely, is fast asleep.

If baby happens to live on a boat, as a great many hundred thousand persons in China do, his mamma ties a big gourd on his back, so that he cannot drown if he falls overboard, or he is tied by a rope to some part of the boat.

In summer baby wears as little clothing as possible; but in winter it is just the other way; he wears all the clothing that can be put upon him. Except in the northern part of China, near Pekin, where it is bitterly cold in winter, the Chinese people do not have fires in their houses even when it is cold enough to freeze the water into ice.

Pair after pair of trousers is put on baby's legs, and jacket after jacket on his body, until by the time he is clad warmly enough he is quite as broad as he is long, and his little arms stick straight out from his sides, so that he waddles about, provided he can move at all, looking like a red and green pillow with a ball on top, and with smaller pillows on each side where the arms are. It makes no difference to him, then, how cold it is, and he sits in the open air on his little bamboo stool, with nose and cheeks very red, and his body as warm as toast.

All this has been about boy babies, because in China girl babies are not thought much of, and, consequently, all the good times come to the boys.—Chicago Ledger.

A Homely Virtue.

Cora, when she married Frank Boyce, was earnest in her anxiety to please the family, and to win their love. She was an orphan and alone. His mother, she felt, must love her as a child, and his sisters take her in as one of themselves, or she would not be happy. She bought her gowns of the color which Frank said they preferred; she practiced her songs with fresh zeal upon hearing they were fond of music. She was an affectionate, generous girl, and eager for love.

But when the wedding was over, and Frank and his wife arrived at his mother's house, there was a look of dismay in the eyes of her new relatives which they could not conceal.

They tried to meet her appealing glances with a cordial welcome, but they could not be blind to the tear in her dress which was pinned together, or to the grease spots on her elegant cloak.

When she came down that evening in her bridal dress to meet their friends, her face was bedaubed with white powder, and the skirts that peeped from beneath the satin gown were soiled.

Cora Boyce never overcame the untidy habits of her youth. All her warm affections, her beauty, her gay wit, could not win the respect of her new kinsfolk for a woman who came to breakfast in curl-papers and a dirty wrapper. Her husband, who had seen her before marriage only in the drawing-room, was shocked, distressed, and at last out of patience with her slovenliness.

She is an old woman now, and has married children, but she never has been able to understand why the love which she has given so generously to those dear to her never has been repaid in kind, nor why her children are ashamed when she meets their friends.

She has undoubtedly made many efforts to change her personal habits in this regard, but such habits, when once firmly established by an untidy childhood and youth, are almost incurable in manhood and womanhood.

She does not know, perhaps even now, that she lacks that homely quality of which Strebling says, "It is a necessary virtue, the presence of which we do not notice in a woman, though its absence drives us mad."

Cleanliness assuredly comes next to godliness in winning respect for man or woman.

The memory of good Sir Walter is more sweet and wholesome in the hearts of all men when they read of his scrupulous personal nicety, and who does not love Charles Lamb better for hearing that he "always looked as if he had just come from the bath?"—Youth's Companion.

Influencing Delegates.

The new election law as to primaries and conventions went into force last March, more than a year ago. Among other things, it says:

Any person being a candidate for nomination to any office of profit or trust under the constitution or laws of this state, or of the United States, before any convention held by any political party, or at any primary election, who loans, pays or gives, or promises to loan, pay or give any money or other thing of value to any delegate or elector, or any other person for the purpose of securing the vote or influence of such delegate, elector or person for his nomination, * * * shall upon conviction thereof, be fined in any sum not more than $500 and disfranchised for any determinate period, * * * and if nominated, shall be ineligible to hold such office.

We quote this to put several candidates on their guard, as word comes to us that some of them are reported as making arrangements to do this very thing in a small way at the convention Saturday. Some are going to bring their men here, delegates and others, in free teams, or by paying their car fare. Some are going to provide free dinners, etc. All this is strictly illegal and may cause the candidate serious trouble. It has been decided by a competent court that the Kosciusko style of giving free dinners to delegates is illegal. We speak of this, as we have an interest in all the candidates, and would not like to see them get into trouble. The two new laws are intended to make men get nominations and elections honorably, and thereby secure for us honest officers.

Obituary.

Little Earlie, son of John and Emeranna Luttman, departed this life April 30, 1890, aged 2 months and 29 days.

He fell asleep so sweetly,
And they who for him weep,
Can surely see the glory
Which crowns his blessed sleep.

They Defend Arford.

Republican papers will defend a man who commits any sort of crime to secure votes for their party, and many of their rank and file will do the same. Our attention is again called to this low state of political morals, by the way the republican papers of this county come up and defend Arford. Not one of them published the evidence, although the Dispatch editor was present. The COURIER was the only paper in the county that gave a full account. In commenting on the trial, the Waterloo Press attempted to cast a doubt over the proceedings, called Arford a man of "sterling honesty" and complained that the new law would work a hardship on honest (?) candidates. The Dispatch of May 8, says, "It appears to be a deep-laid conspiracy to blacken Arford's character. * * * * * Hook seems to be responsible for a democratic majority in Stafford, without regard to methods or expense." And on May 22, it says that "Arford won in both civil suits" and was relieved of "all charges of buying votes, or of doing any illegal act." It also believes the Cook boys never voted for Arford. But it takes the Butler Record to show up its morality in still higher style. It has this item, which is almost the same as that in the Dispatch.

"When the Stafford township contested election case came up for trial last Wednesday, Joseph Wilson withdrew all charges of bribery, and the trial was solely upon the charge that two minors had voted for Arford. As the two boys testified that they voted for him, and this would give Wilson one majority of legal votes, the title of Wilson to the office was confirmed, Arford of course paying all costs. The two suits for $300 each for bribery commenced by the boys were decided against them, thus clearing Arford entirely of all charges of bribery. The better class of citizens do not believe the boys voted for Arford at all, and they think him entitled to the office."

Then in another column it has this Jeremiad on DeKalb journalism.

"We regret that journalism in DeKalb county has sunk so low that for merely partisan purposes it would lend itself to a scheme of unprincipaled men to blacken the character of an honorable citizen upon the testimony of unreliable and not overly bright boys, who will undoubtedly land in the state prison unless the officials take pity on them, knowing that they are the tools of a disreputable gang, who care little what becomes of them so their ends are accomplished. And yet the COURIER and Review pretend to be respectable."

This shows a terrible state of things, when two respectable journals like the COURIER and Review will not step up and defend crime. But we feel sure these republican editors are making a mistake to keep raking up this case. The more it is studied the worse it gets for their side. It is very cruel to an "honorable citizen" whose great fault was in buying votes and getting caught at it and punished. Let us call their attention to a few facts, of which they seem to be in ignorance.

1. Arford has never denied buying those votes. Twice in court, once before the commissioners, and then in the circuit court, he had a chance to deny it. But he did not, nor did his attorneys for him. Why did he not. Why did not his attorneys deny it? They had summoned witnesses, and these were present. Why did they not put them on the stand? Why did they not put Arford himself on the stand? Surely, the testimony of an "honorable man," would be believed, as against "the testimony of unreliable and not overly bright boys." The COURIER, as a "respectable journal," one that don't believe it is right to bribe voters, is anxious that these three respectable republican journals, that are not "sunk so low for partisan purposes," as to denounce any sort of crime, should stand up and defend themselves with the same eagerness that they try to defend criminals. There was no "trial before the judge." The case was fixed up before coming into court. Arford begged hard to be let out not daring to have it come to trial. Was this a sign of innocence?

Arford paid out a large amount of money to stop the matter without further publicity. See the terms. He gave up the office. He paid the attorneys on both sides. He paid all costs. People who "win all the cases" don't pay costs. And then to secure himself from prosecution by the Cook boys, he paid them $100. We don't know what he paid his own attorneys. But he paid Mr. Dills $25; A. J. Baxter, $40; Ott Baxter for making a short hand report of the trial before the commissioners, got $5, the two Cook boys $50 each, and the costs of the trial amounting to not less than $80, making $250. Now add the fees of his own four attorneys, and the expense attending the attempt to run the boys over into Ohio, which we are told is alone over $100, and it will be seen just how much an "honorable man" will pay out in cold, round, iron dollars, before he will even make a denial of his guilt. We are glad the whole gang of boodlers got a scare. But were we not so familiar with the course republican papers take in regard to boodlers at elections, we should be surprised at the stand taken by the highly moral Press, Dispatch, and Record. The Dispatch even gets savage for fear the grand jury won't "indict the Cook boys." We are told on good authority that the Cook boys would have been hauled up but for the piteous pleadings of Arford and his friends. By all means, let the boys be called up. Then Arford and Chiesman will be called into court, and the COURIER will take great pleasure in making a report of what they swear to. We venture to say that neither of these highly moral "defenders of boodling" really want the boys put on trial. If they do, they can have it done. Any citizen can make the complaint and have them or Arford, or county Chairman Chiesman called up at any time. Let's hear from them. Messrs Arford, Chiesman & Co. do you want to come into court and tell what you know about this case? We pause for a reply.

The ladies of the W. R. C. prepared dinner for the workers in the soil, which was served on the lawn at the residence of F. W. Willis.

Mrs. Franks returned from Kansas last Friday, with the body of her daughter Lizzie, who died of that dread disease consumption. Miss Franks went to friends in Kansas last summer, hoping to regain her health, which was failing. She had many friends. The funeral services were held Sunday afternoon at the M. E. church, Rev. Crouse officiating.

Everyone says Waterloo needs two hotels. It would be a good idea for some one to purchase the brick block on the corner on Wayne and Railroad streets, built by Dr. J. U. Winslow, and fit it up for a hotel, leaving the corner below and perhaps the room south of that to be still occupied as business places. This is an excellent location for a hotel, convenient of access, with an abundance of room, or if not, sufficient adjoining for all demands.

Democratic Caucus.

The democrats of Union township met Saturday in Ensley's Hall. There was a fair turnout in spite of the bad weather. Soon after 3, they were called to order by Committeeman D. T. Smith, and on motion Cal Husselman was selected chairman. Mr. Boland made a statement that the six candidates for office from this township, had agreed on a plan which would secure a fair showing for all. They had each named two friends, and Mr. Dills, as candidate for representative had named the thirteenth, and these thirteen were to act as a committee to select the forty-five delegates for the township. It had also been decided that of these delegates, the country north should have 6; the country south 7; the town north, 14, and the town south, 18. He moved that this plan of selecting be adopted. Mr. Dills and Mr. Brown spoke in favor of the motion and it was carried unanimously. Dr. Nusbaum said it is understood that the thirteen on this committee are to be among the delegates chosen. This was agreed to, Mr. Moody making the remark that the arrangement was fair to all, and Mr. Dills then spoke in the same strain. The plan was agreed to unanimously. Mr. Boland said that it would be advisable for the caucus to go on and select delegates to other conventions while this committee retires to make up the list of county delegates. The committee of 13 then retired. The caucus then selected F. A. Hoff for the south precinct, and Cal. Husselman of the north, as delegates to the state convention. To the congressional convention, they chose Dr. Nusbaum for the south, and Jacob Walborn for the north. To the judicial convention, Samuel Brandon for the south, and S. L. Campbell for the north. Joint representative, D. T. Smith for the south, and Ed. Baker for the north. The caucus then waited for the committee of 13 to report. When they came in, their chairman, G. C. Ralston read the list of names selected, and this was adopted unanimously. (The names of all the county delegates are in this issue.) The caucus then adjourned.

RHEUMATISM CURED.

MR. W. P. JOHNSON, ATLANTA, GA.

Whose picture adorns the head of this column, is an extensive coal and wood dealer.

He said lately: "My business necessitates a good deal of exposure upon me, and last winter, owing to this fact, I was attacked with a very severe case of inflammatory rheumatism.

"What I suffered from this dread disease can better be imagined than described.

"I did everything I could to cure myself. I tried every means in my power and every remedy left me as bad or worse than I was before. I could not raise my hand to my head, and it looked as if, even if I were rid of the disease, its effects would CRIPPLE ME FOR LIFE.

"About four weeks ago I was persuaded to try Hunnicutt's Rheumatic Cure, and my relief was almost instantaneous. I am now on my fourth bottle, and I am as sound a man as there is in Georgia.

Some of the grown boys who sat on the bank and made flippant remarks at the baptizing Sunday, ought to be ashamed of themselves. The minister had to stop and ask if the marshal was at hand, as he believed he had a right to be protected. Conduct of this kind is a disgrace to the town.

Primary elections in Illinois are held by law, and must have a legal notice of ten days at least. This insures a thorough advertising, and everybody knows when and where to attend. After this year's experience, we think the candidates will agree with the COURIER that the primary system would be a good thing in DeKalb.

Mrs. Lee Goetschius, formerly Miss Laura Fair, started back to Montana, Monday, going over the U. P. to Cheyenne, and thence home to Anaconda, in Deer Lodge county, which is their home. Hite & Son, the new firm at Waterloo, have started a store there that will attract a great deal of attention. It is a 5 and 10 cent store, one that keeps all sorts of everything, and sells cheap. There is scarcely a thing one would want but one can find by calling for it. They have the room so long occupied by the Sinclair hardware store south of the railroad.

We feel gratified at the continued favor, with which the COURIER is received especially in the family circle. We have always aimed to make it worthy, and a fit visitor to the homes of all. We have had several ladies become subscribers lately, in addition to those already on the list. The latest of these, is Miss Emma Maree, who sends it to her brother-in-law, Mr. Edward Lower, at Kendallville. She has our thanks.

C. J. Porter, the Waterloo optician will be in Auburn at the Hollister House, the first Tuesday in each month, to meet all who desire his service in fitting defective eyes with the proper glasses, and for all the work in his line. Long experience should be valuable in this case above all others. The eyes should not be trifled with. An eye once lost can never be restored and great care should be taken to preserve them. Mr. Porter stands at the head of his profession in this special department. Don't trust your eyes to inexperienced or careless men, but call on him when here and get glasses such as you need. Don't forget the dates, the first Tuesday of each month. tf

There is considerable trouble over at Butler in regard to the selection of delegates. There was a struggle between the friends of Mr. Blair, and those of Mr. Coffinbury, and Blair's friends succeeded in getting the delegates. It has caused some dissatisfaction, but we presume the parties will manage to adjust it.

They measured 3½ feet in length, part of their bodies was ringed with black and white rings, while the other part was striped lengthwise Each had a spear on the end of the tail about an inch in length. Some think they were of the specie called the hoop snake.

John Reesh jr., is lying very ill at present with dropsy. Several years ago he had a severe attack of measles, from which he became deformed about the shoulders, and has been growing worse ever since. The physician says that the left lung has crowded around nearly back of the right, and that the heart is much out of place. His recovery is doubtful. Later. He died Tuesday.

Davis and daughter, Edna, W. H. Dills, Miss Myrtle Dills, and Miss Fannie Casebeer. Mr. Dills' nephew, Henry Dills, graduated that evening. He is a popular and talented young man, who has many friends over here. We received an invitation to attend, but could not find the time to go.

The editor of this paper has a choice among the candidates of course, The list contains the names of many warm personal friends, men he would greatly like to see nominated and elected for he believes they would be an honor to the county. But it has not been considered fair to other democrats who are seeking office, that we should say in the COURIER who our favorites are. We say these few words, as our attention has been called to several articles in the Clipper for some months past intimating that we were working for this or that one. After the Clipper has boomed two especial friends for several months openly in that sheet, we think it takes gall to blame the COURIER for doing the same thing. But the COURIER's columns show that we have not done this. We have given each and all the same chance, and no matter who is nominated, we propose to do the best we can to get him elected. It comes with very poor grace from the Clipper to call people's attention to its part in the dirty work four years ago, by saying in its last issue to the democrats of other parts of the county, "Remember the campaign of 1886." The Clipper's threats of "1886" are getting a little tiresome. There will be no repetition of the "1886" business no matter who is nominated, and the Clipper's attempt to create a scare has lost its force. The democrats of the county are not to be frightened by such talk. As to the COURIER, we shall, as we always have, do all we can to avoid a quarrel, but we propose to defend ourself from unjust attacks.

The agricultural bulletins sent out this spring from Purdue University at Lafayette, are full of new and valuable information to farmers. The latest one we have received treats of strawberries and other small fruits and potatoes. The experiments they are making on these must necessarily be valuable. Farmers can get these reports free by writing H. E. Stockbridge, Purdue University, Lafayette, Ind.

The Auburn correspondent to the St. Joe News says: "A malicious attack upon the character of Congressman McClellan of this county, in the columns of the Supplement of Saturday's Commercial Gazette by an anonymus writer, has excited the indignation of town's people. This is the second article of like kind from the same source and, both abound in rank falsehood, for which there is no shadow of excuse.

J. L. Davis was up the road west last week to see how the surveyors were getting along. They got to Westville, in Laporte county, Saturday evening. They strike the old roadbed of the Canada Southern there. The ground along there is high, the Lake Shore road north of there having a grade of 60 feet to the mile, and the B. & O. on the south has about 40. But this line strikes a place where the grade is not over 15 feet in a mile. This is a great advantage.

Charles Kriebel, an eminent teacher, will open a summer normal school in Butler about the first of July. Quite a number have signified, their desire to attend such a school and we predict he will make it a success. Mr. Kriebel has had abundant experience in the work, and comes highly recommended. He has been a teacher at Montpelier, and has also been engaged to take charge as principal of the Butler schools. The regular year's work of the public schools will begin early in September.

We received a letter from J. J. Van-Auken, the engineer of the surveying party this week. It was dated at North Liberty, in St. Joseph county, northeast of Walkerton. It is one of the old-time country towns through which several lines of road have been projected, but so far, we believe none have been completed. We hope it will be the good fortune of a DeKalb county engineer to give them at last a real railroad. There is a great deal of good country around there to give a railroad valuable support.

A. G. Jones has been appointed postmaster at Butler, and will step into brother Stoy's shoes in a month or so when the commission of the latter expires. He will have to get a hustle on himself, if he keeps the office up to the high standard Mr. Stoy has established. In the meantime Mike Long and A. F. Pinchin howl with rage. They are whetting their knives for Harrison's scalp. It is especially hard on Pinchin, who seemed to think he had done dirty work enough for Harrison, to be taken in out of the cold.

The Coming Convention.

Let us do everything decently and in order, and make this the best and most orderly of all the good and orderly conventions we have had. Let the delegates consult freely, so as to secure the best men and then quietly vote for them. And when one secures a majority over his competitors, don't let us cheer nor be boisterous. Remember that the defeated man is a good man, a good democrat, a man who has worked for his party, as good a man perhaps as the successful one. Don't insult him by rejoicing at his failure. It might be a pleasure to you, but bitterness to him. He don't deserve it. He deserves your sympathy and respect. He should have both. Don't nominate a man who will lose votes if nominated and perhaps be defeated at the polls, though he may be your friend or live near you. We have plenty of strong men and good men for each office, men who can be elected, and we look to you to select them. Give us a good ticket and we are certain of victory.

Jackson Township Caucus.

The democrats of Jackson township met in caucus at the Center schoolhouse May 24, 1890, at 2 p. m. for the purpose of selecting delegates to the various conventions. The house was called to order by Thomas McNamara, committeeman. On motion S. J. Andress was chosen chairman and P. P. Lochner secretary. Moved and supported that we select the delegates at large first. Carried. Names announced for delegates to state convention: A. J. Shutt and Thos. McNamara. Mr. Shutt withdrew his name and Mr. McNamara was made the unanimous nominee as delegate and A. J. Shutt as alternate. For congressional delegate, B. F. Moffit was chosen unanimously and P. P. Lochner as alternate. W. S. Dancer was made the unanimous nominee as delegate to the judicial convention and S. J. Tarney alternate. J. J. Walters was made the unanimous nominee as delegate to the joint convention and S. J. Andress alternate. A motion prevailed that each school district select their own delegates to the county convention, and that districts Nos. 8 and 10 be entitled to 4 delegates, No. 6, 3 delegates, and each of the remaining districts, 2 delegates. (Names of delegates elsewhere.)

SEVEN of the supposed-to-be-sharpest and wisest lawyers in the country have made wills, passed away, and the said wills have been broken all to flinders by heirs and other lawyers. An ignorant Missouri farmer wrote his will in four lines on a slate, and it stood three lawsuits and ten lawyers.

IT was a peculiarity of the late Samuel J. Randall that he left the handling of his own financial matters to his wife. It was a common occurrence for those who were frequently at his home to hear him call to his young son Sammy to ask "mother" for 50 cents or $1 wherewith to buy postage stamps.

NEAR Boston, Ga., there lives an extensive family by the name of Groover. One peculiarity about them is their intermarriage. WILLIAM FRASER, of Ledeclune, says, in a letter to "Notes and Queries," that he conducted General Grant over the houses of Parliament and showed him the "humors" of the place. He adds the General's character for silence was certainly indicated. "He did not utter one work until I had called a cab for him in Palace Yard, when he uttered the historical words: 'Sir, I thank you.'"

A WOMAN dressed in mourning called at a Montreal police station and requested that she might be given her son's picture. When told that there was none there she answered that it was in the rogues' gallery. "He was once accused of picking pockets," said the visitor, "but was discharged. This picture was taken at that time. I have none, except one showing him as a child, and now he is dead."

A GEORGIA editor has an old Confederate shoe, manufactured for the government in 1864, just before the war ended. The sole is fully three-quarters of an inch thick, and is made of poplar wood, evidently shaped with a hatchet or drawing knife. The upper is attached to the sole with a strip of rawhide, running entirely around the shoe, the leather being held to the sole with large carpet tacks. The upper is of rough cowhide, dressed only on the inside.

THE Mexican Postoffice Department is about to adopt a novel device. A phonograph is to be placed in each principal office in the country, for the accommodation of the numerous citizens who cannot read or write. The illiterate Mexican will go to the postoffice, take his message into the receiver of the phonograph, and when the cylinder reaches its destination the person addressed will be sent for and the message will be repeated to him by another machine.

IN 1835 the Chicago postoffice was a log building at the corner of South Water and Lake streets. The postoffice was on one side of the room and a grocery and bar on the other. A Justice of the Peace held court up-stairs, one day a penny dropped from the ceiling of the postoffice to the floor. Two or three fellows rushed for it. The postmaster, John S. C. Hogan, rushed out and said: "Let it alone; don't touch it. The jury up-stairs has flipped for heads or tails to see what shall be done with the man on trial." Sure enough, the next minute the foreman came down a ladder looking for the penny.

A PITTSBURG drummer went into a Cleveland shop to talk steam engines to the proprietor. A pretty little woman entered at the same time, and the drummer, supposing it was the proprietor's daughter, stepped aside and allowed her to pass. He was amazed when she opened the conversation by inquiry after the health of his steam gauges, and he nearly had a stroke of apoplexy when she took an order for a lot of steam fixtures. She smiled on the other drummer as she tripped out and made him wish he was dead.

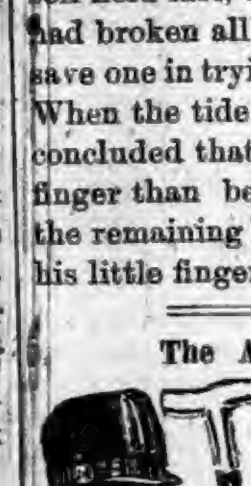
THERE is a mine just above Howardsville, Colo., that is a curiosity to tenderfeet and a source of profit to the saloon man who lives near by. It is an ice mine, and the ice is as clear and pure as that to be obtained from the purest lake. The claim is owned by Neigolds, who, in the early days, ran a tunnel through the frozen ground and struck a spring beyond. As the water flows out of the tunnel it freezes, and the tunnel is now filled nearly to the roof with the ice. It has long supplied all the saloons of Howardsville with ice, and, as it never thaws, winter or summer, the place is an objective point for curiosity seekers.

SOME experiments by Prof. Haeckel, of Marseilles, show that kola is a drug of extraordinary powers of stimulation. The colonel of a regiment at Perpignan, dosed with kola, made the ascent of the Canigou Mountain, 9,137 feet, and felt quite fresh after his climb, which lasted twelve hours. He only halted once, and for twenty minutes, and ate nothing. The One Hundred and Twenty-fourth regiment last July marched for fifteen and a half hours from Laval to Rennes, a distance of forty-five miles, and were fresh at the finish. They walked at the rate of three and three-quarters miles an hour. Kola produces a similar effect on horses.

ADMIRAL PORTER, who is just succumbing to the inevitable effects of the lapse of time, is seldom seen out of his own house, on H Street, Washington. His workshop and studio are filled with curios and souvenirs from all parts of the world, and by models and pictures of all manner of craft. Here he spends his time, pursuing his literary labors and smoking innumerable cigars; he smokes only small, light-colored cigars, and of those he uses about twenty a day, though his physician has said "he hadn't orter." He sticks to old-fashioned methods with amusing pertinacity, prefering a quill pen to the use of the stenographer and typewriter.

ANDREW LARSON, the captain of the schooner Mary Anderson, has arrived in San Francisco with one finger less than he sailed with. While fishing one day on one of the southern islands he ran across a lot of abalones on some dry rocks. In attempting to pick one off he put his little finger under the shell, when the animal closed on it, making him a prisoner. The tide began to rise, and the gallant captain still found himself held fast, notwithstanding that he had broken all the blades of his knife save one in trying to pry open the shell. When the tide went above his waist he concluded that it was better to lose a finger than be drowned, and so with the remaining blade of his knife he cut his little finger off.

The Antiquated Flirt.



THE newspapers for a long time, and justly, too, have made that libel on manhood, the dude, the subject of their shafts. Whenever the literary wag has needed a victim he has found in the dude an inspiration for his best efforts. But there is one who deserves the same or worse treatment, yet does not seem to get it—he is the antiquated flirt. We expect dudes to be harmless, and their "mashing," as they call it, is harmless, but when it comes to a bewigged, bewhiskered, fossilized old man it makes our blood boil.

Watch him now as he comes down the street, rheumatic and wheezy, and see him meet the pretty girl. It is not with the look "you are a woman, and I respect you," but "you are a woman, hence my prey." He usually stations himself on a corner or in front of some building, and there he ogles, and bobs, and leers, often making so bold as to follow. It never occurs to this relic of the past that no girl can but despise him. If she holds up her head she is sure to encounter one of these perennial studies, and the only thing for her to do is to keep her eyes cast down until the fathers and brothers of our bright Chicago girls can "corner the market" on bird-shot, and rid this city of these insults to woman-kind.

THE CONVENTIONAL MASHERS.

Mind you, I am not defending the young men, but there is a chance for them to mend their ways, while you must all agree that men in the "sere and yellow" who lapse into this state of imbecility should be wiped from the face of the earth.

EVILS OF THE TARIFF.

MASTERLY SPEECH BY MR. M'MILLIN, OF TENNESSEE.

Republicans Arraigned for Taxing Corn to Pay Bounties on Silk and Sugar—Recklessness of the McKinley Measure—Republican Campaign Boodle.

During the tariff debate in the House of Representatives, Mr. McMillin, of Tennessee, delivered the following speech:

However taxes are raised they are the money contributed by the people to meet the expenses of the Government, and hence a burden to them. It would seem when there is a surplus flowing into the Treasury there could be no diversity of opinion as to what should be done; that when the people are being taxed beyond the needs of economic government, wisdom of statesmanship and purity of patriotism would alike suggest reduction of taxation. The tariff system was adopted in time of war under pretext that it was necessary to carry on the war and only to be temporary. At the close of the war the interest-bearing public debt was $2,381,530,294. Of this more than half has been paid, and still not one jot nor tittle of war taxation imposed on the necessaries of life has passed away. The annual interest charge has been reduced from $143,781,532 to $44,715,000—less than one-third its former proportions. Still the war tariff remains and the people beg in vain for relief. Year after year promises have been made to them that they should have a reduction of taxes. But the promises have been broken as often as made, and their condition has become perennially hopeless. The promises are made for campaign purposes, to obtain power, and then broken to retain it.

A sad commentary on the evil times on which we have fallen is that it takes more bushels of corn to pay the interest now than it did in 1867, at the ruling prices. Is a quarter of a century of grinding, oppressive taxation not sufficient? Are the masses to have no relief from oppressive impositions made for the benefit of the classes? Are the agriculturists to be required to contribute forever excessive taxation that greater dividends may be paid to those engaged in other pursuits? The platforms of all political parties have admitted the justice of the demands for relief. Stump orators of all parties have made themselves hoarse hallooing for relief. The last four Presidents have urged Congress to give it. Still the cry of the oppressed taxpayer goes up in vain, and a deaf ear is turned to his piteous plea. How long can this continue? Will your broken promises not break their makers? Will your hollow hypocrisy not be exposed? The mutterings of discontent come louder and louder; the din approaches the Capitol nearer and nearer, till the farmers of the United States, after waiting with a patience which would have aroused the envy of Job, have learned that sixty millions of people are sixty millions strong. They have organized from the lakes to the Gulf. They have learned, and they will teach you that you are their servants, not their masters. They demand relief from excessive taxes and you dare not longer refuse it.

Who ever saw such a bill as that presented by the majority? It is founded on no general idea and can be justified on no general principle. It raises the duty on certain woolen goods on the principle that the tariff is no tax, and puts sugar on the free list on the plea that the tariff is a tax. Cabbages are taxed 3 cents each, and the sauerkraut made of cabbage is not taxed at all. Eggs to be eaten are taxed 5 cents a dozen. Silk worm eggs, that cannot be eaten, are admitted free. Never before has such recklessness characterized the committee in the construction of a bill. Never has such widespread consternation followed the promulgation of one. From every quarter and from almost every branch of trade comes the cry that ruin will follow its enactment into law. So great has been the clamor that changes have been made hourly since the bill was first printed and a change of nearly $30,000,000 was made after the bill had been voted on in committee the night before it was reported.

Need I give instances of these complaints? One of the greatest industries of Pennsylvania is her carpet manufacture; millions of money and thousands of her people depend upon these. Many of them say that this bill will ruin them. The duty on tobacco was raised from 35 cents a pound to $2 a pound. The cigar manufacturers of Key West and Tampa told the committee that a Johnstown flood or a fire which consumed half the town would be a blessing when compared to the evil which will come in the wake of this bill. Other cigarmakers complain. Exporters of canned goods of all kinds have represented to the committee that the increase on tin plate destroys their trade. The domestic workers of tin say they cannot stand it. The manufacturers of electric machinery and of stoves complain at the excessive and unnecessary duty for the first time placed on mica, whereby electric lighting and motive power are to be made more expensive, and transparency in the stove through which the darkness and gloom of the room are to be dispelled are to be taxed. Not content with placing the duty of 138 per cent. on common window glass and taxing sunlight in the home, the artificial light of the night is to be taxed—taxed by day and taxed by night.

The committee proposes to pay a dollar a pound out of the Treasury bounty on raw silk. It proposes to tax the farmer and raise $2,000 to be paid as bounty on each ton of raw silk produced in the United States. In other words, the Kansas farmer, who is burning corn in the absence of a market, must pay a bounty to his neighbor who produces silk of over 13,000 bushels for each ton, or 373,000 pounds of corn for every thousand pounds of silk. Then he does not own or get the silk after paying this enormous price for it.

We imported last year over 5,000,000 pounds. Gentlemen, how do you like it? How will your constituents like this new method of robbing them? Do you not fear you will reach the point where they will not longer bear their load? Do not their impoverished families touch you? Do not the mortgages hanging like a pall over their homes appeal to you and implore you to lift the heavy hand of the tax-gatherer from them, to put out the felonious fingers of unjust taxation into their pockets?

But this is not all. The committee have recommended the payment of 2 cents a pound on all the sugar produced from cane in the United States. It will take $7,500,000 annually to meet this bounty, even if there is no increase in the production. The committee has been implored not to attempt the bounty system on sugar. The sugarmakers themselves, though not getting as much protection of the tariff as is proposed by this bill, have begged the Government not to take charge of their business. They foresee that the passage of this bill means the placing of their sugar houses under the surveillance of federal officials, the employment of spies and informers under pretext of protecting the Government against fraud; indictments in Federal Courts for alleged violation of law, the employment of thousands of officials to watch sugar from cane to the coffee pot, and the myriad ills which flow from the government's intermeddling to run the citizen's business.

What are the consequences to flow from this taxation of one man to make a donation to another—this Peter-robbing, Paul-paying process? If you give a bounty on silk because it does not pay to produce silk in this country, why not also give it on jute and encourage our people to raise their own jute? Why not on figs, and produce figs at home? Why not bananas, and raise them under our own flag? The price of corn is down until in some parts of the country it has been burned for fuel. Will you extend your paternity and give the farmer a bounty on corn? The prices of beef cattle and hogs are low. Will you give a bounty on meat products? Are the producers of these to pay the bounty on silk and sugar, but receive no recognition from this paternal government? How much will it cost? What will it lead to? It will lead inevitably and quickly to corruption. The corridors of this Capitol will resound with the footfalls of interested jobbers. Committee-rooms will re-echo with the voices of those seeking the governmental largess. The request will become a demand, the demand a din. It will begin by Congress subsidizing the industries and end with the industries subsidizing Congress.

This is no new business. The Pacific Mail Steamship Line was subsidized and corruption crept in and did its cankering work. More and more was demanded, and more and more given. A lobby strong as Samson was organized, and the subsidized line kenneled its hell-hounds around the Capitol to scent out those who would sell their country and to hound down those who would not. Seven hundred thousand dollars, according to the report of an investigating committee, was used to corrupt Congress and force the bounty; like Senator Dilworthy's hundred thousand dollar appropriation in "The Gilded Age," it "took it all to get it through Congress." The bounty business went from bad to worse till the people, tired of its injustice and disgusted with the corrupt method of obtaining it, returned to the sound principle of "equal rights to all, exclusive privileges to none."

I turn to the majority of the Ways and Means Committee and ask them what relief do they propose for the frightful ills that afflict the land? You find the farmer burning his corn. Have you stopped the conflagration? You find the fires extinguished in many Northern furnaces. Have you rekindled them? You find the farmers mortgaged to death; you hear the rueful rap of the auctioneer's hammer making desolate their homes, and still you go madly on taxing to relieve against taxation. You have seen city after city and State after State since President Harrison's election leave the Republican ranks and join the party founded by Jefferson, which took charge of this Government ninety years ago, and whose motto was then, as now, equal laws, economic government, and just taxation. What relief do you propose for the woolen manufacturers now on the verge of ruin? You add an additional tax to the wool they consume.

The committee, not content with the imposition of duties on things produced in this country under pretext of protecting American labor, goes a vast stride further, and more than doubles the tax on tin plate. Not a ton of it is made here; not a laborer would be thrown out of employment by admitting it free of duty. At 1 cent a pound it yielded last year $7,279,459 revenue. The committee proposes, after the next election, to make the duty 2.15 cents a pound instead of 1 cent. On the present basis of importations, this would yield $15,650,848. The laborer living in the city is not able to cover his cottage with enduring copper or fine slate. He has to cover it with tin. His wife takes canned goods from tin cans and cooks them in tin stove vessels. He cannot spare the time from work to return home at noon and eat his bread with wife and little ones; his dinner is taken to furnace or factory in a tin pail. Yet he is to have the cost of his roof, his supplies and his pail doubled by this tax. Representatives of vast canning industries, canners of fish, fruit, vegetables and oysters, have come before the committee and begged that this suicidal step be not taken, but to no purpose. Fat was fried out of certain manufacturers two years ago for campaign purposes; it has to be returned now 115 fold. Votes were bought then in blocks of five. Some of those who put up the "boodle" to pay for the "blocks" have been rewarded with Cabinet or other fat offices. Now let the world see, gentlemen of the majority, how you reward others who helped give you this temporal power—a power which at the same time was your personal good luck and your country's misfortune.

GROVER TO FARMERS.

MR. CLEVELAND ON THE PRINCIPLES OF THE ALLIANCE.

He Sees Nothing in Them that Cannot Be Fully Indorsed by Any Man Who Loves His Country—In Touching on the Tariff Questions He Points Out the Unequal Burdens Borne by the Agriculturists.

A few weeks ago J. A. Hill, Corresponding Secretary of Oak Grove Lodge, No. 22, Farmers' Alliance, near Steubenville, Ohio, wrote to ex-President Cleveland, inclosing a copy of the declaration of purposes of the alliance and asking for Mr. Cleveland's views thereon. The declaration of purposes is as follows:

Profoundly impressed that we, the Farmers' Alliance, united by the strong and faithful ties of financial and home interests, should set forth our declaration of intentions; we therefore resolve—

To strive to secure the establishment of right and justice to ourselves and our posterity.

To labor for the education of the agricultural classes in the science of economical government in a strictly non-partisan spirit.

To indorse the motto "In Things Essential, Unity; in All Things, Charity."

To secure the purity of the elective franchise and to induce all voters to intelligently exercise it for the enactment and execution of laws which will express the most advanced public sentiment upon all questions involving the interests of laborers and farmers.

To develop a better state, mentally, morally, socially, and financially.

To constantly strive to secure entire harmony and good-will among all mankind and brotherly love among ourselves.

To suppress personal, local, sectional, and national prejudices, and all unhealthful rivalry and selfish ambition.

To assuage the sufferings of brothers and sisters, bury the dead, care for the widows, and educate the orphans; to exercise charity toward offenders; to construe words and purposes in their most favorable light, granting honesty of purpose and good intentions to others, and to protect the principles of the Alliance unto death.

Mr. Cleveland's reply was:

I have received your letter, accompanied by a copy of the declaration of principles of the Farmers' Alliance. I see nothing in this declaration that cannot be fully indorsed by any man who loves his country, who believes that the object of our Government should be the freedom, prosperity, and happiness of all our people, and who believes that justice and fairness to all are necessary conditions to its useful administration.

It has always seemed to me that the farmers of the country were especially interested in an equitable adjustment of our tariff system. The indifference they have shown to that question and the ease with which they have been led away from a sober consideration of their needs and their rights as related to this subject have excited my surprise.

Struggle as they may, our farmers must continue to be purchasers and consumers of numberless things enhanced in cost by tariff regulations. Surely they have the right to insist that this cost shall not be increased for the purpose of collecting unnecessary revenue or to give undue advantage to domestic manufacturers. The plea that infant industries need the protection which impoverishes the farmer and consumer is, in view of our national advantages and the skill and ingenuity of our people, a hollow pretext.

Struggle as they may, our farmers cannot escape the conditions which fix the prices of what they produce according to the rates which prevail in foreign markets flooded with the competition of countries enjoying a freer exchange of trade than we. The plausible presentation of the blessings of a home market should not deceive our oppressed and impoverished agriculturists. There is no market for them which does not take its instructions from the seaboard, and the seaboard transmits the word of the foreign markets.

Because my conviction that there should be a modification of our tariff laws arose principally from an appreciation of the wants of the vast army of consumers, comprising our farmers, our artisans, and our workingmen, and because their condition has led me to protest against present impositions, I am especially glad to see these sections of my fellow-countrymen arousing themselves to the importance of tariff reform. Yours very truly,

GROVER CLEVELAND.

FORCE AT THE POLLS.

What the Passage of the Rowell Election Bill Means to the Southern States.

[Washington special.]

A number of gentlemen who have emerged from ambush since the incoming of the Harrison administration met last week and discussed the necessity of having United States troops at the polls. "Do you know what the Rowell election bill means in the South?" asked a distinguished representative from that section. It means this: Ignorant and vicious negroes will be appointed to hold elections, count votes, and canvass them, and they will be aided at the polls with other ignorant and brutal negroes armed with the protection of the law as deputy United States marshals. These will virtually hold the polls and obstruct voting, and will you wonder if serious emeutes shall occur under such circumstances? When Mr. Reed said at Pittsburg substantially that he had now enlisted under the bloody shirt he meant to convey to the country the idea that force was necessary to control elections in the South. He looks for bloodshed at the fall elections if these election laws should be passed, and proposes to make them the issue of the campaign in 1892. We all supposed that when Hayes withdrew the bayonets from the halls of the State Legislatures that phase of reconstruction was over for all time, and the South took a new step forward in moral and material progress. The aim of the conspirators now is to reintroduce the army as a feature of elections, and to keep the South stirred up to furnish themes for the stump in the North. I should regard the successful carrying out of this programme as a great blow to Southern industries, and it would injure the North in a corresponding degree, for what hurts one section is bound to injure every other in some degree. Do I think the Federal election bills will pass? Yes. But I have hopes that the Democrats will carry the next House in spite of them, and that will upset the execution of the Republican programme for 1892."

DESERTS THE GRAND OLD PARTY.

A Leading Indiana Republican Unable to Support War Taxes Any Longer.

[Jeffersonville (Ind.) special.]

The expression of views radically opposed to Republican tariff doctrines by John Overmeyer, of North Vernon, one of the most prominent Republicans in the State, once Speaker of the House and Chairman of the State Central Committee, has created a profound sensation. When asked whether he proposed joining the Democracy Mr. Overmeyer said:

"I have not thought of the consequences of my utterances, and care not what they label me. I shall use all my energies to overthrow the false system of high tariff. I shall say what I consider right, hurt whom it may, and shall support the party advocating revenue tariff in State and national contests with all my power. I have been stumping and working since 1866, and up to recent years Republican speakers would as soon have preached infant baptism as a high tariff. In the last campaign I supported the candidate, but not the platform."

He was a delegate to the Chicago convention, and is a very able man, of the highest integrity, whose influence is felt throughout the State.

A Vermont Republican Astonished.

The long-continued silence of Senator Matthew S. Quay, of Pennsylvania, to the astounding charges of corruption made by the New York World, substantiated by the New York Evening Post, and brought before the House of Representatives by Gen. Spinola, of New York City, is certainly remarkable. The indictment covers bribery and theft extending over a long period of years, the gravest charge being that Senator Quay took $260,000 from the State Treasury of Pennsylvania, which he lost in speculation. As he was not State Treasurer at the time this is virtually a charge that he stole that amount. Mr. Quay as Chairman of the Republican National Committee occupies a position of extraordinary power and responsibility in that party, which is daily receiving injuries from his silence. Both President Harrison and Secretary Blaine are much worried over the matter and desire an explanation. Let Senator Quay at least give his friends the privilege of hearing from him a denial of the truth of the charges. Contemptuous silence in such a case is ominous, and will be taken by ordinarily honest men as a confession of guilt.—St. Johnsbury (Vt.) Caledonian (Rep.).

At Home and Abroad.

It has frequently been asserted and as often denied that our protected manufacturers sell their goods abroad at lower prices than are charged to home consumers. The Cleveland Plain Dealer has found a recent issue of the Engineering and Mining Journal which definitely settles the point. In this are thirty-nine columns of advertisements in which American manufacturers offer "discounts for export only."

Here are some of the figures:

Articles.	Per cent. discount.		Per cent. discount.
Planes	40	Whiffletrees	45
Rakes	70	Vises	50
Drills	30	Washtubs	25
Scythes	40	Lawn-mowers	60
Hatchets	50	Scroll-saws	25
Table knives	25	Water-motors	40
Shears	60	Nails	60
Feed-cutters	30	Post-hole diggers	40
Grinding-mills	25	Oil stoves	30
Barn-door hangers	50	Farm pumps	70
Wrenches	55	Wood-screws	50
Screw-drivers	70	Hammers	60
Picks	60	Windmills	40

A semi-monthly pamphlet issued by the Tariff-Reform Club of New York contains other information bearing on the same point. There are two papers in New York that are devoted exclusively to the export trade in American manufactures. One is called the American Mail and Export Journal and the other the Australasian and South American. Their chief department is a table of quotations which gives the lowest prices at which articles can be bought in small quantities by foreigners. For large quantities "special" rates are frequently advertised and generally given. From the information gathered from these sources the following comparative table is compiled:

	At Home.	Abroad.
Wheel hoe, cultivator, rake and plow	$ 11.00	$ 8.40
All-steel horse hoe and cultivator, with wheel	8.00	6.75
All-steel plain cultivator, with wheel	7.20	4.50
Potato digger	8.00	6.75
Shovels, cast steel, round point, No. 2, per dozen	9.60	8.21
Shovels, No. 3	10.00	8.55
Flat-bottom kettles	1.40	.85
Fiber ware, water coolers, and filters, per dozen	144.00	115.20
Typewriters	100.00	60.00
Sewing machines (retail)	45.00	32.00

These are only a few of the comparative prices given, but they suffice to illustrate the point. With these discounts as a guide it is easy to understand the affection which the protected manufacturers entertain for "a home market."

But how about the farmers? Can they compete with cheap foreign labor and at the same time pay so much more for their agricultural implements?—Chicago News.

The Man in the Bushes.

There were eight of us sitting on some cotton bales at a little railroad station in South Carolina waiting for a train which wasn't expected for nearly an hour. Right opposite us was a strip of forest, and presently we saw a man bend aside a bush and survey us in a cautious manner. Every one saw him, and yet no one offered any explanation of his presence until he had stood there for three or four minutes. Then a woman from Arkansas laid aside her snuff stick and observed:

"Really, now, if I was home I should reckon that feller meant shute, and I should hurry to make myself skass."

"He can't want to shoot none of us," replied one of the men.

"Guess I'll make shore of that by wakin' him up," said a Georgian, as he got out his revolver. Before he could fire there was a report of a gun behind us, followed by a yell, and a native climbed over the bales, gun in hand, and started to cross the double tracks. He was not yet over the first when there was a shot from the bushes, and the man in front of us spun around, like a top, dropped his gun, and fell upon the rails. Then, before any of us had moved, a second native came out of the bushes with a smoking gun in his hand, and as he bent over the figure on the ground he laughed.

"Ha! ha! ha! I jist dropped at yer fire so as to git the drop on you! I guess you won't bother me no mo'."

When he had gone we went to the aid of the other. As we pulled him off the track he struggled up, reached for his gun, and looked around, and said: "Much obleeged, but tain't nothin'. The onery skunk has just left a bullet in my shoulder—that's all. I thought I had a bead on him, but he drapped too quick fur me. Any of you all got any terbacker: Thanks. I reckon I'll go home and hev the old woman try and pick this lead out with a darning needle."—New York Sun.

Beautiful Sort of a Layout.

It was generally understood that the McKinley bill was a very beautiful sort of a layout. And so it is. But the force of the peculiar style of beauty thereof has not yet been realized to the full. One by one the charming results of the McKinley bantam heave in sight. The latest is set forth in last night's dispatches from London. It is that British exhibits may be kept away from the World's Fair by this bill. A member of the Cabinet told the House of Commons that if the bill became a law British manufacturers would probably to a great extent be deterred from sending exhibits over if the tariff precluded profitable sales in America. It cannot be questioned that the enactment of this bill would put us in bad odor abroad, as well as going far toward compassing our undoing at home. But the measure is not a law yet. It never will be if a few Republicans in Congress with a little independence only step to the front at the proper time. Will they?—St. Paul Pioneer-Press (Rep.).

Ignorance Is Expensive.

In the State of Indiana alone not less than ten millions of dollars in actual cash has been expended in sinking gas wells where any good geologist would have said there was no possible prospect of finding gas. Rascally diggers and borers are always ready to sink wells for anybody anywhere. The same type of ignorance which sinks money in "mines" and electric devices naturally bores for gas, invests in lottery tickets, acts upon pointers in "wheat" and stocks. As the herds of the hills fatten upon green grass, so wise men and "sharp" men live and thrive in the vast domain of ignorance.

TAILOR MARX, of New York, has vigorously disputed the slander that a tailor is the ninth part of a man and will run at the sight of a snail's horns. He caught a burglar climbing through his shop window the other night and shot him dead. All the superstitions of the past are being rudely shattered in those practical days.

You can not measure a man's daily walk by the thickness of his carpet.

NERVOUS DISEASES.

As a cure for every class of Nervous Diseases, no remedy has been able to compare with the Nervine Tonic, which is very pleasant and harmless in all its effects upon the youngest child or the oldest and most delicate individual. Nine-tenths of all the ailments to which the human family is heir, are dependent on nervous exhaustion and impaired digestion. When there is an insufficient supply of nerve food in the blood, a general state of debility of the brain, spinal marrow and nerves is the result. Starved nerves, like starved muscles, become strong when the right kind of food is supplied, and a thousand weaknesses and ailments disappear as the nerves recover. As the nervous system must supply all the power by which the vital forces of the body are carried on, it is the first to suffer for want of perfect nutrition. Ordinary food does not contain a sufficient quantity of the kind of nutriment necessary to repair the wear our present mode of living and labor imposes upon the nerves. For this reason it becomes necessary that a nerve food be supplied. This recent production of the South American Continent has been found, by analysis, to contain the essential elements out of which nerve tissue is formed. This accounts for its magic power to cure all forms of nervous derangements.

CRAWFORDSVILLE, IND., Aug. 20, '86.
To the Great South American Medicine Co.:
DEAR GENTS:—I desire to say to you that I have suffered for many years with a very serious disease of the stomach and nerves. I tried every medicine I could hear of but nothing done me any appreciable good until I was advised to try your Great South American Nervine Tonic and Stomach and Liver Cure, and since using several bottles of it I must say that I am surprised at its wonderful powers to cure the stomach and general nervous system. If every-one knew the value of this remedy as I do, you would not be able to supply the demand.
J. A. HARDEE,
Ex-Treas. Montgomery Co.

Mr. Solomon Bond, a member of the Society of Friends, of Darlington, Ind., says: "I have used twelve bottles of The Great South American Nervine Tonic and Stomach and Liver Cure, and I consider that every bottle did for me one hundred dollars worth of good, because I have not had a good night's sleep for twenty years on account of irritation, pain, horrible dreams, and general nervous prostration, which has been caused by chronic indigestion and dyspepsia of the stomach and by a broken down condition of my nervous system. But now I can lie down and sleep all night as sweetly as a baby, and I feel like a sound man. I do not think there has ever been a medicine introduced into this country which will at all compare with this Nervine Tonic as a cure for the stomach."

A SWORN CURE FOR ST. VITUS'S DANCE OR CHOREA.

CRAWFORDSVILLE, IND., May 19, 1886.
My daughter, twelve years old, had been afflicted for several months with Chorea or St. Vitus's Dance. She was reduced to a skeleton, could not walk, could not talk, could not swallow anything but milk. I had to handle her like an infant. Doctor and neighbors gave her up. I commenced giving her the South American Nervine Tonic; the effects were very surprising. In three days she was rid of the nervousness, and rapidly improved. Four bottles cured her completely. I think the South American Nervine the grandest remedy ever discovered, and would recommend it to every-one.

My daughter, eleven years old, was severely afflicted with St. Vitus's Dance or Chorea. We gave her three and one-half bottles of South American Nervine and she is completely restored. I believe it will cure every case of St. Vitus's Dance. I have kept it in my family for two years, and am sure it is the greatest remedy in the world for Indigestion and Dyspepsia, all forms of Nervous Disorders and Failing Health from whatever cause.

INDIGESTION AND DYSPEPSIA.
The Great South American Nervine Tonic

Which we now offer you, is the only absolutely unfailing remedy ever discovered for the cure of Indigestion, Dyspepsia, and the vast train of symptoms and horrors which are the result of disease and debility of the human stomach. No person can afford to pass by this jewel of incalculable value who is affected by disease of the Stomach, because the experience and testimony of thousands go to prove that this is the ONE and ONLY ONE great cure in the world for this universal destroyer. There is no case of unmalignant disease of the stomach which can resist the wonderful curative powers of the South American Nervine Tonic.

Harriet E. Hall, of Waynetown, Ind., says: "I owe my life to The Great South American Nervine. I had been in bed for five months from the effects of an exhausted Stomach, Indigestion, Nervous Prostration and a general shattered condition of my whole system. Had given up all hopes of getting well. Had tried three doctors with no relief. The first bottle of the Nervine Tonic improved me so much that I was able to walk about, and a few bottles cured me entirely. I believe it the best medicine in the world. I can not recommend it too highly."

Mrs. M. Russell, Sugar Creek Valley, Ind., writes: "I have used several bottles of The South American Nervine Tonic, and will say I consider it the best medicine in the world. I believe it saved the lives of two of my children. They were down and nothing appeared to do them any good until I procured this remedy. It was very surprising how rapidly they both improved on its use. I recommend the medicine to all my neighbors.

Mrs. Ella A. Bratton, of New Ross, Indiana, says: "I can not express how much I owe to the Nervine Tonic. My system was completely shattered, appetite gone, was coughing and spitting up blood; am sure I was in the first stages of consumption, an inheritance handed down through several generations. I began taking the Nervine Tonic and continued its use for about six months, and am entirely cured. It is the grandest remedy for nerves, stomach and lungs I have ever seen.

Ed. J. Brown, Druggist, of Edina, Mo., writes: "My health had been very poor for years, was coughing severely. I only weighed 110 pounds when I commenced using South American Nervine. I have used two bottles and now weigh 130 pounds, and am much stronger and better than have been for five years. Am sure would not have lived through the Winter had I not secured this remedy. My customers see what it has done for me and buy it eagerly. It gives great satisfaction."

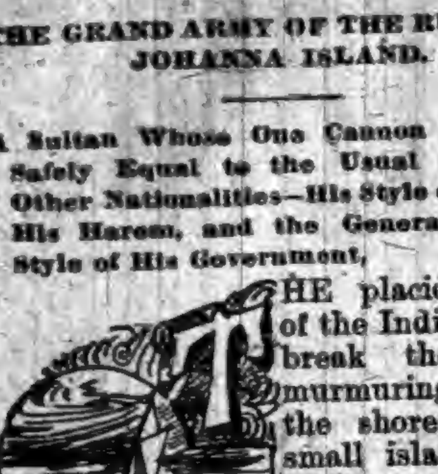
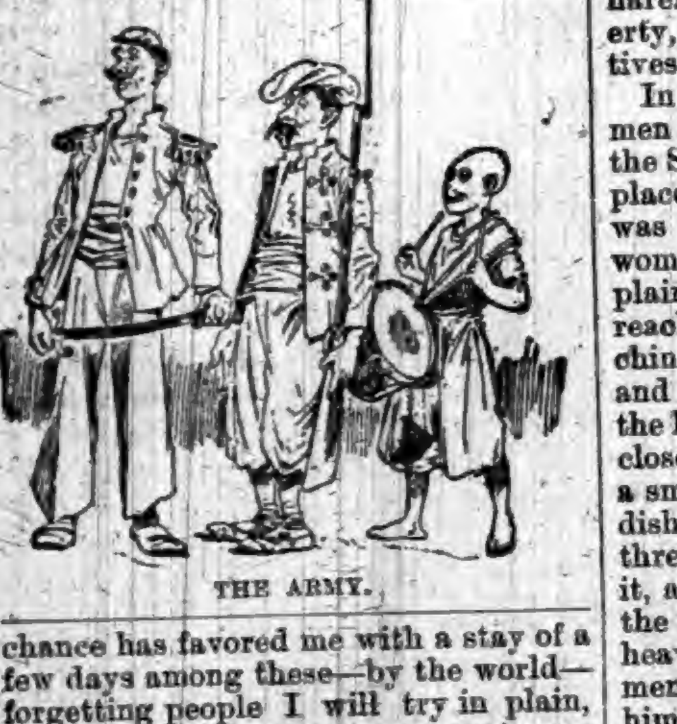
APING GREAT POWER.

THE GRAND ARMY OF THE RULER OF JOHANNA ISLAND.

A Sultan Whose One Cannon Was Not Safely Equal to the Usual Salute to Other Nationalities—His Style of Justice, His Harem, and the Generally Queer Style of His Government.



THE placid waters of the Indian Ocean break their slow murmurings upon the shores of the small islands composing a group commonly called the Comoros; situated to the north of Madagascar, they are reached in a southeasterly direction from the Gulf of Aden; lying, as they do, away from any direct route traversed by the commerce-hunting or pleasure-seeking hosts of eastern or western hemispheres, it seldom falls to the lot of the traveler to visit such out-of-the-way communities, but as chance has favored me with a stay of a few days among these—by the world—forgetting people I will try in plain, unvarnished language to convey to you the impression yet perfectly inscribed upon the tablets of my memory.

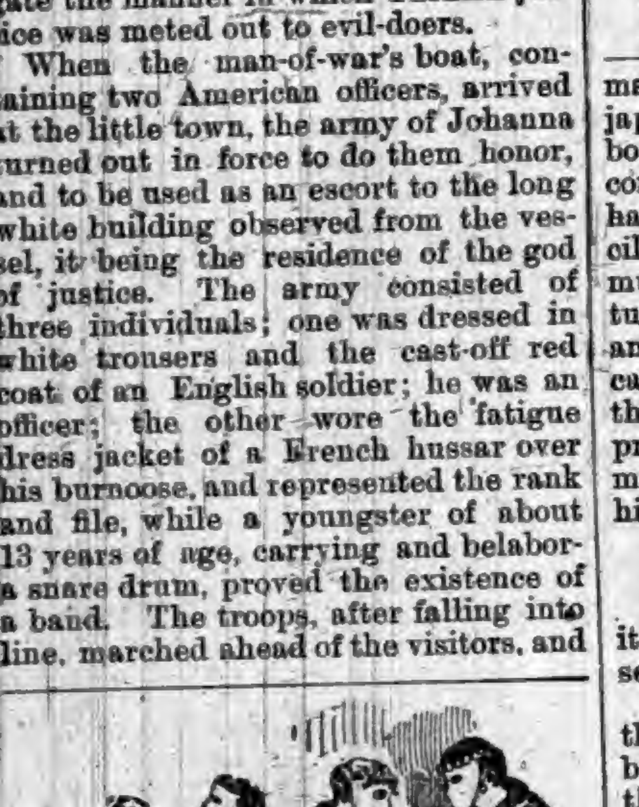


THE ARMY.

Before our salute to the Turkish flag had been fired we observed a boat leaving the landing of a little town in front of which we had dropped our anchor, and when the courtesy had been paid, a dapper little gentleman, dressed like a Turk and speaking the French language fluently, stepped on the quarter-deck and in elegant phrases bade us welcome to Johanna. He informed the captain that our vessel was the first one in thirty years that had displayed the American flag there.

After the official part of his visit was so satisfactorily settled, the visitor said his return to shore was necessary, as he had to settle a very complicated case between a Zanzibar slave-dealer and a Johanna merchant. Anxious to be present at a trial of this description, a delicate hint was dropped, which brought forth the invitation to investigate the manner in which Turkish justice was meted out to evil-doers.

When the man-of-war's boat, containing two American officers, arrived at the little town, the army of Johanna turned out in force to do them honor, and to be used as an escort to the long white building observed from the vessel, it being the residence of the god of justice. The army consisted of three individuals; one was dressed in white trousers and the cast-off red coat of an English soldier; he was an officer; the other wore the fatigue dress jacket of a French hussar over his burnoose, and represented the rank and file, while a youngster of about 13 years of age, carrying and belaboring a snare drum, proved the existence of a band. The troops, after falling into line, marched ahead of the visitors, and in this impressive manner we arrived at the Kadi's court, a long, two-story building divided into five apartments. The last room was the city prison, and on our visit occupied by a portion of the slave cargo brought to the island by the Zanzibar dealer, whose conduct was to be investigated that day.



THE SULTAN'S TOILET.

Upon our arrival the Kadi invited us in, and two chairs being placed upon the platform, the Americans had an opportunity seldom offered visitors to that court.

He flatly refused to answer a question, and the Kadi took opportunity to give the Americans an insight into the resources of his court. A wave of the judge's hand brought two burly minions of the law to the side of his mulish customer, and in a few moments his body was on the floor, face downward, his bare feet were brought soles upward, and a long stick about an inch in diameter came in contact with those soles in such a peremptory manner that the third blow proved him a soloist of no mean capacity. He howled for mercy in such agonizing tones that, Arab as he was, we could understand him by the cadence of his vocalism. At the fourteenth blow justice was satisfied, and the culprit's tongue loosened, but his feet, looking like boxing-gloves of large dimensions, had been made useless, as he could neither stand nor walk, and had to sit on the floor while giving his testimony. His obstinacy ruined his case, and the cargo of the slave dhow, over which the trouble began, was confiscated in behalf of the Johanna Government.

The next day half a dozen officers gorgeous in gold lace and brass buttons were pulled on shore and received by the whole army and most of the populace. We were received by the Prime Minister and ushered into a large room elegantly carpeted, and with walls lined with luxurious divans, upon which we took our places. One end of the room was curtained by a heavy Persian portiere, which was pushed aside and in walked the Sultan. He was one of the most magnificently built human beings ever gazed upon—over six feet high. He conversed fluently in French, and, after partaking of a light repast, the Americans returned to the vessel, with the exception of the pair whose ability to speak the Sultan's favorite tongue procured a pressing invitation to stay on shore that day. The dignity of the Sultan relaxed considerably after the higher officials had departed and our social visit was very entertaining. The ruler informed us that he was of the Mohammedan faith, had been governing the island for three years, had previously visited Paris and the large cities of Europe, disliked the turmoil and confusion of those cities, and was perfectly contented in Johanna.

The people were Mohammedans, but not of the orthodox kind; the Sultan and his prominent subjects indulged in grape-juice to some extent, and the strict Mussulman would find a very liberal community there. Missionaries had never as yet tried to convert any one on the isle, and the city prison was used that day for the first time in seventeen years. The Sultan had two wives, and followed King Solomon's example to some extent by possessing twenty-two concubines, but the rules of the harem in Johanna are not in all respects like those in vogue in Constantinople. The actual wives of the ruler were not allowed to be in the presence of any man but their husband. After marriage even their father is excluded, so the minister explained, his daughter being one of the wives of the Sultan, but the other ladies of the harem were allowed considerable liberty, receiving visits from their relatives of both sexes.

In a little while in marched two women carrying the fresh overdress of the Sultan and a silver dish, which was placed in the center of the room. It was impossible to tell whether those women were old or young, comely or plain, as they wore thin leather masks reaching from the eyebrows to the chin and having holes for nose, eyes, and ears, with a clasp on the back of the head, which caused them to fit very closely. Two others entered carrying a small dish with live coals; the silver dish was placed upon a tripod about three inches high, the fire emptied into it, and a handful of herbs thrown on the fire, when a light smoke, having a heavy rose perfume, filled the apartment. The Sultan arose, and, placing himself over the little tripod, was disrobed of all but a pair of white silk trousers. His body—from the waist up—was rubbed with beautiful ivory brushes. After receiving a vigorous dose he was robed in a white silken burnoose, and a chair placed before him, so as to enable him to sit down. When seated the portiers was pushed aside and four other women, similarly masked, entered, bearing a large japanned tray, filled with little boxes, bottles, and brushes. Two of the newcomers attended to the long, curly hair of the master, and another penciled his eyebrows and arranged his mustache. Then the building of his turban was commenced—every turn and fold being laid with a nicety that can not be described. And, at last, the Sultan was ready for evening prayer. It had only taken sixty-seven minutes and half a dozen women to fix him up.

Cornfield Philosophy.

The egg that does not hatch when it has a chance will never be given the second trial.

The man who will acknowledge that he cannot withstand temptation but will surely fall, is usually anxious that temptation should come. He is ever ready to fall.

The crow does not pull up the corn that does not sprout.

A cat would doubtless make as good stew as a rabit if one did not know the difference.

It is not the wheat that stands thickest on the ground that yields the best crop.

Some men frequently get too sick to work, so they quit and go to the circus.

Sunday is not a day of rest unless it is made so.

The cow does not let you milk her for your good, but simply because it helps her out of a dilemma.

The wormy apple ripens first, and it is also the first to fall when the wind shakes the tree.

The man who would catch a fish must watch and be ready to jerk when his game nibbles. Otherwise he will loose his bait and get no fish.

The man who is too greedy to examine a peach before eating it must be prepared to eat worms occasionally.

The flowers that bloom in the spring are not the same ones that bloom in the fall.

Wheat, rye, oats, and barley will grow all right in the same field, but the trouble occurs when you want to harvest them. It is the same with the man who boasts of his ability to do several things at once.

The rose is indeed beautiful, but the wise housekeeper will have a corner in the garden sacred to catnip, sage, and hoarhound.—Chicago Ledger.

Conquered Himself.

"So you wish to learn Christian science," said a teacher of that "doctrine" to a lank fellow that had applied for tuition.

"Yes, sir. What are your terms?"

"Five dollars for three lessons."

"All right. I'll take the first lesson now."

The teacher then began to lay down the principles of the science.

"You must first learn," said he, "to conquer yourself."

"All right," the pupil replied.

"You must exterminate every human desire; must give yourself up to the ruling of your spirit instead of yielding to a single impulse of the body."

"All right," the student agreed.

"Well," the teacher one day remarked when the term had been completed, "I think that you are now prepared to graduate with honors."

"All right; much obliged."

"But have you not forgotten something?" the teacher asked when the student had started to go out.

"No; reckon not."

"Yes; you have forgotten to pay me the five dollars."

"Oh, you see, I had a strong desire to pay you—a very strong desire of the flesh, as it were, but have succeeded in conquering all that sort of thing. So long."

PIT AND POINT.

A TWO-FOOT rule—Stand on your own pins.

ANCIENT order of masons—"More Mort!"

"SEE, lowly at thy feet I lie!" sings a poet. We have no doubt he does. Men usually do when it comes to that point.

"NEVER strike a man below the belt is my motto." "You don't live up to it. You struck me on the pocket the other day."

SICK Woman—I'm so apprehensive dear Doctor, about being buried alive. Doctor—You shan't be, if I can prevent it.

"SO THE plumber's wife is getting a divorce from her husband?" "Yes." "What's the matter?" "She's going to marry the iceman."

MRS. CRANDELL (reading the paper)—Here's an account of a man being shot through the window. Mr. Crandell—A painful wound, doubtless.

HOSTESS—So you lived for some time in Breezy City, Kansas. Did you do much traveling through that State? Guest—Oh, yes, whenever the winds are high.

CRIMSONBEAK (making a night of it)—D'you (hic) lodge transhens (hic) here? Landlady—Yes, but we're all full to-night. Crimsonbeak—Zash all ri', so'm I.

NEVER too late to mend: "Are these shoes too far gone to repair?" "No, indeed. I think a new pair of uppers, with soles and heels, will make 'em all right. The laces are good."

MRS. MORIARTY—Oh, Moike, Moike, can't you spake to me? Mr. Moriarty—It's dead I am, darlint. I'm kilt entirely. Mrs. Moriarty—And it's right glad I am to hear you say that same.

CENSUS Taker—How many male members are there in your family? Kentucky Housewife—Wall, there was six this mornin'; but pap and th' boys went out arter breakfas' for a scrap with th' Mugginses, and I don't know how many there is now.

"JOHNNY," he whispered to her little brother, "did your sister get a note from me last night? It was written on pink paper." "I think she must have got it," said Johnny, "'cause when she came down to breakfast this morning her hair was done up pink curl-papers."

MRS. FRANK—I never degrade myself by back-biting and gossiping. If I tried to take away other people's characters, I should be rightly served if other people tried to take away mine. Mr. Flatterer—Nay, nay, Mrs. Frank; the most inveterate scandal-monger would find it impossible to do that!

"HOW FAR," asked the leading juvenile in the amateur play, "shall I carry this love-scene into the realms of realism?" "What do you mean?" asked the ladies who were acting as stage managers. "Shall I entwine the heroine's waist?" asked the leading juvenile. "Oh, goodness! no!" "But you know I've got a cork arm." "Oh, that's so. Then I think I'd put it round her waist. It will look more life-like."

BOTH SIDES SIMULTANEOUSLY.

Throw away the old-time saddle
That the women used to ride.
Now on equines they'll skedaddle,
Part of them on either side.

Soon their prancing steeds bestriding—
So their leader now asserts—
All the women will be riding
Clad in bifurcated skirts.

Shades of grandpas and grandmothers!
Did they ever dream we'd see
Women riding like their brothers—
Both sides simultaneously?

Tact in Managing the Boys.

A quaint story is told about Master Tommy Anderson, an old-time pedagogue. Once he taught a school in Farmington, where the boys had driven out several teachers. He found that the chief conspirator was a good-looking grown-up girl, saucy and proud. The schoolmaster wore his hair in a cue, as was the fashion in those days. When he was "doing a sum," with his head down, she tossed his cue back and forth as if it were a toy, much to the amusement of the scholars. Uncle Tommy said nothing but kept up quite a thinking. He knew if he called out the guilty girl and punished her, the big boys would rise and carry him out. So he adopted unusual tactics in conducting his campaign. He found a lot of long hair hanging up in a barn. From this he selected and smoothed out a bunch resembling a cue, and tied it up nicely with a ribbon. Taking this to the school-room early the next morning, he suspended it from the peg where the girl always hung her cloak and hood; then he commenced to set copies as usual. When she came in and spied the curious contrivance she looked surprised and puzzled. Quoth Master Tommy, in a mild tone of voice:

"Miss, I have brought that bunch of hair for you to use as a plaything instead of my cue."

The proud-spirited girl was humiliated before the whole school, and could not help crying. Uncle Tommy had won the victory by stratagem rather than by force of arms, and had no further difficulty with his scholars.—Farmington (Me.) Chronicle.

Hunting a Cobweb.

"Did I ever tell you how I had a party of six men looking for a single cobweb?" said a civil engineer, as he paused for a moment to light a cigar. "For two days I had been looking for a section line. There was nothing to indicate the line except a few posts which had been sunk into the earth and which, on account of the rapid growth of underbrush, were not easy to find. I had made my calculations correctly and knew the line was somewhere around. On the second day one of the men called out, 'I've found it.' Sure enough, there was one of the posts. Well, I set up my transit on the line and was about to proceed to work when a branch of a tree broke and struck the transit. I picked it up and, to my consternation, found that one of the cobwebs that intersect in the telescope had been broken by the shock. What to do I did not know. We were miles from any place where I might have the telescope repaired and I determined to try and fix it myself. So I told the boys to look around the woods and find a cobweb. For an hour they hunted without success. There had been a heavy rain the night before and I suppose nearly all the cobwebs had been swept away. Then I began looking around myself and at last I espied a long bit of web on a branch just discernible by the drops of dew that clung to it. I carefully wound it on a bit of wood and retraced my steps. It was a delicate matter, taking the telescope apart and placing the web within the cylinder, but I managed to accomplish it. Would not a piece of thread have answered the purpose? Why, a piece of thread in the telescope would have looked as large as my finger."

How They Saluted Webster.

"Whenever I hear a cannon firing a salute on holiday or occasion of rejoicing," said Judge Krum, "I am reminded of the story my father was wont to tell of how Daniel Webster was welcomed to the city of Alton in 1837. The great orator came to St. Louis and was received with much pomp and ceremony. The citizens had an old brass six-pounder, with which they fired a salute on the levee when the steamer bearing Webster arrived. My father, John M. Krum, was then Mayor of Alton, and he came to St. Louis with a committee of citizens to invite the statesman to favor Alton with a visit. He consented, and arrangements were made to give him a fitting welcome.

"Alton did not possess a cannon, but to meet this emergency my father had, with much prudent care and forethought, had a large hole drilled in the bluff on the bank of the Mississippi, into which four kegs of powder were poured and well tamped. When the steamboat with the great orator and a distinguished party on board arrived at the Alton wharf a man stationed on the bluff fired the fuse and a tremendous explosion followed, making a noise that could be heard many miles and dislodging many tons of rock and earth. This was the heaviest and biggest gun fired off in honor of Daniel Webster on his whole Western tour."—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

A Dangerous Precedent.

John P. Smith, the veteran manager, is one of the oldest and most popular members of the Elks of New York City, of which association he was at one time the presiding officer. At one of the lodge meetings not long ago, the question was brought up of donating his accumulated dues to a member of the lodge who was in an asylum being treated for softening of the brain. Some spoke in favor of the proposition and it was likely to be carried, until John P. got on his feet.

"Mr. President," said he, in a tone of the utmost gravity, "it seems to me that you are establishing a dangerous and destructive precedent."

"In what way?" asked a brother Elk.

"Why, if we are going to donate dues to all members of this society who are suffering from softening of the brain, we might as well shut up the lodge rooms."

This sally brought a big laugh and the proposition failed to carry.—Texas Siftings.

Protect the System from Malaria.

It is possible to do this even in regions of country where miasma is most rife, and where the periodic fevers which it causes assume their most formidable types. The immense popularity of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters is very largely attributable to the fact of its efficacy as a remedy for chills and fever, bilious remittents, and as a preventive of the various forms of malarial disease. In those portions of the West and South where complaints of this nature prevail, and in the tropics, it is particularly esteemed for the protective influence which it exerts, and it has been very widely adopted as a substitute for the dangerous and comparatively ineffective alkaloid, sulphate of quinine. Physicians have not been among the last to concede its merits, and the emphatic professional indorsements which it has received have added to the reputation it has obtained at home and abroad.

The Fishes' Dinner Bell.

Not far from Berlin is Charlottenburg, where there is a great palace with splendid garden. The German fathers and mothers take their little ones to see a wonderful sight in these gardens, through which winds the River Spree. Now, in this river is a quantity of carp, and it is to see them fed and feed them, that the little Heinrichs and Gretchens love to go to Charlottenburg. These carp are very aged, some of them, and as cunning as possible; for when a bell rings they all come rushing in shoals, knowing well that it is their own dinner bell; and they are never disappointed, for the public delights in feeding them.

Mrs. W. envied the lady next door because she always seemed so well and happy. "She enjoys life and I don't," said the discontented woman. "How I would like to change places with her!" CORRESPONDENCE.

BUTLER.

Edward May is hauling stone for the foundation for a good dwelling in the North addition.

The heavy rain last Saturday found many people on the roads, and not a few got a severe ducking.

E. D. Briggs has opened the most attractive restaurant in town, and a successful trade seems to be assured.

Ellsworth & Crow have taken possession at Stewart & Co.'s grocery, Frank Stewart remaining with the new firm.

S. G. Stone has been on the semi-retired list all spring and seemed to be gaining rapidly, but we learn he is again prostrated.

Charley Phillips, cast adrift by the closing up of Thompson & Waller's drug store, has secured employment at Kehrer's drug store.

A large force of men are now engaged on the Lake Shore road east of Butler, and the new track to Edgerton will soon be ready for use.

The Butler schools closed last Friday for the summer vacation. Prof. Teeple, we believe, retires, and has been awarded license to preach in the M. E. church.

This year bids fair to be remembered as railroad year. No less than three roads are projected (on paper) from Toledo to Chicago, the lines all passing within ten or fifteen miles north of Butler.

Mrs. Worth has returned from Nickerson, Kansas, and will again make Butler her home. She looks several years younger than when she went away. By the way, she appears to be the youngest woman in town—for her age.

The M. E. quarterly conference last Monday made Butler a station, with F. M. Stone as preacher in charge, and created Butler circuit, with Rev. Wilcox to care for the same. At present it is composed of but two points.

The Lutheran friends are making substantial improvements on their church, putting in new doors and cathedral glass in the windows. The church when completed will present a very tasty appearance. Rev. Dieffinback seems to be holding his old membership and adding many new ones, as his society is growing in members and material strength.

SPENCERVILLE.

School closed Wednesday.

Theodore Kessler has moved into his new residence.

E. J. Boyle was in town Friday discussing politics.

Thomas Fales, of Hicksville, was in town Wednesday.

Prof. Kœppe and family are visiting friends near Newville.

Mrs. D. M. Allen and Miss Louie Rummell went to Hicksville Thursday.

Born.—To Mr. and Mrs. John Beams, last Thursday morning, a daughter.

Miss Maggie Seberts has been nursing Mrs. E. Smith through a serious illness.

J. A. Provines has been commissioned as census enumerator and will begin work soon.

A class in vocal music has been organized in the Lutheran church by David Snyder, of Hicksville.

While playing in Willie Henderson's barn Sunday, Willie Allen fell from an elevation and fractured his arm.

J. H. Murray started for Indianapolis Monday morning, and will attend the Grand Lodge of the Masonic fraternity.

A forlorn cavalcade of bears, monkeys, men, women and children passed through this place Friday—a disgrace to the age and civilization.

Some men in this community are accused of too great a liking for other men's wives, which came near leading to a fight Thursday night.

Some of the boys from the east side of the river undertook to relieve J. A. Provines of some pocketbooks, but were detected in the effort.

Mrs. Tyndal fell from the platform in front of the M. E. church Sunday morning after services and was seriously, though not fatally injured.

The following were chosen Saturday as delegates to the various democratic conventions: county (see list elsewhere); congressional, T. S. Murray; state, Hon. S. S. Shutt; senatorial, E. Dermott; judicial, John Gill.

CEDAR CREEK.

Rather too much rain to suit the farmers generally.

F. Holman made a flying trip to Ft. Wayne on Saturday.

Rev. Wm. Finney moved into the country the latter part of last week.

Wm. Jackson's saw mill was destroyed by fire on Friday evening of last week. No insurance we understand, The mill will be re-built in the near future we are informed.

O. C. Hines, of Woodruff, Lagrange Co., Indiana, moved to this place on Thursday last and expects to take possession of the store here soon. We understand that Mr. Hines has had experience in the merchandise business and can but wish him success.

Sunday School Institute.

The Sunday school institute of Jackson township was held at Auburn Junction May 25, 1890. The forenoon's session did not start out very favorably as the roads were bad and people could not get out, hence but little work was done. In the afternoon the house was crowded and the exercises were very pleasant and profitable. The music was conducted by Mr. Bell. Mr. O. Zimmerman being the president took charge of the other exercises. First on the program was a discussion of the "Evil effects of pernicious literature upon the minds of the young," by L. B. Fretz, followed by W. L. Meese. The "Elements of effectual Sunday School teaching," was favorably discussed by Rev. I. M. Thomas, A. Provines and A. McClellan. The "relaions of the Sunday School to the state," was ably handled by Rev. Coder, after which came a question drawer. The questions were answered by L. B. Fretz, A. McClellan, A. Provines and others. The committee on election of officers then made its report. The Institute adjourned to meet again the 25th of August with the Lockwood Sunday School. Everything was well done and the Junction people deserve great credit for their hospitality.

It Cannot Longer Be DENIED.

PAINTERS in Auburn, have tried to make it appear that J. C. Day is not much of a painter. But murder will out. Work will show for itself. While those "would-be" artistic daubers have been trying to injure the reputation of a member of the craft, it has been proven that they themselves were badly deceived, and their prophecy false and in vain. We have never said anything concerning this in a spirit of refutation. But we now say it, and say it that we can make you finer rooms, give you more styles and better features of painting, both inside and out, at a less price, than any other Painters in Auburn.

LOUD,

We Mean Just What We SAY!

TO THOSE who are contemplating the painting of a fine house, or having nice rooms neatly, perfectly and artistically finished, we will say that you will do well to call on us and get our prices. We can convince you that our facilities for doing artistic work, are complete in every respect, and we are always pleased to show samples of our work in all the latest styles of colors and ideas in artistic painting. The public will find us always ready to do just as we agree. We give a written guarantee to strictly fulfill all contracts. Hoping to receive a share of the public's patronage, we are yours very truly,

A Caucus Shook Up.

Last Saturday afternoon, while the democratic caucus was in session at Fairfield Center, three of the horses hitched near the school house were killed by lightning. Two were the valuable team of the newly elected trustee, R. H. Sherlock, and the other belonged to Michael Reincehl. It seems that they were near a small maple tree, which was hit and torn to shreds. Of course the horses died instantly. The same bash sent a part of the bolt into the school house where the men were deliberating, though but little damage resulted. John Gardner was severely shocked, but soon recovered. Several of the others, were slightly shocked, and a small portion of plastering was torn off. The caucus came to a standstill, and quite a number left for home. After awhile, those who staid managed to select delegates. Then the dead horses were drawn away for burial. Our Fairfield friends will be very old before they forget the strange experience they had at their caucus, May 24, 1890. They will probably recall it, every time they meet for that purpose for many years. The old frame school that was on the ground before this one was put up, was struck by lightning, and a large part of the north end torn out. And yet people will insist it never strikes twice in the same place.

State Board of Health.

TO PHYSICIANS:
Office of the State Board of Health, Indianapolis, March 12, 1890.

The State Board of Health has undertaken the work of presenting to the public, and the profession in particular, a full and complete state history of the recent epidemic of La Grippe. The physicians, of the county are earnestly requested to co-operate and to give all the assistance in their power toward perfecting this contribution to the history of epidemics. Blanks for reports are now in the hands of Dr. B. S. Sheffer, county health officer, at St. Joe, and may be had on application. Each physician should remember that failure to comply with their request vitiates to a greater or less degree an exhibit that might otherwise prove of paramount importance. One or more prominent physicians, in each township will be asked by the county health officer to give a more detailed report to him, such as shall embrace the following points: Date of outbreak in township, characteristics of the malady, including temperature, pulse, etc, various complications, peculiarities, convalescence, sequelæ, mortality and such additional matter as may be deemed important.

Sick Headache

IS a complaint from which many suffer and few are entirely free. Its cause is indigestion and a sluggish liver, the cure for which is readily found in the use of Ayer's Pills.

"I have found that for sick headache, caused by a disordered condition of the stomach, Ayer's Pills are the most reliable remedy."—Samuel C. Bradburn, Worthington, Mass.

"After the use of Ayer's Pills for many years, in my practice and family, I am justified in saying that they are an excellent cathartic and liver medicine—sustaining all the claims made for them."—W. A. Westfall, M. D., V. P. Austin & N. W. Railway Co., Burnet, Texas.

"Ayer's Pills are the best medicine known to me for regulating the bowels, and for all diseases caused by a disordered stomach and liver. I suffered for over three years from headache, indigestion, and constipation. I had no appetite and was weak and nervous most of the time. By using three boxes of Ayer's Pills, and at the same time dieting myself, I was completely cured."—Philip Lockwood, Topeka, Kansas.

"I was troubled for years with indigestion, constipation, and headache. A few boxes of Ayer's Pills, used in small daily doses, restored me to health. They are prompt and effective."—W. H. Strout, Meadville, Pa.

CATARRH—CATARRHAL DEAFNESS—Hay Fever—A New Home Treatment

Sufferers are not generally aware that these diseases are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of living parasites in the lining membrane of the nose and eustachian tubes. Microscopic research, however, has proved this to be a fact, and the result of this discovery is, that a simple remedy has been formulated whereby catarrh, catarrhal deafness and hay fever are permanently cured in from one to three simple applications made at home by the patient once in two weeks.

N. B.—This treatment is not a snuff or an ointment; both have been discarded by reputable physicians as injurious. A pamphlet explaining this new treatment is sent free on application by A. H. DIXON & SON, 337 and 339 West King St., Toronto, Canada.—Christian Advocate.

Sufferers from Catarrhal troubles should carefully read the above. ly

Thousands Poisoned.

In a recent work on heart disease, Dr. Franklin Miles the noted specialist gives many new and startling facts. Thousands of people are slowly poisoning themselves, weakening their hearts by the use of tea, coffee, tobacco and alcohol. These are heart whips, causing it to beat rapidly, thus gradually wearing it out, producing shortness of breath when exercising, pains in side and shoulder, hungry and faint spells. Finally heart failure and sudden death. For weakened and irritated hearts the press everywhere highly recommend the New Heart Cure discovered by Dr. Franklin Miles, which is for sale at F. E. Davenport's. 5

The Wonderful Tower.

The highest structure in the world is Eiffel Tower, at Paris, 1,000 feet high. But the great discovery of Dr. Franklin Miles is certain to tower far above it in promoting human happiness and health. This wonderful nerve medicine builds up wornout systems, cures fits, spasms, headache, nervous prostration, dizziness, sleeplessness, monthly pains, sexual troubles, etc. Mrs. John R. Miller, of Valparaiso, Ind., and J. D. Taylor, of Logansport, Ind., gained 20 pounds a month while taking it. They Decorated.

Last Sunday pursuant to arrangement, the G. A. R., W. R. C and S. of V., together with the drum corps, went down to Cedar Chapel to assist in the decoration ceromonies. The people assembled in Fansler's grove where a stand had been erected and seats arranged. What an assembly it was! Everybody seemed to be patriotic, and long before the time set for the services to begin, the seating capacity could not accomodate half the people. The address was a very able one, delivered by T. F. Freck, of Huntertown. The choir deserves a great deal of credit for the excellent music rendered by them. After the stand ceremonies were concluded the veterans, their wives, Sons, and the Sunday School formed a long line and marched to the cemetery, where the service was concluded. We should not forget to notice the efficiency with which Wm. Feagler conducted this meeting as officer of the day. That this day will long be remembered is beyond a question, and as the years roll on and the "boys in blue" drop out one by one until there shall be but one left to strew the flowers on the multiplied graves of comrades, may the Grand Army on the other side be re-enforced by the loss here. And when the "bugle" shall call them from their long sleep may they be ready to receive the orders of the Great Commander and dwell in the full triumphs of victories nobly won.

PEDESTRIAN.

Wa-Wa-See Lake.

[Goshen Times.]

Turkey Lake at Syracuse was known on the original plat, as Wa-Wa-See Lake, and the Indianapolis cottagers spend the hot months of the year on its banks have concluded to call the lake hereafter by its original name. The Cedar Beach Association held a meeting at Indianapolis on Thursday night, and the Wa-Wa-See Yacht and Canoe Club was organized, with Dr. J. F. Wright, of Columbus, as Commodore, and Charles E. Nordyke, of Indianapolis, as Vice Commodore. It is the intention of the club to have a regatta on the lake June 25, at which time there will be yacht and canoe races. A cup of very handsome design has been ordered as a prize to the winner of the yacht race, and prizes will be given to the successful contestants in a series of canoe races. The annual meeting of the Fly Fishmen's Association of Indiana, will occur at Wa Wa-See Lake, June 23, 24 and 25.

Auburn's Normal School.

The Auburn Normal School will begin this year July 21, at the High School building, under the auspices of Mr. Coe and Mr. Harrison. The well known ability of these two experienced teachers will insure a good attendance, good work, and good results. This summer school has become one of the fixtures in Auburn, and our people look forward to its opening each year as the season rolls around. Young people, both in town and country will find it a pleasant and profitable place to come and work up to thoroughness, on the subjects most needed. There is scarcely a student in the county but needs the drill of such a school. Further notice will be given soon.

Literary Notes.

"A Seaport without Ships" (Sandwich, in Kent, England) is the subject of an article which Julian Ralph has written, and Charles Graham and Bert Wilder have illustrated, for the four-page Supplement to the number of Harper's Weekly to be published June 4th.

The Convention.

May 31, 1890 was a red letter day with the democracy of old DeKalb. It was the day for the county nominating convention. For some time the candidates for the several nominations had been making an active canvass, and now they and their friends gathered for the final struggle. All the morning the canvassing went on till at ten o'clock, headed by the Garrett band, they all repaired to Eureka Opera House, where the meeting was to be held. All necessary arrangements had been made, and at 10:30 Ab. Kelley, the county chairman called them to order by a rap of the gavel so vigorous that the dust flew from the stand in a cloud, and the talking broke off like an icicle. The secretary J. F. Shuman then read the call, after which Mr. Boland nominated A. J. Baxter, of Butler, and Dr. Nusbaum, of Auburn, as permament chairmen, giving as a reason for having two, that the session would be long and tiresome for one. The gentlemen named were elected unanimously, and each made a brief speech of thanks. Mr. Boland was made chief secretary and the editors of the county assistants. A report from the committee on organization was called for, and J. A. Barns, chairman of that committee reported that the committee had not completed its work, as the new law was likely to impose new duties and obligations on committeemen, which were not well understood. The report was accepted and the committee continued, with instructions to report to the county committee. The townships were then called on to name cannidates: Union named W. H. Dills, and Smithfield, Freeman Kelley for representative. For clerk, were Solomon Barney, of Concord, D. D. Moody and W. B. Brown, of Union, W. H. Leas, of Grant, and James W. Clark of Smithfield. For auditor, W. L. Blair, of Wilmington, I. N. Cool and Frank Borst, of Union, Frank Seiler, of Fairfield and H. N. Coffinbury, of Keyser. For sheriff, Phil. Plum, of Wilmington. For treasurer, Perry Fitch, of Butler, Henry Hines, of Jackson, B. L. Duncan, of Grant and Reuben Sawvel, of Franklin. For recorder, were Cory Shugers, of Jackson, Mahlon Baker, of Concord, Lucius Loveland, of Stafford, Warren Miller, of Newville, S. R. Heberling and Geo. L. Lanning, of Union, W. S. Getts and N. H. Weaver, of Grant and Samuel Williams, of Fairfield. For surveyor, J. M. Hook. For coroner, Lafayette D. Miser, of Grant, and Dr. Fred. B. Wood, of Keyser. Commissioner, Southwest, Henry Lindorfer, of Jackson; T. F. Franks and G. I. Patterson, of Richland. W. S. Dancer, of Jackson was named, but he refused to allow the use of his name. For the Southeast district, James Henderson, of Jackson, Henry Hull and C. Curie, of Concord, and R. N. Crooks, of Waterloo. There being no opposition the place of sheriff and surveyor were filled by acclamation. The convention, then at 11:30 adjourned to meet at 1 p. m.

On assembling in the afternoon the balloting began. For representative Mr. Dills received 127 votes and Mr. Kelley 197, and Mr. Dills moved to make Kelley's nomination unanimous, which was done. Mr. Kelley thanked the meeting in a brief speech. For clerk, the first ballot stood:

DEATH

Lurked in the Juice of Poisonous Roots.

Ottawa (Ont.) special: At Lake George, a village forty miles from this place, a whole family were poisoned by a decoction of roots which the grandfather had dug in the woods to use for medicine. Two of the children are already dead, while another child and the grandfather himself are beyond hope of recovery, and the mother and two little girls, should they live, will have had an almost miraculous escape. The family was named Campeau. The grandfather had gone to the woods to gather roots from which medicine could be made for a sick horse. He secured an abundant supply of the kind he wanted, and with them he dug some roots with whose nature he was not familiar. They had a sweet and palatable taste, however, and thinking they would do the children no harm, he allowed them to eat freely of the strange but appetizing roots. The mother, too, ate some and gave a little to her 3-months-old baby. In a few moments the whole family were taken with frightful pains, and when a neighbor, attracted by feeble cries of "Help! help!" reached the cottage, she found little Archie Campeau lying dead in bed with an unconscious sister on either side of him. Another child was rolling in his death agony upon the floor, and near by, gasping and helpless, lay their mother and aged grandfather of the little ones, the latter relapsing into insensibility at the fearful visitation of torture and death, which he had innocently brought upon the unfortunate household. The nearest physician lived at Plantagent village, five miles away. When he arrived one little boy was dead, the other evidently beyond hope of recovery, while the mother, grandfather, and two little girls and infant but three months old, were in a desperate condition. Emetics were administered, and before he left the cottage Dr. Petty was successful in getting the mother and the two little girls comparatively out of danger, although he still has doubts of their recovery. The grandfather and the infant, the doctor says, will probably die. The root of seductive sweetness but awful fatality was wild parsnips, a deadly poison.

The Crops.

The Chicago Farmers' Review says: Late reports from the crop correspondents indicate an increased temperature. The diminished rainfall had a favorable effect upon the condition of winter wheat in certain sections. In many counties in Illinois and Ohio considerable improvement has taken place during the past week. Missouri reports show a slight decline. Condition of spring wheat remains practically unchanged in Iowa, Wisconsin and South Dakota. Correspondents report improvement in Minnesota and a corresponding decline in Nebraska, a drouth being responsible in the latter State. Concerning corn in Minnesota, Dakota, Michigan, Wisconsin, and Ohio, but small portion of crop is up; in Illinois, Indiana, Missouri, and Kentucky, early plantings above ground, but conditions considerably below average owing to cold wet weather in May; in Iowa, Kansas, and Nebraska, would probably have equalled usual average this season had it not been for dry weather, which, until recently retarded its growth. We summarize as follows the reports received relative to condition of corn: Illinois, 87 per cent.; Indiana, 88; Missouri, 85; Kentucky, 77; Iowa, 91; Kansas, 91; Nebraska, 90.

A Duel to Death.

A sensational semi-duel took place at Brownsville, Tenn. The principals were Thomas J. Harbert, a prosperous young farmer of high connection, and James Boyd, the 20-year-old son of Attorney B. P. Boyd. Harbert now lies in a critical and, it is feared, hopeless condition as a result of the conflict. They quarrelled about Boyd shooting a hog belonging to a relative of Harbert. They carried guns for each other. Both attended church and afterwards were about to meet. Boyd saw Harbert coming upon him; instinctively he felt that his pursuer had a weapon and he commenced a race for his life. His future depended on his steed outfleeting the handsome horse on which Harbert was riding. There was a race for life and Boyd won. Then he equipped himself better, and returned to his foe. They met in the moonlight and there began a duel in earnest, both men firing simultaneously. Five shots were fired and Harbert was seriously, perhaps fatally wounded.

Conductors Will Leave the Brotherhood.

The order of the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad that all conductors must leave the Brotherhood of Conductors or the service of the company has created consternation among the men, though it is believed nearly all will obey the company's order. The Reading officials claim that they had no objections to the Brotherhood until the recent convention of the order at Rochester repealed the anti-striking clause in the constitution.

Boulanger's Victims.

London special: Count Dillon, exiled from France, finds himself financially ruined by his support of Gen. Boulanger. He spent enormous sums in the elections. His wealth is gone and he is overwhelmed with debt. He has abandoned politics and entered upon business in this city with the intention of restoring his fallen fortune.

Will Address the Farmers.

Secretary Rusk will deliver the address to the farmers at the Ohio State Fair, September 18.

THE CENSUS.

Superintendent Porter Tells All About It.

The machinery for taking the census for 1890 was put in motion Monday all over the United States, and as it will be pushed as expeditiously as possible, Supt. Porter anticipates early returns to his office, so that the work of tabulating can be entered upon and completed within a reasonable period. All the preliminary matters have been arranged, blanks prepared, enumerators instructed as to their duties, and all that remains is to collect the data, which it has been decided shall become a part of the census. It requires 43,000 men as enumerators to gather the requisite information, and each of these is either employed in a definite locality or upon some special topic. This, however, does not include the additional thousands of clerks employed in collecting and tabulating the returns made that will come back from all over the country as the result of the labors of the enumerators, so it can be seen at a glance what a corps of men it requires and what immense sums of money must be expended to accomplish this undertaking.

TRAGIC FINALE

Of a Romance in Real Life—Illicit Love Ends in Murder and Robbery.

A special from Columbus, Ind., says: Two years ago Thomas White and wife moved from Estill County, Kentucky, to the farm of Lewis Thompson in Brown County, west of this city. Thompson was a young married man, well fixed. It soon developed that White and his wife were bad characters, and before long Thompson became intimate with Mrs. White, and last September White Caps warned White and his wife to leave, which they did between two days in December. Thompson, having disposed of their effects, started on horseback to their former home in Kentucky, taking with him a considerable sum of money and leaving his family behind. Arriving there, his illicit relations with Mrs. White were resumed, and securing a large timber contract remained, boarding with John Newman. About ten days ago his wife received a letter from Newman, saying Thompson had died suddenly and been buried, and that White was claiming his property. She at once gave a power of attorney to Dr. Wilson and her brother, William Nemmiston, and sent them to Kentucky to investigate matters and secure his effects. On arriving at Winton, back in the mountains, they found Thompson's effects with Newman to consist of his clothing and a fine mare and colt, with $200. White and his wife had secured the money, but were made to disgorge a part of it. Thompson had taken dinner at White's, was taken suddenly ill and died after reaching Newman's before a physician could be secured. It is evident poison was administerd to him with his dinner. White attempted to replevy the mare and colt from the Indiana authorities, but failed, when those in possession started on foot and walked all the way to Richmond, on the Kentucky Central Railway (eighteen miles) during the night, arriving about daylight. Here they were overtaken by a mob of mountaineers under White's command, who threatened to lynch them, charging them with stealing the mare and colt, but were prevented by the Sheriff, who knew White as a notorious character who had broken jail on a sentence for hog stealing.

INTO AN ICEBERG.

Steamer Normandie Narrowly Escapes Destruction.

New York special: The fine new Hamburg line steamship Normandie is now at her dock, having made a very fast maiden trip though she had an iceberg experience that might have sent her to the bottom but for the prompt action of her twin screws. While running at a moderate speed through a dense fog in latitude 45 and longitude 48 degrees west, Captain Hebich and the third officer, who were standing on the bridge, descried an immense berg straight ahead and not a ship's length away. The iceberg was fully six hundred feet long and two hundred high and it had three peaks. Captain Hebich immediately stopped the starboard engine, put the port engine to full speed and porting his helm waited for the crash. The twin screw worked admirably, swinging the great ship around so that she did not strike till the stern had almost cleared the ice. There was a heavy sea and a big wave lifted the stern of the steamer and sent it against the iceberg, crashing in five of the metal plates twenty feet from the stern and directly over the hospital, and wrecking the hospital. Splinters of ice showered the deck of the steamship, and two little girls in the hospital were half buried under the ice splinters, but received no serious injury. The break in the steamer's stern was above the water line and the Normandie was not retarded in her journey whatever. The big new racer left Southampton last Friday afternoon, and it was confidently predicted that she would beat the maiden record. This she has just failed to do. Her time from Southampton this trip is, as closely as can at present be computed, six days, twenty-one minutes and fifty seconds, or twenty-two seconds slower than the maiden trip of the Columbia from the same port.

WAR DECLARED.

Catholics Will Fight Wisconsin School Laws.

Milwaukee special: The convention of German Catholic societies closed its session after resolving to enter the political field and work to secure the unconditional repeal of the Bennett and other laws which tend to interfere in any way with religious liberty. A central political committee composed of delegates from each Congressional District and two from the State at large, was appointed and which will be assigned the duty of organizing the Catholics of the State for political purposes. It was recommended that a committee be appointed in each county and assembly and senatorial districts, the duty of which will be to prevent the election of any candidate for office who is suspected of being unfriendly to the Catholic Church. The preamble and plan of campaign declares that while the German Catholic societies are in no sense political organizations, and while they are opposed to meddling with politics, antagonism to such measures as the Bennett law is a matter of conscience. The German Catholic societies will not espouse the cause of any political party, but it is the sense of the convention that the Bennett law and its attendant paternal spirit infringes upon the conscience of the German Catholics, and it would be wrong to the children of the members of the German Catholic societies if they did not oppose such measures. It is resolved, therefore, that the societies take an active part in the approaching State campaign and organize for that purpose. Another committee was appointed, whose duty it shall be to watch carefully that no friend of paternal measures is elected to either branch of the Legislature. Still another committee was instructed to carefully supervise all bills that came before the Legislature and promptly report of all measures which appear to be antagonistic to the Catholics.

TO ETERNITY.

Twenty Helpless Victims Swiftly Hurled.

Oakland (Cal.) special: One of the most disastrous railroad accidents that has ever occurred this side of the Rocky Mountains happened here. A local passenger train consisting of an engine and three cars, was the ill-fated train. The accident is believed to have been caused by the carelessness of the bridgetender, Dunlap, who had charge of the Webster street bridge, the scene of the disaster. He had opened the draw to permit a yacht to pass, but failed to signal the approaching train to stop. The bridge was within its own width of being closed when the engine reached the end of the approach which led into it and dashed down into the creek, followed by one passenger car. Both engine and car were completely submerged, as the tide was at nearly full flood. Engineer Dund, as he neared the edge of the bridge, saw the danger and blew the whistle of warning, and went down with his machine. Fireman O'Brien was rescued, badly injured. As quickly as possible the living were rescued and the dead removed. Another car passed half way over the bridge approach but was held back by weight of the rear portion of the train. The conductor of the ill-fated train was Ed. Recoth, who escaped uninjured. The rescue of the passengers was largely effected by rowboats. The car which went into the creek is said to have contained about thirty passengers. Twenty are now believed to have been drowned, sixteen of whom have been identified.

NEWFOUNDLANDERS EXCITED.

They Talk of Insurrection and Eventual Annexation to the United States.

Ottawa (Ont.) special: A gentleman who has arrived here from Newfoundland in connection with business with the Dominion government says that the people of that colony are in a thoroughly demoralized condition, almost on the verge of rebellion against the British government for the manner in which they have been treated by the imperial authorities in surrendering to France one of the most valuable sections of the islands, while France continues to discriminate against them. From this distance, he says, it is impossible to picture the excitement that prevails throughout the colony. No action of the British or colonial government has ever done more to create a desire on the part of the colony for annexation with the United States than the apathy now shown by the British government. "Should we not secure our rights," he said, "there will be an insurrection, and the United States will be appealed to by nine-tenths of the people of Newfoundland to admit us into the union. All idea of entering the Dominion has been abandoned, as not only has Sir John Macdonald and his government expressed themselves unwilling to assume the responsibility such a step would involve in the present unsettled state of affairs, but the people see that their position would not be in the least improved by such an alliance, the only remedy being to enter the American republic, which would insure the protection of the United States against French aggression."

A ROYAL WELCOME.

The Presidential Party at Cleveland Loyally Greeted by Enthusiastic Buckeyes.

Cleveland special: The roar of cannon and the cheers of 50,000 people welcomed President Harrison and Vice President Morton to Cleveland. The President alighting from his car, shook hands with ex-President Hayes and several other gentlemen and was then escorted to his carriage. The police had great difficulty in keeping the passage open and when the President and party came along, the crowd closed in, driving the police before them. Outside the depot the street was packed with thousands of enthusiastic and demonstrative people. As the President stepped into the carriage there was a mighty roar. Cheer followed cheer, and as the carriage moved from the entrance the cheering was repeated, until the noise of the guns of the man-of-war in the breakwater was drowned by the plaudits of the multitude. The procession then formed. In the procession accompanying the President among the carriages were Vice President Morton and General Bartlett. Plumed dragoons escorted the presidential party up the hill to Bank Street, the people on foot followed, but as at the depot so also along the street the crowds were so large that the most fleet of foot could not keep pace with the procession.

Will Build a Canal.

Baltimore special: There is a revival of the project of building the Maryland and Delaware Ship Canal under the direction of foreign capitalists, who expect to commence work on the canal within the next ten days and push it rapidly to completion. The French capitalists have organized with a capital of $8,000,000, and are represented in this country by W. J. Roe, of New York. The new company has secured a controlling interest in the stock of the old company chartered by the State of Maryland some years ago. The route of the canal will be what is known as the Sassafras route, beginning at Sassafras River on Chesapeake Bay and extending to Blackbird Creek on the Delaware Bay. The advantages claimed for this route are that the natural waterways which the canal will follow make up nearly the whole length of the canal, and it will require but seven and one-half miles of solid cut to be made. The canal will shorten the distance between the eastern seaboard cities 200 miles and bring the western cities that much nearer to Europe.

Guyed the Show.

A special from Ann Arbor, Mich., says that during a performance of Franklin's circus there 300 students from the State University guyed the show. When the performance was finished and most of the audience dispersed, the students, who remained in the tent in a bunch, gave the college yell, "U. of M." This demonstration was at once followed by an attack from about twenty circus men armed with clubs, who advanced shouting their war cry, "Hey Rube." The students, surprised by the attack, fell back with several broken heads, but soon rallied. In the melee several pistol shots were fired and a circus man dropped, shot in the shoulder. It is said ten students and as many circus men are in the hands of physicians. Several arrests of both circus men and students have occurred. None of the injuries are supposed to be fatal. There is intense excitement at Ann Arbor.

University dome, an immense golden globe, as seen from without, is now from within one of the most splendid examples of art. The decoration is regarded as the crowning point of the artist, Gregori's life, and is the last grand work that Gregori, who was sent from Rome by Pius IX., will undertake.

Two Women Flogged.

A band of White Caps, thirty in number, visited Corydon, Ind., and proceeded to a house occupied by Lucy Noyes and Jane Flay, two women of questionable reputation. The women were dragged from bed, taken to the edge of town, tied to trees, and flogged until both had fainted from pain. Their thongs were then cut and the White Caps departed, leaving their victims lying where they had fallen, at the foot of the trees, limp and insensible. Besides their general bad character the two women were suspected of having set recent fires at the fair grounds near Corydon.

An Interesting Summary of the More Important Doings of Our Neighbors—Weddings and Deaths—Crimes, Casualties and General News Notes.

Prominent Merchant Killed.

An accident in which one of Rushville's most prominent business men lost his life, and another one was seriously hurt, occurred at that place. Mr. W. J. Mauzy, of the Mauzy Company, dry goods merchants, was driving a young horse along the street, when a piece of loose paper was turned over by the wind, at which the horse took fright and immediately started to run. Mr. Charles Hugo, who was riding in the cart with Mr. Mauzy, was thrown violently to the ground and received very serious bruises. Mr. Mauzy was thrown from the cart as the horse turned the corner, and after being hurled to a height of ten feet in the air alighted upon his head on the stone curbing and fractured his skull in five places, from which wounds he died. Mr. Mauzy was in the prime of an active business life. He had just received a policy in the amount of $5,000 from the New York Life, and carried $3,000 in the Royal Arcanum.

THE NATIONAL SOLONS.

WORK OF THE SENATE AND HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Our National Law-Makers and What They Are Doing for the Good of the Country—Various Measures Proposed, Discussed and Acted On.

THE session of the Senate on the 27th inst. was occupied principally in a discussion on Senator Wilson's bill subjecting imported liquors to the provisions of the laws of the several States. In the House Mr. McKinley of Ohio submitted the conference report upon the customs-administrative bill. The conference report was adopted—yeas, 127; nays, 13; the Speaker pro tem. counting a quorum. The Democrats as a rule refrained from voting. The House then went into committee of the whole (Mr. Allen of Michigan in the chair) on the river and harbor appropriation bill. An amendment calling for $6,000 for improvements at Cedar Islands, Iowa, was defeated, as was that of Mr. Stone, of Kentucky, asking for an appropriation for Hickman, Ky. This was followed by the defeat of an amendment calling for $200,000 for levees at Natchez, Miss. A long debate followed an amendment offered by Mr. Boatner of Louisiana, as to the improvements at the mouth of the Red and the head of the Atchafalaya Rivers, which was defeated. An amendment was offered by the Chairman of the River and Harbor Committee providing that $50,000 of the amount allotted to the Missouri River shall be expended between Sioux City and South Dakota, and $50,000 above South Dakota. Agreed to. Mr. McCreary made a point of order against the feature of the bill which imposes a fine for obstruction of navigable waters or dumping into streams such articles as may become an obstruction, holding that the committee had no power to inflict fine and imprisonment. Pending discussion, the committee rose and the House adjourned.

IN the Senate on the 28th, the Senate bill subjecting imported liquors to the laws of the several States occupied the attention of the Senators all day. In the House Mr. Vaux, Mr. Randall's successor, presented his credentials and was qualified as a Representative. A bill was passed appropriating $125,000 for the establishment of the national military park at the battlefield at Chickamauga. A conference was ordered on the naval appropriation bill, and then the House went into committee of the whole (Mr. Burrows of Michigan in the chair) on the river and harbor bill. On motion of Mr. Dunnell of Minnesota, section 8, providing that it shall not be lawful to build bridges over navigable waterways without first securing the approval of the Secretary of War to the proposed plans, and providing a fine and imprisonment as penalty for violation of said act, was so amended as to permit the cases to be brought before the United States courts instead of the Secretary of War. On motion of Mr. Comstock, of Minnesota, all the paragraph calling for the survey and the estimated cost of cutting a new channel to the Bay of Superior, opposite the opening between Rice's Point and Connors Point, was stricken out. A motion to recommit the bill, with instructions to the committee to cut out the paragraph making an appropriation for beginning work upon the Hennepin Canal, was defeated—nays, 128; yeas, 61. The bill then passed, and the House adjourned.

IN the Senate, on the 29th, most of the day was spent in the consideration of the bill subjecting imported liquors to the provisions of the laws of the several States, and after a discussion participated in by nearly all the Senators present finally succeeded in securing a vote upon the bill, which resulted: Yeas, 34; nays, 10. Those voting in the affirmative were: Allen, Allison, Blair, Call, Casey, Colquitt, Cullom, Davis, Dawes, Dixon, Dolph, Edmunds, George, Hawley, Hiscock, Hoar, Ingalls, Jones of Nevada, McMillan, Mitchell, Moody, Morrill, Paddock, Platt, Plumb, Power, Pugh, Sawyer, Spooner, Stewart, Stockbridge, Walthall, Washburne, Wilson of Iowa. Those voting in the negative were Bate, Blodgett, Cockrell, Coke, Harris, Jones of Arkansas, Turpie, Vance, Vest, and Voorhees. The title of the bill was then amended so as to read, "A bill to limit the effect of the regulation of commerce between the several States and foreign countries in certain cases." The House spent the entire day in the consideration of bills making appropriations for public buildings. At five o'clock the committee of the whole rose, having passed in committee bills providing for public buildings at thirty-five places, at a total cost of $4,425,000.

Nobody ever hears of codfish balls in these days when old-fashioned food is voted very vulgar, even by descendants from the farm.

Three-quarters of the published recipes for this, that, and the other are of as much practical use as a top without a cord or a set of harness without a horse.

Now is the season of the year when medical men tell us we are better and healthier not to partake of too solid a breakfast.

A RESCUE.

BY LOUIS N. CRILL, JR.

Sad Heart sailed forth on the sea's calm bosom
To fathom the depths of joy;
She longed to drift as a faded blossom
Where sorrow doth ne'er annoy.
She plead to heaven to charm and thrill her
With infinite strains of cheer;
No answer came—while the damp winds chill her
And the storm is drawing near.

Her weary form, as it weaves and totters,
Is beckoning now—"I fall!"
Bard Love, a sailor who skims the waters,
Caught sight of the drooping sail,
And quick as thought to the rescue dashes;
And clasping the fainting form,
He speeds away while the lightning flashes
And dreadfully blows the storm.

He onward sped to the land of Beauty,
Away to his palace home,
To sweetly live in the bonds of duty,
Full free from the mad sea's foam.
Sad Heart is saved from a sad-like ending,
No more will she ever rove;
The nuptial bells in their silent blending
Have wedded her life to Love.

CHAPTER I.

FORESHADOWING.

"FOR mercy's sake, Ray, my dear fellow, what has happened?"

"I am ruined, Eugene — completely, utterly ruined," came back the answer in a heavy groan, as the speaker buried his face in his hands. "Oh! my poor sister."

"But, tell me, what is it?" pleaded his friend, now fairly frightened.

Ray Fielding removed his hands, and in a broken voice, but without looking his questioner in the face, said:

"The president himself came to me this morning, and after a few kind words and cautious questions, intrusted me with a very important commission and a large sum of money, at the same time assuring me that on the faithful execution of the trust might depend my future advancement in the bank."

"Well?" asked Eugene, breathlessly.

"Well, I have been unable to consummate the matter."

"Good heavens! how is that?"

"I am short a hundred dollars of the amount the president gave me."

"What! is it lost?"

"Yes, it is lost; but, understand me, Eugene, it is lost in such a way that I cannot possibly explain it as an accident."

"That looks bad," mused his friend. Then, after a moment's consideration:

"When were you to make your report to the president?"

"When he comes down to the bank in the morning; that is, between nine and ten o'clock."

"And you see no way out of your difficulty?"

"No way whatever, unless, indeed, I can get one hundred dollars between this and eight o'clock to-morrow morning. In that case I might still have time to complete the transaction and be ready to report."

"Between this and eight o'clock tomorrow morning," mechanically repeated Eugene.

"Yes, but what's the use of talking? Where am I to get one hundred dollars, or even half that amount? You see for yourself, old fellow, I'm fairly done for."

Eugene Cleveland's face instantly became as white as his friend's. He saw and fully appreciated the gravity of the situation. But what was to be done?

Even if it were to save his life he could not have got altogether twenty-five dollars of his own money, much less four times that amount. And leaning forward with his elbows resting upon a desk, he gave himself up to profound reflection.

Presently, raising his head, he put the question:

"Does any one else know of this loss?"

"Not a living soul but yourself," was the quick reply.

"That's well; I'm glad of that." And again he became silent.

This lasted so long that young Fielding was forced to speak.

"Don't you see any way out of it?" he asked, anxiously. "Remember," he gasped, "it's not only my own bread and butter that's at stake but my sister's living is also in danger."

For a moment Eugene did not respond; indeed, he hardly seemed to hear him. At length, with an effort, he said:

"I can see but one way. I must go to my uncle, the director. The one, you know, who obtained this situation for me."

"What! Do you think he will help us?" asked Ray, in great surprise.

"I can't say," rejoined Eugene, slowly shaking his head, while a peculiar, an almost frightened look, came into his face. "I can't say, but I can do no less than try. And—and—yes, for your sake, Ray, and for Meta's, I'll do that this very evening."

"God bless you, my dear fellow," exclaimed Ray, grasping his hand and shaking it warmly, "you are, indeed, a true friend," and the tears, which he could no longer repress, started from his eyes.

Young Cleveland, since he had found it necessary to work for a living, had not been a frequent visitor at his uncle's house, for he could but notice that his august relative in no way exerted himself to make his calls agreeable. He had, therefore, of late, resolved to wholly discontinue his visits; but not for this reason alone.

His uncle, the Hon. Sherwood Elliston, had recently married a second time; and on several of his later visits Eugene had seen his new wife, who, he could but acknowledge to himself, interested him profoundly.

On the occasion of his first meeting her, when she entered the room and came slowly toward him, he was so startled by her wondrous grace and beauty that he almost forgot to rise from his chair.

This glorious being, this magnificent lady, was but twenty-five years of age. She was tall and blonde, with deep-set eyes under the shadow of sweeping, dark lashes. Thick masses of hair framed her somewhat sad but splendid brow; and she was richly, even perfectly dressed, her elegant garments draping her like an antique statue.

In the days of her maidenhood her enemies and rivals had nicknamed her "the goddess," because they hated her, and wished to insinuate that she put on grand airs. The name they gave her, however, was marvelously suitable.

When she walked you would have imagined she had descended from a pedestal. The pose of her head was like that of the Greek Venus; her delicate, dilating nostrils seemed carved by a cunning chisel from transparent ivory. Then at times she had a startled, almost wild, look, such as is seen in the hunting nymphs. She used a naturally fine voice with great effect, and had most assiduously cultivated a taste for art.

She was naturally so taciturn, one was compelled to guess her thoughts; and Eugene had not been in her society long before he found himself reflecting as to what was passing in that self-concentered soul.

Inspired by his innate generosity—for he quickly conceived the thought that she was not happy with his uncle—and prompted as well by his secret admiration, which every instant was growing stronger, he took pleasure in heaping upon her the attentions he might have paid a queen; but she always seemed as indifferent to them as to the voice of her husband, or anything else about her.

This conduct only inflamed the young man the more. He found it almost impossible to keep the lovely siren out of his mind for a moment, and so at length, for honor's sake—not only because she was his uncle's wife, but because he himself was, and had been for years, pledged to another—he had resolved never to see her more.

But although this stately lady had appeared all along to be indifferent, she had not been slow to note the effects her wondrous charms had produced on her husband's handsome and agreeable nephew. As yet, however, she had made no sign.

The evening came, and in due time Eugene, with a strange feeling about his heart, ascended the broad steps leading to his uncle's stately mansion, and rang the bell.

He was admitted, and, being known to the servant, was at once shown into the drawing-room, where both Mr. Elliston and his wife were seated.

After a few moments of general conversation, Eugene, with a somewhat embarrassed air, begged that he might see his uncle alone on very urgent business.

Mr. Elliston looked greatly annoyed; but, nevertheless, arose and led the way to the library.

"Well," he said, in a disagreeable tone, as he seated himself in the most comfortable chair in the room, "what is it now? Are you in trouble? I suppose so, and want some money to help you out, or you wouldn't have come to me."

"You have guessed nearly right, my dear sir," responded Eugene, looking up quickly. "I am in trouble, and unless I have $100 this very night, or, at least, before 8 o'clock to-morrow morning, the gravest consequences are likely to ensue."

"I thought so," said the older man, in a dry, hard, unfeeling tone; "and this is exactly what I have expected ever since I helped you to the very desirable situation you now fill at the Atlantic National Bank."

Then, after a moment's pause:

"You were brought up to a life of extravagance and idleness. Your father, when he was worth no more than three hundred thousand, lived as though he were a millionaire; and at last, losing everything by a single venture in Wall street, like the coward he was, blew out his brains.

"No wonder, then, that you, his son, are the man you are, and the more one does for such as you, the more one may."

"Uncle!" exclaimed Eugene, with flushed face and flashing eyes.

"There! there!" cried the other, hastily, "don't let us have a scene here. I can't let you have the money—in fact, have none to throw away; so there's an end to that. I've an important engagement with the governor, at the Fifth Avenue Hotel, relative to the United States Senatorship, for eight o'clock, and as it is near that hour now, I must be going. But don't disturb yourself, I beg.

"If you've nothing better to do, you can amuse yourself with the books—a very diverting pastime indeed, as well as instructive;" and, bustling into the hall, he seized his hat and cane and hurried from the house.

But Eugene hardly noticed his withdrawal; he was almost stunned, so bitter was his disappointment on account of his friend.

And, seated there in a great arm-chair, he looked fixedly before him, nor noticed that the door had again opened and closed, and that he was no longer alone.

It was the beautiful wife of the would-be Senator who had entered; and, after she had almost reached the young man's side, she stopped and looked curiously at him.

Then, once more she advanced, and as she drew near suddenly took his head between her hands, and, raising his face, imprinted a burning kiss upon his feverish lips.

He started, and gazed up into her eyes almost with a look of terror, while a crimson blush mantled his cheek. And as she regarded him with a peculiar smile, he drew back a little, hastily exclaiming:

"What! who did you take me for? Did—did you think I was your husband?"

"Oh, no, indeed!" she laughed; "I am scarcely likely to make such a ludicrous mistake as that. No, my friend, I knew perfectly well who it was I kissed."

Then, after a moment's silence, and speaking in a more serious tone:

"I know still more, Eugene; I know that you are in trouble, and I think I can help you."

He started, and gave her an eager, searching look.

"Yes," she went on, "I believe I can help you. Say, Eugene, do you love me?" and, taking one of his hands in her own, she seated herself upon a stool at his feet, and looked up with a hungry—with an almost famished—gaze into his face.

"Love you?" he asked, strangely agitated. "Love you?"

"Yes, love me, as I long to be loved," she said; "as—as I could love you."

"You are beautiful, wondrously beautiful," he murmured, rapidly; "and there are thousands much more worthy of your regard than I; but I—I believe I could love you very much if you would only help my friend."

"Oh! and so you want this money—this hundred dollars—for a friend?"

"Yes," rejoined Eugene, quickly; "and if I am not able to give it to him before 8 o'clock to-morrow morning it will kill his sister—as sweet a girl, Mrs. Elliston, as ever breathed."

The lady frowned.

"What is she to you?" she asked, abruptly.

"Nothing whatever—I swear it," he said, earnestly. "She is simply the sister of my friend, and I know her to be a good and worthy girl—that is all."

Cora Elliston raised herself a little, and, quickly drawing his face forward, again pressed a burning, passionate kiss upon his lips.

"Swear to love me as I love you," she whispered, rapidly, eagerly, "and you shall take the money away with you this very night."

"But why should you care so much for me—you, who can command everything your heart may desire?"

"Because I love you so much!" was the instant reply.

She pronounced these simple words in such a deep, impassioned tone, that Eugene trembled and grasped the arms of the chair to still himself.

"Mrs. Elliston!" he at length faltered.

"What, Eugene?" and there was a strange tone in her voice.

"Heavens! in fact—nothing!" he said; "for this is a declaration of—friendship, I hope; and, believe me, your friendship is very precious to me."

She let go his arm, which she had seized, and, in a hoarse and angry voice, said:

"I am not your friend!"

"What—what are you, then?"

His voice was almost calm, but he recoiled a little, his head coming in contact with the back of the chair.

The explosion, so long pent up, now burst forth in earnest, and a flood of words poured forth from the beautiful woman's lips with inexpressible impetuosity.

"What I am I know not! I no longer know if I am myself—if I am dead or alive—if I am good or bad—if I am dreaming or waking.

"O, Eugene! what I wish, is that you and I may never leave this room again—that no one may ever enter here—that the day may never rise again—that this night may never finish—that I should wish to feel always—always—in my head, my heart, my entire being—that which I now feel, near you—of you—for you!

"I should wish to be stricken with some sudden illness, without hope, in order to be watched and wept for by you—cared for, as you care for that brother and sister.

"Oh, love me—love me, Eugene, and you shall want for nothing while you live. I will pour gold into your lap as freely as you would give water to the thirsty. Do you hear me, d-rling?"

A strange, mixed feeling soon took possession of him.

He was fearfully fascinated and drawn toward her; and yet the thought that this woman would buy his love, and pay for it in dollars and cents, repelled him.

And then, all at once, a sweet, trusting, child-like face arose before him.

"I can make no such bargain with you," he said, in a tone of decision. "My affections have long been engaged elsewhere, and it is no part of my character to prove false where I have sworn to prove true."

The lady started to her feet.

"You dare to taunt me with a desire to wrong my husband? You?" she exclaimed, fiercely.

"I spoke only for myself," he rejoined, in a conciliatory tone.

"No matter; you spurn me and the love I have felt for you since the first moment my eyes beheld your face," she cried, even more wildly.

"I do not spurn you, and I have no wish to offend you," was his earnest reply. "But I think it right to tell you that what you propose can never be."

"I care not," she almost hissed between her beautiful teeth, "you shall rue this night—aye, rue it bitterly, to the last day of your life." And before he could frame another sentence she was gone, and he was once more alone in the library.

CHAPTER II.

AFTER CLOUDS A GLEAM OF SUNSHINE.

Eugene Cleveland, left alone in the library, sat for some time plunged in thought.

The whole scene that had so recently passed had been more than a surprise to him. Never, even for a single moment, had he so much as dreamed of what was really concealed in the apparently cold heart of that strangely beautiful lady.

She had gone away angry with him—frightfully angry. What would she do?

It was in her power to work him infinite harm. Would she use that power against him? Could he doubt it?

But she loved him. Ah! he could not help seeing and believing that—loved him with an intensity that was truly frightful—the very thought of which thrilled him, yet made him shudder. And loving him as she did, would she not relent—would she not even return to him?

Thinking thus, Eugene took a book, and as he idly turned the leaves—waited. For what?

An hour passed; there was another slight sound just without the library door. He felt a sudden palpitation, and a secret wish that it might prove to be Mrs. Elliston.

It was his uncle who entered.

He advanced with measured stride, looking very important, and touching Eugene, who had quickly arisen from his seat, on the shoulder.

Then, somewhat impressively, he said:

"Well, young man!"

"Well, sir."

"What are you doing here now?"

"Oh, I was just looking over this work," holding up the volume he still retained in his hand.

"Reading, eh? Um! Well, sit down there—sit down, I say."

Eugene sank back into his easy chair, while Mr. Elliston threw himself on the sofa, and let one foot rest on the stool his wife had so recently occupied at the young man's feet.

"Well, well," he repeated, after a long pause.

"Well, sir?" said Eugene, not very well knowing what else to say.

"What the deuce!" growled the other. "Is that all you can think of? I thought you wanted me to give you, or, at least, to loan you, a hundred dollars."

Eugene started, changed color not a little, and looked up at his uncle with breathless interest.

"Understand me, young man," said the great man, very impressively. "I've no idea what you, who under the circumstances, are receiving a very liberal salary, can possibly want of a hundred dollars, and I am not now going to stop to inquire. Moreover, you are not to suppose its my regular habit to loan money to every poor relative who may see fit to make a demand upon my purse.

"But," he added, after a pause, "for some reason that for the life of me I can't comprehend, my wife has condescended to take an interest in this matter, and if you are not too consummately proud to receive the sum as a gift from her, why, it's at your disposal, that's all."

Eugene, who had once more started to his feet, fairly gasped for breath, and was obliged to hold on to the table for support. He made an effort to speak, but for the life of him could not utter a word.

"Forty devils!" exclaimed his uncle, gazing at him with undisguised astonishment. "What in the world is the matter with you? Is there anything so very wonderful in a soft-hearted woman's taking pity on such a one as you, and offering the assistance you crave?"

"I—I—it's so very unexpected, you see, sir."

"Hum. So that's it, eh? Well," offering him a hundred dollar bill, "here's the money, and I trust you will prove very grateful to Mrs. Elliston for this mark mark of her favor."

Eugene was torn with contending emotions. He dared not take the bill, for he knew his weakness, and felt that if he did he would be selling himself, body and soul, to the fair temptress. But, on the other hand, if he refused, what then would be the consequences? Terrible, he was sure. Yet, after an effort, he had decided.

"I—I cannot take the money, uncle, on such terms," he said. "All I asked of you was that, personally, you would lend me the sum for a specified time. I do not wish—in fact, I cannot, accept it from a woman—as a gift.

"I sincerely trust," he added, quickly, "that you understand my feelings in the matter, and will fully appreciate the motives that prompt me to decline Mrs. Elliston's proffered assistance."

"What, you beggar!" cried his uncle when he was able to speak. "Too proud to receive a present from my wife? I should think, then, it was about time you no longer accepted her hospitality."

"I was about to wish you good-evening and to withdraw," said Eugene, mildly.

"The sooner you're out of the house the better," growled the other.

The young man, with not the most agreeable sensations in the world, said "good-night," and took his departure.

It was now so late he did not think it best to repair to young Fielding's house, and more especially as he had no good news to communicate; so, with a desponding heart, he wandered about the streets for an hour, and then slowly made his way to his own room, where, without undressing, he threw himself upon his bed, not to sleep, but to think.

For an hour he lay there, scarcely moving, and had it not been for his wide-open, staring eyes, which were intently fixed upon the ceiling, one might have thought him sleeping; as it was, he more closely resembled the dead.

All at once, with a glad exclamation, he sprang out upon the floor, and turning up the gas, which he had left dimly burning, hurried to a trunk in one corner of the room, and, having selected a key from among several on a ring, quickly opened it.

After removing two trays, he thrust his hand down into a corner and brought up a leather-covered case, which, upon being opened, disclosed a splendid gold watch, set with jewels, and a solitaire diamond ring.

"These will do for his business," he murmured, softly; "but what is to become of me? No matter, with Ray out of this ticklish scrape, I can afford to wait for my beautiful enemy's next move," and then, after putting away the case and undressing, he sought his couch and was speedily fast asleep.

The next morning, some time before eight o'clock, he called at Fielding's house; and on his friend's hastening to the door to meet him, placed a hundred dollar bill in his hand.

"I have succeeded, you see," he simply said, "and now I will go and get something to eat."

"Stop! stop, Eugene," called Raymond, as his friend was hurrying away; "you must breakfast here; if you don't, Meta and I will never forgive you. Besides, I want to ask you a question. What makes you look so deathly pale?"

"No matter," said Eugene, hastily; then, in another tone:

"See here, Ray, I'll eat with you if you'll only hurry through your meal and let me alone. What I want, above all things now, is to see you straight with the bank. Do you understand?"

"Of course, of course; but tell me——"

"Not a word until lunch time, then I'll tell you everything."

"Well, you hard-hearted wretch, if that's your ultimatum, come along," and he led the way up to the sitting-room, where his sister soon joined them.

Meta Fielding was a sweet, innocent little thing, of but a trifle more than eighteen years—a girl that any man might be proud to call wife or sister.

From the first time her brother had brought Eugene to their home he had interested her greatly, and, truth to say, the young man felt a warm regard for her; in so much, indeed, that he had fallen into the habit of spending at least half his evenings in the apartments of his friend.

Breakfast did not detain them long this morning, and after it was over, they bid the sweet little housekeeper good-by, and hastened down town.

Eugene did not accompany his friend when he went to carry out the mission intrusted to him by the president the day before; but he knew he had succeeded when he saw his cheerful face as he entered the bank, and went to his desk about half an hour after the president arrived.

That morning Raymond Fielding worked with a happy heart; but, from time to time, as he glanced toward the assistant book-keeper, he was troubled to see a settled look of gloom upon his brow.

"What can possibly be the matter with him?" he asked of himself for the hundredth time. "Well, I shall find out at one o'clock. He will tell me everything then, so I must have patience and wait."

But he was to know something about it even before that hour.

It was a little past twelve, when, on casually looking up, he saw Mr. Elliston, Eugene's uncle, enter the bank. It was not a "board day," and he was therefore somewhat surprised to see him there.

The great man did not stop in the banking room, but passed through to the President's private apartment, where a quarter of an hour later, Eugene was requested to present himself.

He obeyed the summons at once, but was scarcely absent ten minutes. When he reappeared his face was deathly pale, and there was a stern, set expression about his features they had never worn before.

Raymond was greatly alarmed, and would have sprung to his side, but Eugene made a hurried gesture to deter him, and passing close by his desk, he rapidly whispered:

"Don't look up; don't move. It's best you shouldn't appear over-friendly with me. I've been discharged, and am going at once. Come to Gibbs' lunch-room at one o'clock. I'll be there, and tell you all about it. God bless you, old fellow!" And he passed on to his desk.

Briefly he explained to the head book-keeper, giving him no idea, however, of the actual facts; and before one o'clock he had turned over his books, received what was due him, and had left the bank.

He went directly to the lunch-room, where he knew the other employes of the bank were hardly likely to come; and having selected a table in a remote corner, prepared to wait for his friend.

Raymond did not keep him long waiting. Soon he entered the spacious room, and catching a glimpse of him in the far corner hastened to his side.

"Sit down," said the discharged book-keeper; and as the other took his seat, "what will you have?"

"Oh, anything, exclaimed Ray, impatiently; "it doesn't matter. But, I say, be quick, and tell me all about it."

Having given his order to the waiter, Eugene did tell him all; in fact, omitting very little indeed.

When he had finished, Raymond's face was almost as pale as his had been when he came from the President's room less than an hour before.

"And all this has been brought about through my consummate carelessness," muttered Raymond, regretfully.

"No, no, my dear fellow!" exclaimed Eugene, hastily; "you shall not take blame upon yourself that does not belong to you. I tell you this would have happened some time anyway; the thing had got to come. It was inevitable."

"You are going to be at home to-night?" asked Ray, abruptly, after a long pause.

"Yes."

"I'll call on you then."

"What? Shan't I see you before—that is, directly after banking hours?"

"No; I shall be engaged then."

"Oh, very well; and as I see your time's up, and as I have a little matter of my own on hand, I'll leave you for the present;" and so they parted.

A Soldier's Wish.

The popular Captain of Company G, Twelfth Vermont Regiment, was strolling in the woods just outside of camp one day during the war, says the Salem Witch, when he came upon a member of his company sitting on the stump of a tree and looking as though he had fought his last fight.

"What's the matter, Bill?" said the Captain.

"Oh, nothing," was the reply; "I'm all right."

"You look as though you had a bit of home-sickness."

"No, sir," said Bill, with some resentment, "nothing of the sort."

"Well, what are you thinking about?" asked the questioner.

"I was thinking," said the Vermonter, "that I wished I was in my father's barn!"

"In your father's barn? What on earth would you do if you were in your father's barn?"

The poor fellow uttered a long-drawn sigh and said:

"I'd go into the house mighty quick!"

RHODE ISLAND legislature last week elected a governor and all state officers, as there had been no election by the people. All the men elected are democrats.

OUR tariff was already higher than we needed. The McKinley bill makes it still higher. Money not needed, taken from those who do need it is worse than stealing.

A MAN has been arrested near Baltimore for selling whisky to farmers over the country at ten cents a drink, from bottles carried in his pockets. A sort of pocket saloon.

CARLISLE is now in the Senate. He occupies one of the seats that had been provided on the democratic side for the Montana democratic senators that never got their rights.

CARNEGIE the protected iron founder, has sailed to Europe last week. He has built a castle in Scotland and will remain there during the summer, and spend the money that "tariff to protect home industries" enabled him to take from the poor people here. When he returns, he will bring back an abundance of clothing and other articles made abroad. All for the benefit of home industries, you see.

JUDGE COFFEY, at the spring election voted a certificate of deposit for $125 on the bank of Brazil, this state. No wonder such a man on the supreme bench, makes wild decisions. It would appear a good idea for republicans to run a man for supreme judge who knows a ballot from a deposit certificate. Luckily, the new election law will take charge of such men, and compel them to vote a real ticket.

THE Cincinnati Commercial Gazette, is putting out the report that Michener, of Indiana is doing his best to capture the senatorship from Dan. Voorhees next winter. Michener is chairman of the republican state central committee, and one scheme he has, is to get control of the Farmers' Alliance in democratic and doubtful counties, and secure through them a republican member of the legislature, where there would naturally be a democrat. He expects to "fool the farmers" into supporting the monopoly crowd, that has been sapping their life blood for so long. But he will find the farmers are beginning to read and think for themselves.

WE HAVE received several circulars from interested parties in Kansas, asking us to write something in favor of free trade between this country and Mexico, but more especially to favor the letting free into this country of the lead and silver ores of Mexico. This plaintive cry is laughable in view of the fact that Kansas people have been voting about two to one in favor of this very policy, that they now ask to be relieved of. They are still willing to vote a tariff on all the rest of the country, but when it comes to the products of Mexico, they want free trade. Why? Because a half dozen or so of Kansas people, are putting up mills to reduce these ores, and they want to get them as cheap as they can. That is all right. They ought to have them cheap. But first let them show a disposition to relieve the whole people of this enormous burden of tariff taxation. Then we will give them credit for honesty of purpose. If Kansas will help us to down several thousand other steals in the same list, we will help them to down this one. Till they do this, we can only stand off and laugh.

Convention Notes.

George Morell, of Waterloo, wrote on a postal card two weeks before the convention and gave it to Mr. Moody, the names of the candidates he thought would win. He had them all right, but one, his list containing the name of Mr. Getts instead of Mr. Williams.

The new law had a good effect, for only a little treating was done. They were afraid they would be caught at it. We saw but two drunk men. One was a stranger and the other was Hank Little, editor of the Garrett Clipper, who had taken too much of the platform on which his politics always depends. In the evening, however, two or three drunks were reported one of whom was arrested. But all in all it was a very quiet convention, at least in the daytime.

The presiding officers were a positive success, and the delegates and audience deserve praise for the good order maintained. Everybody seemed to be in earnest.

It pains the COURIER deeply to see good democrats defeated, but there were not places for all. Some of the men who got left, were the mainstay of the party, and had been for a generation. They deserved a better fate.

Grant township got coroner. She might have had recorder, no doubt, but for bad work of her delegates in not sticking together. They had but one candidate for clerk, and one for treasurer. On the first ballot, they gave the clerk but 13 votes in 24. On the second, they gave him but 7 and on the third, none, though other townships gave him votes. With treasurer, it was about the same; 12 on first ballot and 7 on second. This want of agreement, no doubt lost their influence. The Auburn delegation did but little better, but except on representative, were hampered by a number of candidates for each office.

Now let us talk up the primary election system. Let the people, singly, cast a secret ballot for the candidates of their choice, and not leave the work to delegates, who will turn in and help the leaders to make combines that the people had never thought of.

"Floo" for "Floo."

The editor of the Garrett Clipper was still on his big drunk Monday evening, when he tried to trade his "influence" for Marshal Headley's influence. The marshal had marched him home the night before, and now he came into Rainier & Headley's meat market, and gave Mr. Rainier to understand that hereafter, the Clipper's valuable(?) patronage would all come to R. & H. Of course this was to get the marshal's good will and be secure from arrest when drunk. As Mr. Rainier objects to having his meat slobbered over, the bargain was not made. And the disgusted editor(?) wobbled off to seek greener pastures and stronger drink. When our reporter last saw him that evening he was arguing with one of the new electric light poles, "busted 'er ring, did'nt we (hic) and got 'em there in (hic) good shape." And then he waddled down South Jackson, grumbling, "las' time 'er can go this sreet 'runk. New 'lectric lights up fore 'at time. Mus' blow ,em up in Clipper nex' week." But he didn't get far, for he and some boon companions tumbled over onto the grass under the trees by the new Kiblinger factory, and kept the people in the vicinity awake for hours with their foul talk. Finally a lady was compelled to open her door and order them away. The marshal or the night watch, or both, should keep an eye on this clump of trees. Decent citizens object to having the editor of the Clipper use it for such purposes, especially when he is all the time lying about everything in Auburn. The editor and general windjammer of the Garrett Clipper, must be run in and fined a few times more. Decent people must be protected.

Circus Coming.

The largest, the brightest and the best show on earth. Over 300 men, women, ponies and horses. Charles Bartine's Grand Circus, Menagerie, Museum, Wild West and Trained Animal Shows will exhibit at Auburn, Monday, June 9, afternoon and evening. A brilliant and unparalleled one-ring circus, comprising a troupe of autocratic champions whose supremacy as artists none dispute. None but choice, acceptable features ever presented in our vast canvas inclosures. Everywhere indorsed as a show of the people, and for the people, not a pretentious exhibition, advertising much and displaying little, but giving dollar for dollar in amusement in return for the people's money, offering an endless array of artistic acts and exploits, introduced by the best troupe of lady and gentlemen equestrians, acrobats, gymnasts, equilibrimists, jugglers, leapers, tumblers, vaulters, posturers, clowns, vocalists and high-wire performers in the profession. A grand special feature—our group of imported trained Barbary coursers and bronchos. A display of equine beauty. They dance in perfect time to music, fetch and carry, play at see-saw, leap over barriers and each other, project revolving globes, leap through circles of flame, go through a military drill with soldierly precision and finish, and execute many other marvelous evolutions and amusing tricks and gambols. In fact, they do everything but speak, and exhibit a syries of accomplishments as astonishing as they are charming and amusing. Strange beasts, elephants, camels, from strange lands, arenic amazements, equestrian cyclone, aerial marvels, gymnic miracles, beautiful birds, new ring features, educated stallions, pretty trained ponies, Samsonian lifts, museum wonders, Hindoo snake charmers, Arabian jugglers, titanic giants, diminutive dwarfs, boneless wonders, living skeletons, bearded women, and a countless array of special and exclusive features. Free street parade at 11 o'clock on day of exhibition.

Increasing the Farmers' Burdens.

The McKinley bill will impose a tax of from $2 to $2.50 on every ton of manufactured fertilizers used by our farmers. Now the farmers of the country cannot stand these figures. We use 2,000,000 tons of these fertilizers a year. The bill, therefore, proposes to rob the farmers of more than $4,000,000 annually. At present the sulphuric acid used in the manufacture of fertilizers is free. Very little is imported. The manufacturers are making money. The government needs no additional revenue. Why tax this necessary article? If the government draws this $4,000,000 a year from the pockets of the farmers it will be to benefit forty or fifty manufacturers whose thousand or so workingmen will receive no higher wages. This is another attempt to tax the masses for the classes. There is neither reason nor justice in it.—Atlanta Constitution.

Board of Equalization Meeting.

Notice is hereby given, that there will be a meeting of the DeKalb County Board of Equalization, at the Auditor's office, in Auburn, on Monday, June 16, 1890,

The same being the third Monday in June, for the purpose of hearing and adjusting any grievances that may exist in the matter of assessments, and all persons having such grievances are notified to meet them then and there.

By order of the Board.

C. C. WALTER, Auditor.

Auburn, Indiana, June 2, 1890.

CORRESPONDENCE.

WATERLOO.

Strawberries only ten cents a quart.

Bartine's Show is billed for Waterloo June 7th.

Mrs. Will Braun visited relatives here last week.

Eli Frick has raised the grade of his yard on Franklin street.

The family of Judge McBride left for their new home in Elkhart last Tuesday.

F. A. Hotchkin went to Salina, Mich., last week to attend the funeral of his mother.

John Campbell has rented Judge McBride's house, intending to make it his residence shortly.

Mrs. Will Bigler, of Elkhart, has been here a few days visiting her people and the old neighbors.

Miss Ada Williamson, who has been at Denver, Col., for a year or more, is expected home sometime this month.

Rev. D. B. Keller will hold the fourth quarterly meeting in the U. B. church of this place on Saturday and Sunday, June 21 and 22.

Monday afternoon and evening of this week the streets were very lively. Many strangers were in town and many from the country.

The Children's Concert that was to be held in the U. B. church next Sunday evening has been postponed to Sunday evening, June 22.

Monday evening "Uncle Tom's Cabin" drew a big crowd, notwithstanding, this or a similar company have visited the town many times before.

Mrs. Henry Rempis, Mrs. J. A. Dennison, Miss Mattie Maxson, Isaac Speer and D. D. Miser are the delegates to represent the U. B. Sabbath school at the county convention.

J. C. Boyer and wife have been absent for some days to attend the funeral of a sister of Mr. Boyer, a few miles from Sandusky, Ohio. They returned Monday evening of this week.

Waterloo is said to be improving more this season than for many years before. If some leave, their place is at once filled by others. Every dwelling is occupied and there is a demand for more houses.

Many of the peach trees that budded last winter and again budded and blossomed this spring, are now with peaches on as large as hazelnuts, showing symptoms of dying. Some, however, look perfectly healthy.

The firm of Jackman & Waterman, engaged extensively in the furniture business, are also proprietors of the opera house, which they have made arrangements to have newly painted and repapered. Of course this will be an improvement.

Mr. Nunemaker, of Mt. Pleasant, was in town last week. He is engaged quite extensively in the fur business, and exhibited some very fine specimens of fur dressed by a new process that is patented and of which he is the inventor. He is said to be more than an ordinary linguist. He not only speaks fluently the English, German and French, but three Indian languages besides.

On Monday morning last Philander Livergood attempted to discharge a gun which had been heavily loaded, when the barrel burst, shattering his hand so badly that he came to town, when Dr. Broughton amputated the two center fingers. The other fingers and hand were quite badly mangled. The tube of the gun was blown out, striking him on the forehead and making a painful wound.

Decoration day was observed as usual in Waterloo. The band was out. At the opera house a speech was made and some recitations given, after which, those having the decorating in charge marched to the cemetery and concluded the exercises there. It has become quite a habit for those having friends buried there to strew flowers on their graves the evening before the soldiers' graves are decorated.

CONCORD.

Carma Gifford spent last week in Ft. Wayne.

Mrs. R. Culbertson is improving slightly.

Miss Ada Widney's school closed last Thursday.

Henry Strong and wife, of southern Nebraska, and Andy Harrod and wife, of Newville, visited Mrs. N. Wyatt Thursday last.

Wednesday last was the 50th wedding anniversary of Mr. and Mrs. E. Strong, of Newville. Relatives from here attended and report a very good time. They wore the same boquets they wore 50 years ago. The entire family were present, except his sister, Mrs. Nancy Wyatt, whose health was too feeble to permit.

CEDAR CREEK.

Buy your salt of O. C. Hines at $1.00 a barrel.

F. Holman expects to move to Detroit in the near future.

The family of P. Weaver entertained friends last Sunday.

Mrs. Miller's new house is rapidly nearing completion.

Our town being principally democratic was well represented at Auburn Saturday last.

The road supervisor is again reminding the boys that the roads need a little repair.

Decoration Day was duly observed at Cedar Chapel Sunday last and a large crowd was in attendance.

Holman and Hines have finished their inventory and Mr. Hines has taken his position behind the counter with a defiant air which plainly says that he does not intend to be undersold nor allow anyone to pay more for produce than he does.

SUMMIT.

Mrs. Ida Boyer visited Mrs. Viola Snowberger one day last week.

Quite a number of our people attended the convention at Auburn Saturday.

Joseph Penick and wife visited friends in Butler last Saturday and Sunday.

Henry Henslee has bought the property of J. P. Wiant (dec.) at Butler Center.

A. McKinley is bringing a fine lot of goods to town. DeKalb is the town to come to for groceries, etc.

The little child of Geo. Wygandt has scarlet fever, but is better at present. Persons having small children should be careful.

Decoration was attended by a large crowd. With an able speaker, beautiful weather and a pleasant grove, all seemed to enjoy the occasion.

WELL BRED SOON WED.
Girls who use SAPOLIO are QUICKLY MARRIED.

SAPOLIO is one of the best known city luxuries and each time a cake is used an hour is saved. On floors, tables and painted work it acts like a charm. For scouring pots, pans and metals it has no equal. If your store-keeper does not keep it you should insist upon his doing so, as it always gives satisfaction and its immense sale all over the United States makes it an almost necessary article to any well supplied store. Everything shines after its use, and even the children delight in using it in their attempts to help around the house.

B. & O. Excursions.

The Baltimore and Ohio Railroad announces the following excursion rates, for May and June:

For the meeting of the National Educational Association to be held at St. Paul, Minn., tickets will be sold June 28th to July 5, good returning until July 15th. Or by depositing the return portion of ticket with the St. Paul terminal lines, the return limit will be extended to Sept. 30th at the rate of one first-class limited fare for the round trip, plus $2.00 membership fee.

Decoration Day.

The day, for a wonder, was fair, and nothing but the unusual heat made those who participated, in any way uncomfortable. The people first gathered at the Opera House, where the program of exercises was carried out as announced. After it was over the procession marched to the cemetery, where the graves of all soldiers were decorated. Among those taking part, were the Rifle Squad, who marched very neatly, and whose firing at the mound in the cemetery, drew out many complimentary remarks. The march back to town closed ceremonies of the day. There were a hundred or so veterans in the procession and together with the W. R. C. and S. of V. made a long line. Many of the old veterans begin to show signs of age, and it will not be many years before their comrades will be called on to strew flowers on their graves.

Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly.

Frederic Arthur Bridgeman, the Orientalist painter, is characterized by Mrs. Schuyler Van Rensselaer, in Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly for June, as a typical American artist, because in art, "just now, it is the cosmopolite who is typical, the thorough-paced American who is exceptional." Some admirable engravings and fac-similes of Mr. Bridgman's pictures are given. Another notable attraction of this number is a profusely illustrated article on that "mile of history," the Bowery, of New York city, by Felix Oldboy, the well-known local historian, who seems to have inherited Irving's charm of style and fund of Gotham-lore. Other interesting illustrated articles are: "The Life of a Longshoreman," Dr. Guernsey's concluding paper on "Frederick the Great" "Woman Wearers of Men's Clothes," "A Mysterious and Dreaded Saurian" (the Gila Monster), "The Last of the Mobicans," and "Traveling by Air." The short stories, poems, literary and other miscellany, supplied in the abundance which is characteristic of this magazine, make up an uncommonly rich number.

The friends of James Russell Lowell are alarmed at the slowness with which he recuperates from his recent illness.

The Use of Books.

There is no more satisfactory pleasure in life than that derived from a love for good books, for they are safe guides in the days of our youth, and a source of comfort in after years. A book is our best and most steadfast companion at all times and in all places. A person may be known by the books they read as well as by the company they keep, for there is a companionship of books as well as of friends. A good book can always be relied upon as the best of friends; it is the same to-day that it always was, and it will never change. Friendship may wane, but the friendship of books will never fail. A good book does not turn its back upon us in times of distress and adversity, but always receives us with the same kindness, amusing and instructing us at all times.

The indelible stamp left upon the mind by reading good books will always survive. Books introduce us into the best society, and bring us into the presence of the greatest authors that have ever lived. We hear what they said and see what they did, as if they were still living. A book is like a spirit walking upon the face of the earth, it continues to be the living thought of a friend separated from us by time. Friends pass away, time vanishes, but human thoughts survive. How often I recall the days spent at the Institution at Indianapolis, and how eagerly I looked forward to each Saturday evening, when we were permited to enter the Library and select a book, and how I scanned the long rows of shelves till I came across the one of my choice. Those days are past and gone forever, yet some of the stories I read in the Ladies' Repository, etc., are as fresh in my mind as they were a few years ago. Friends often discover their infinity to each other by a mutual love for a book and I often recall the evenings Core and I spent together talking over what we had read. There is an old proverb: "Love me, love my dog." But there is more wisdom in this: "Love me, love my book," for the book is a truer and higher bond of union. Shakespeare is not dead, though his body was buried years ago. His works are immortal and will never die. But all books are not good. The bad book like the good, will live long years after its author is dead. Wicked authors, even though in their graves, continue to murder the souls of those who survive, especially the young.

Of all the luxuries we can enjoy, good books are the cheapest, and most convenient, and it seems to me they are the most important to conditions where coarse labor tends to give a coarseness to the mind. I think if parents would provide their children with good books and music, instead of allowing them any book they choose, they would have less to complain about their sons and sometimes their daughters spending their evenings out. I often look back to the time I could hear, and to the pleasant evenings we used to spend around the old fire place. Pa, with his fiddle, and ma her dulcimer, and all join in singing, or listen to some story pa had to to tell, or a romp with us children. Those times are past, and all that were then in the family have left, while I have been stricken with deafness. Yet, often in fancy, I can hear their voices yet.

Oh sing again those good old songs,
That old familiar strain.
It awakens tones remembered long,
I ne'er shall hear again.

Oh, sing it! sing it! but once more,
Each note to me is dear,
It awakens tones remembered long,
I ne'er shall hear again.

MRS. JENNIE DICKINSON.

Obituary.

Mattie Eve Swander was born October 24, 1874, and died at her home in Richland township, May 30, 1890, at the age of 15 years, 7 months and 6 days. She was laid to rest in the cemetery at Richland Center, on Sunday June 1, Rev. Pattee of the Lutheran charge of Fairfield officiating on the sad occasion. Her worth and the esteem in which she was held, were attested by the crowds of friends who came that day to pay their last tribute of respect. Dear Hattie is no more—is absent from home—from Sunday school, but present with the angels.

Go to thy rest, fair child,
Go to thy dreamless bed;
While yet so gentle, undefiled,
With blessing on thy head.

Fresh roses in thy hand,
Buds on thy pillow laid.
Go from this dark and dreary land,
Where flowers so quickly fade.

Hushed is the household,
Angels have come,
And borne our loved daughter
To her heavenly home.

Dear parents, and brother,
Weep not for me;
In my heavenly home,
So happy I'll be.

The Practical Extinction of Small Pox.

Dr. Cyrus Edson in the June Forum.

About 30,000 children are vaccinated annually by the physicians of the Board of Health in New York City. Adults who request it are also vaccinated. The operation is performed upon from 80,000 to 90,000 persons every year. The vaccinating corps of the Health Department was organized in 1874. The result of its work was not apparent until 1876. The deaths from small pox previous to 1876 averaged 59.57 per 100,000 per year; since 1876 they have averaged 8.38 per 100,000 per year, and this average is being yearly reduced. During the past sixteen months we have had only two cases of the disease in New York City. One of these cases occurred in the most thickly populated part of the city, where the number of inhabitants per acre is greater than any other spot in the world; yet so well was the neighborhood protected that not a single case occurred among the many that were exposed.

Lord Tennyson is described in a recent letter as still weak, but able to drive out in the sunshine, from which he derives much good.

On Thursday of last week, John Lumm, one of our fellow townsmen, was promoted to Section Foreman. He will endeavor by manipulating the "shovel and pick," to keep the LaOtto section in as good trim as it has been kept in former years. Long experience should be valuable in this case above all others. The eyes should not be trifled with. An eye once lost can never be restored and great care should be taken to preserve them. Mr. Porter stands at the head of his profession in this special department. Don't trust your eyes to inexperienced or careless men, but call on him when here and get glasses such as you need. Don't forget the dates, the first Tuesday of each month. tf

Married: At the residence of the officiating minister, Elder James Barton, in Richland township, June 1, 1890, Mr. Frank Draime to Miss Ida Barton. Both are residents of the county, the latter being, we believe, Mr. Barton's daughter. We send congratulations to the fortunate young couple,

There are about twenty little misses, and a few little lads who have tricycles, and on pleasant evenings they swarm on the walks of the public square, and on the wide esplanade around it. It is innocent amusement for them and the older pedestrians can afford to give them a full share of these fine walks.

The work of removing the M. E. church has begun. It will be taken north and allowed to remain in the street so it can be used till the new one is ready. The parsonage will be moved to the north end of the lot where the church now stands. The new church will cost about $15,000 and be the finest in town.

Miss Maud Lamson, of Bryan, and Miss Harding, of Butler, were here Monday, and made a brief call on the editor's family. The former is a relative, being the daughter of Dr. Ferdinand Lamson, whose father Andrew Lamson, used to reside in Butler. Both young ladies teach music and were on their way to their classes in Garrett,

Horace A. Wilcox died at the residence of his sister, Mrs. Roxana Davenport last Thursday evening after a brief illness. His home was in Middlebury, Conn. Laborers in the City of Mexico have struck, because the authorities insist on making them wear pants, even in hot weather. We are waiting to hear from Sam Pepple, who runs a train out of that city. But we have faith in Sam. At least he used to dress like the rest of us when he lived here.

The town council has given the contract for caring for the town team, to Joe Pfefferl again for another year. Correct. But what becomes of the great "pull" or "floo" of the Garrett Howler? And Joe was the man they were going to cut wide open for having the "editor" arrested and fined for drunkenness.

J. L. Davis had another letter last week from J. J. VanAuken with the surveying party. They had then reached Westville, and had found a place where several miles of roadbed is already graded. This is a part of the old Canada Southern. They will finish the work this week.

The commissioners last week let the contracts for building several good bridges. They are to be of iron and will last a life time. If our old ones had been of iron, they would still be good. The old bridges were sold to the contractors, and will save a few hundred dollars. Wheelock gets the most of the contracte.

The second section of the M. E. church will give a social on the parsonage lawn Saturday evening, June 7, to which all are cordially invited. Bill of fare, strawberries, ice cream, coffee and cake, mite 20 cts. Those not wanting the entire supper can have ice cream and cake for 10 cents, or strawberries and cake 10 cts.

Mrs. Josie Brown, Sec'y.

Elmore Miller who has been working for the Trentman factory in the south end for nearly two years, left Monday for Ashtabula, Ohio, where he has a good position in the Ashtabula Tool Works. Mr. Miller is a steady industrious and model young man, and his friends here wish him abundant success in his new home.

The enterprising firm of Shultz and Beard have taken the contract of making 200 of the Boyer patent gate. This is sufficient guarantee that they will be made in the best possible manner as the firm is composed of practical mechanics. A good thing, well made and sold cheap is the principle that is making the Boyer gate a decided success. 1t

A writer in the Lagrange Standard last winter, made the silly assertion that, "had it not been for a protection of 15 cents a bushel," he, the farmer mentioned, "would not have been able to put a potato on the market last fall." It is no wonder that in a county whose leading republican paper teaches such absurd stuff, a majority of the farmers vote to tax themselves for the benefit of eastern capitalists.

We devoted some space two or three weeks ago to a notice of a second attack on Judge McClellan, by the correspondent who dishes up news from this state for the Cincinnati Commercial Gazette. There seems to be a concerted plan among certain republicans, to help the correspondent get up these articles and send the papers broadcast in this congressional district, and especially into this county. They are moving heaven and earth to secure as many congressmen and members of the legislature as they can, so as to control the next Congress. And they think such letters as this, though false, will get democrats to quarreling. This is the way they always take to win a campaign. It will not succeed however. The scheme is too well understood. We are not able to say who gives the correspondent the points on which he writes, or whether anyone gives them to him. He has never been here, nor has he indicated who helped him, or who sent the items to him. Our own people do not know of any one here who has assisted him. The only man so far, that anyone has suggested is Senator Ensley, now residing at Indianapolis, where he is state pension agent. The letters to the Gazette, are all dated at that city, and from the fact that there has been some rivalry in business as well as in politics between Mr. Ensley and Judge McClellan, gives color to the surmise that he is assisting in this dirty work. We can hardly believe this however, and shall not condemn Mr. Ensley till he has a chance to be heard. He owes a duty to his neighbors and friends here, to both parties, to come out squarely in this matter, and either deny it as we hope he can successfully, or else shoulder the responsibility.

Mrs. G. W. Weamer and children, have returned from a visit with relatives at Bristol, Ind.

Mrs. Culbertson, W. B. Brown's mother is still in a critical condition, being partly paralyzed.

The nicest and most refreshing drink for the season, is the orange wine at Salyer's ice cream parlors, north of public square.

B. F. Stahl, the "south end" barber, has papered his shop in very neat style, and his customers will find everything pleasant and comfortable.

Billy Little is helping to keep court lively by assisting the sheriff as riding bailiff. Billy is wide awake and reliable and will make a good record.

Married at the residence of the groom's brother, in Auburn, May 24, by Rev. H. M. Lamport, Mr. W. M. Trowbridge, to Mrs. Jennie Betts.

The wife of J. C. Henry's brother, together with her daughter, has been visiting Mr. H. a few days. Her home is in California, at Oakland, we believe.

"Wanted a good gentleman or lady to act as general agent for two or three counties on an A No. 1 patent, apply to F. W. Colson, Mgr. Society for Savings Building, Cleveland, Ohio.

P. J. Lockwood arrived in town yesterday from Washington. He reports the DeKalb folks as flourishing down at the Capital city, and is himself looking he pi cture of good health.

John Rohrabaugh, of Fairbury, Nebraska, sends out a years subscription, with the brief instruction, "send it right along." The old DeKalb boys all remember the Courier and the folks at home.

J. A. Potter caught a 6-lb. pike in the creek at the Morningstar bridge Monday evening. He informs our fish-story editor that six persons ate of it at breakfast, and then there was enough left to fill several small baskets.

Walter Hartman started for Dakota yesterday morning for a month's visit with friends at Highmore in that state. He had also been over at Findlay, Ohio, to see his sister, Mabel. She and her teacher, Mrs. Oliver are well.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Holman, of Cedar Creek, came in the other day to bid us good by. They are going to locate in Detroit. We are always sorry to see such good citizens leave the county. But we hope they will prosper.

As seen by a notice elsewhere, H. J. Shafer has abandoned the bachelor business and settled down to housekeeping with one of the best young ladies in Auburn, Miss Zora Baird. We extend the heartiest congratulations.

Married: at the residence of the bride's mother, on Thursday, May 29th. by Rev. H. M. Lamport, Mr. Charles A. Spake and Miss Ina G. Burke. The newly married pair, took the evening train north, for a few days of pleasure on Lake James.

C. R. Wiley of Wolf Lake, came over with the Garrett delegation Saturday. He was there with his wife, visiting their daughter, Mrs. E. B. Thumma. Mr. Wiley is an old-time friend of the Courier folks and was gladly welcomed, even for so brief a visit.

A letter from Bro. Sheffer of the Kendallville News says that Judge Adair was nominated by acclamation at the Judicial convention at Albion. Saturday, and Lon. D. Flemming, of Ligonier. for prosecutor. It is a good ticket, and will no doubt be elected.

Married: in their own home on West Seventh street on Tuesday, June 3rd, by Rev H. M. Lamport, Mr. Henry J. Shafer to Miss Zorah M. Baird. Mr. and Mrs. Shafer had the home in readiness before the ceremony, and are now "at home," to their friends, on West Seventh street.

P. J. Lockwood, who is just from Washington, speaks in terms of the highest respect of Congressmen McClellan. He says we have never had a better or abler man to represent this district. He is a hard worker, always at his post, and has great influence with his fellow members. He says that above all, the old soldiers ought to appreciate him, for no one, has been as successful in assisting them.

The premium lists for the Auburn Fair are out and in our judgment it is the tastiest premium list ever got out in this part of the state. It was paid for mainly in advertising, and as a proof of the liberality of our people in this line. The good patronage it got in this way, enabled the printers to use good paper, and take other pains they could not afford to take, if they felt they had a slim margin. It is the work of the Dispatch office, and does them credit.

Mrs. Wm. Treesh, now a resident of Brookline, Greene Co. Mo., has been here a few days visiting relatives near the old home in Richland township. Her husband is a son of the late Peter Treesh, and they have been west about eight years. She has also been to see a sick sister who resides in Ohio. Tuesday evening she started home accompanied by her neice, Miss Alda Treesh, who will spend a part of the summer with them. We wish them a pleasant journey.

Frank P. Blair, son of Gen. Blair of Waterloo, and at one time connected with the Courier has been promoted, as will be seen by the following from the Laporte Argus. "It is a deserved tribute to a faithful employe: F. P. Blair has been installed day ticket agent at the Lake Shore depot and he will discharge the duties of that office in conjunction with his position as telegraph operator. Mr. Blair is a capable, courteous and accomodating young man, and we predict that he will make a very popular official and give general satisfaction to the public. No better appointment could have been made, and a large circle of friends will be glad to hear of his advancement."

The Dispatch is getting a little wild over the finances of the "bankrupt town" in which it has cast its lot. It is remarkable, what a head the Dispatch has! About every city treasurer we have had for years, has made so many "errors" etc. How could these poor fellows avoid making "errors" with no Dispatch man in town to instruct them? That's the question. But we're all right now. The Dispatch says we have Sheffer to save money for us. It says Sheffer saved us $25 by making a motion to pay that sum for wings to the new bridge. As we had ordered no wings at all up to that date, it looks as if Sheffer's motion just cost us $25 more than we had agreed on before. Will the Dispatch explain? Its figures are such funny little things, they seem to lie a little. Then that debt. In its reports of this spring, we note the bonded debt for the school house, $6,000 is reckoned in as a part of the debt, and very properly. But we have owed this for many years, only it stood at about $10,000. Why did not the Dispatch add it to the $206 debt of 1886, and so on down? Yes, the Dispatch's articles on this subject are very "silly."

The Ticket.

Like a loyal democratic paper, we hoist to the masthead today the ticket nominated at the convention last Saturday. It is not for us to say who should, or who should not have been nominated. That was for the convention to decide. It was for that purpose that we selected delegates. It is democratic to accept the ticket they gave us. We feel assured that this will be done. The men are all known, and if they were not, a brief sketch of each was given in the Courier of May 1, from which our people can refresh their memory, if they have not done so already. The democrats have a majority in this county of 200 to 300, and if they fail to elect this ticket, it will be their fault. The candidates are all capable, and it is not likely the republicans will put up any better men. Go in, boys, and win!

Auburn vs Ft. Wayne.

Yesterday witnessed the first game of ball this season in the Park. The contestants were the Auburn Greys vs the Ft. Wayne Rivals. The game was a good one up to the last half of the seventh inning, when our boys had a real walk-away with the Rivals, making seven runs, which with their seven runs before, made a total of 14 to 5 in favor of the Greys. Here the game closed. The weather was too hot for visitors, thus the gate receipts were small. Some remarkably good work was done by the Greys, but for want of space and time we cannot give a lengthy notice this time.

Court.

The work is going on slowly. G. W. Gordon and Nathan Sebring each has a case for damages against the B. & O. road, but it has not progressed far. Nicholas Ensley and W. P. Harter vs G. M. Crane, on note, got a judgment of $227.67. Emma L. vs Robert Baltisby, divorce was granted her and custody of child. Same with case of Kate vs Franklin Forney. Joseph Miller was also granted a divorce from his wife Ida. Grant Shreeves got $1.00 and costs on charge of larceny, and had added 20 days in jail and was disfranchised for two years. Work still goes on. The grand jury is still grinding away.

Commissioners.

They have had a big time, getting through, or partly through a lot of work. But not much of it is in shape to report. The ditch work is nearly done. Wednesday several licenses were granted. Some time has been given to the arrangement of election precincts, which we will publish next week, none of this being now completed. Together with selecting new inspectors for the most of these precincts, it will hurry the Commissioners to get through in the nine days allowed by law. W. H. Dills was appointed county attorney for the coming year. Will secure a complete report for next week.

THE NATION'S MARTYR.

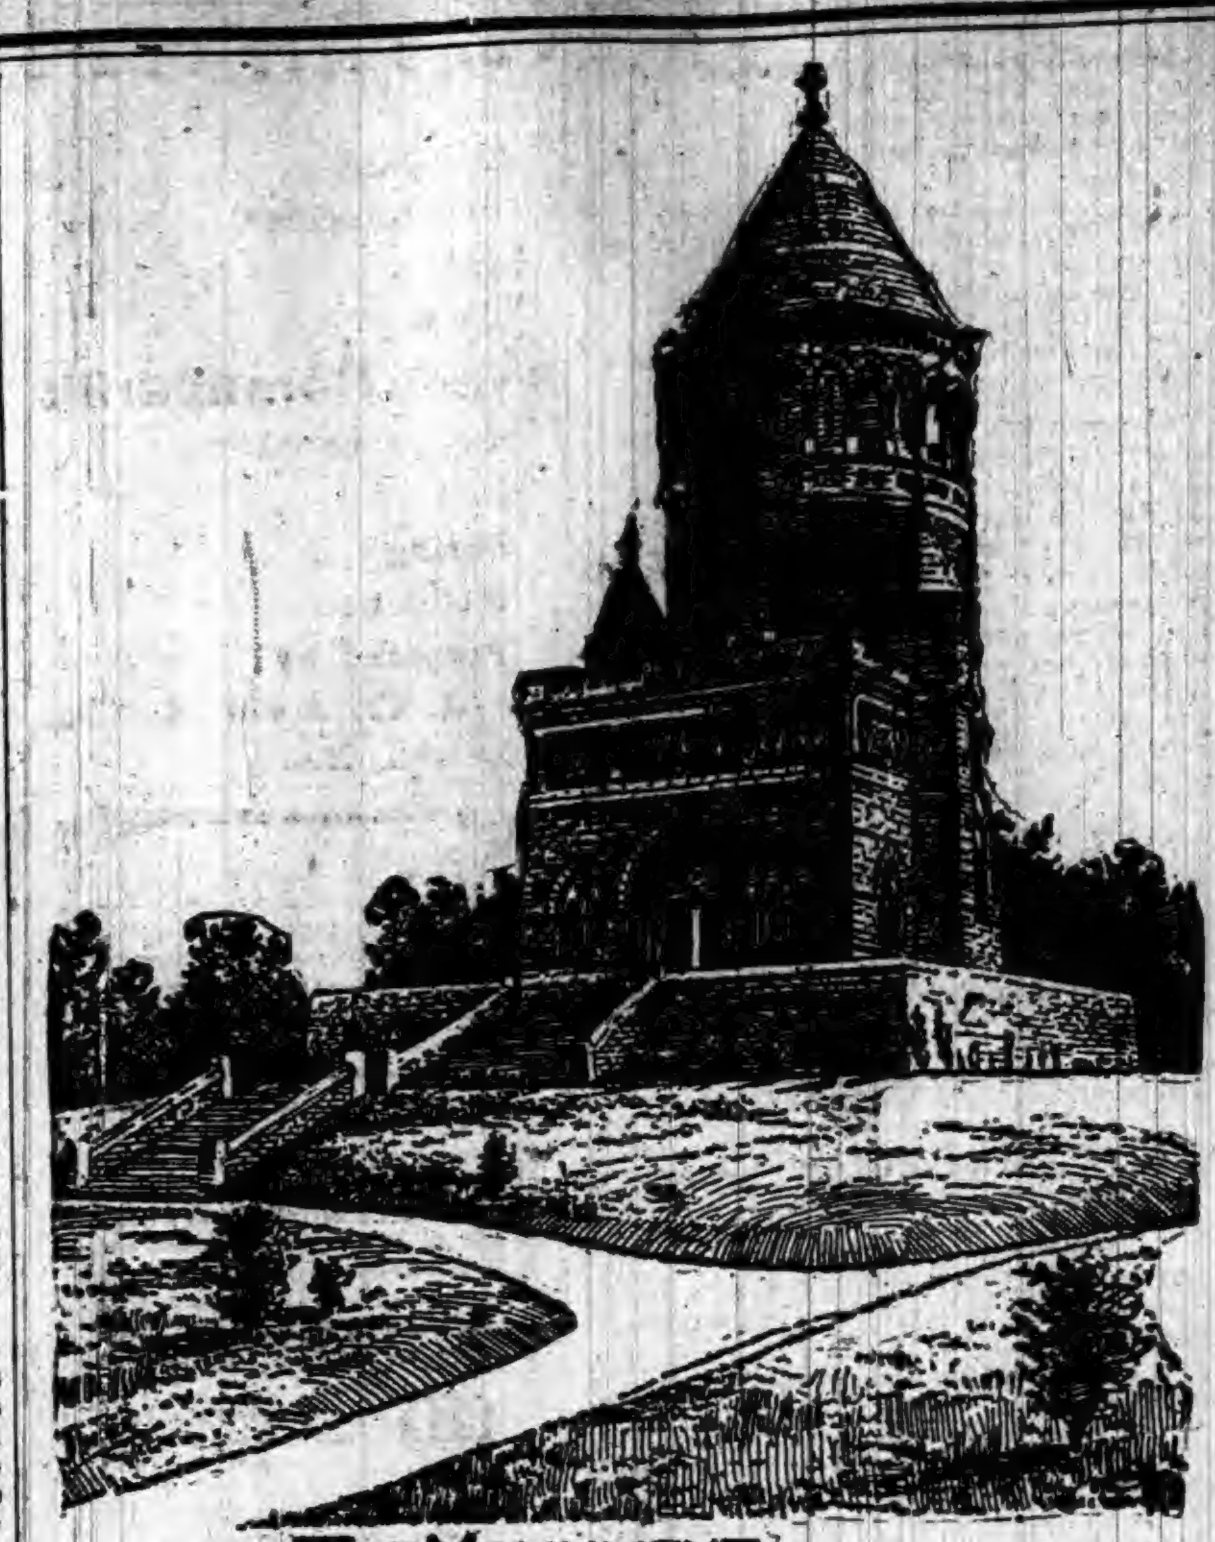
THE GARFIELD MONUMENT DEDICATED AT CLEVELAND.

Solemn and Imposing Ceremonies Incident to the Occasion—Tens of Thousands Participate in the Parade and Are Present at the Dedication.

A Cleveland special, dated the 30th ult., says: In the presence of a vast multitude and with all the pomposity, but albeit solemnity befitting the occasion, the memorial erected by the contributions of a grateful country to the honor of James Abram Garfield, a canal boat boy, school-teacher, soldier, statesman, and President, was formally dedicated to-day. Of the tens of thousands that were gathered upon the greensward of Lake View Cemetery there were many that had journeyed from far distant points to pay their last tribute of respect to the memory of the second of America's presidents who met his end by the bullet of the assassin. Two-thirds of the states and territories were represented in that throng. Upon the platform the nation itself, in the person of its chief magistrate and three of his constitutional advisors lent recognition and countenance to the event, while the other side to the picture, the widow and children of him whom all had met to honor, looked down upon the scene with mingled feelings of pride and sadness.

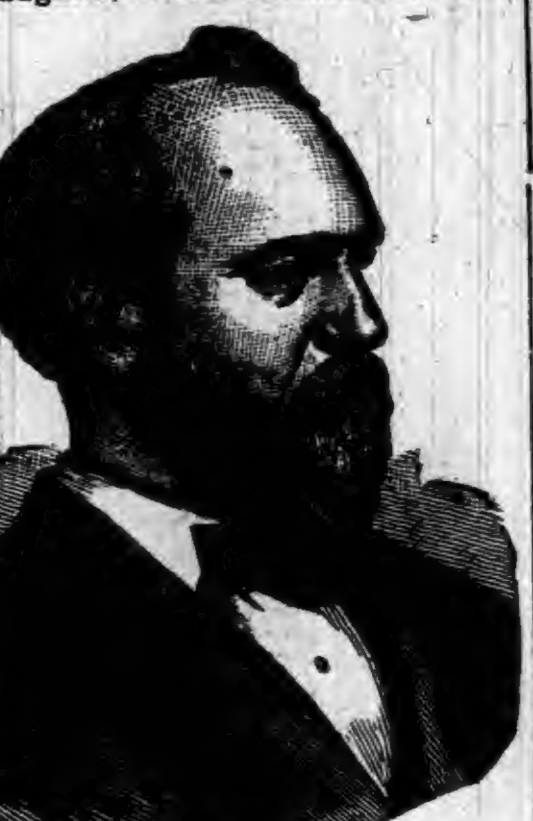
By 9 o'clock pedestrianism on Superior street and Euclid avenue was next door to an impossibility. Business in the city was entirely suspended and it seemed as though two-thirds of the quarter million of inhabitants of the city had turned out en masse to fraternise with the fifty thousand or more visitors from outside points, who, according to the best estimates, had arrived within the past twenty-four hours. Still, however, the inpour from the depots continued, and the hotels, restaurants, and eating-booths were besieged by hungry mortals who cared not what they got, took a bite and drinks so long as they could get it.

Just as the hands of the big clock at Ontario street pointed to noon, Chief Marshal Gen. Barnett gave the word for the head of the column to move from Erie. A trumpet blast and in a moment a hundred veterans, ten abreast, wheeled around the corner and up the avenue. Some were in Grand Army uniforms and some in civilian's attire. At the head they carried two tattered and faded battle flags, one of which had been shot through and through until scarcely an entire piece the size of a child's hand remained. The thousands on the streets, windows and roofs caught sight of the veterans, and a yell went up that never ceased until two hours later, when the head of the column, footsore and weary, passed through the arch at the entrance to the cemetery. From beginning to end the parade was nearly six miles long.

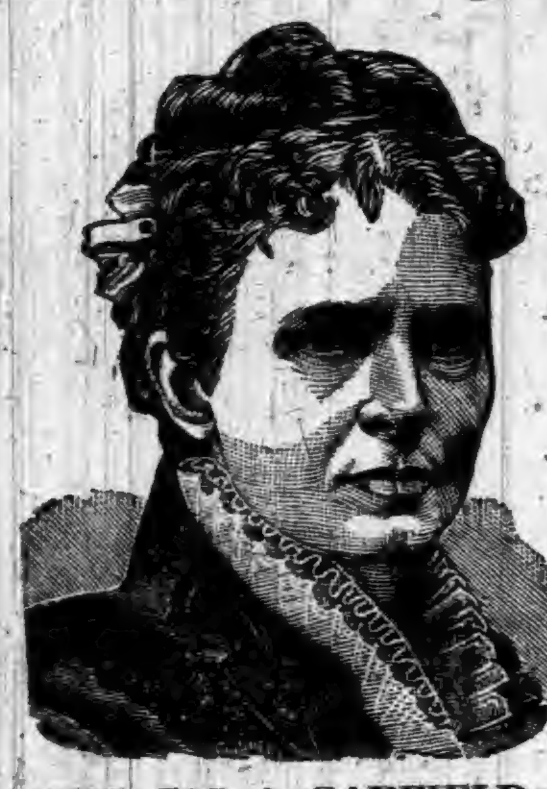


·THE MONUMENT.·

It was then 2 o'clock, and twenty minutes later the President and party reached the grand stand. Fully 30,000 people had gathered around the memorial, although the parade was still in progress, while those who had been viewing it from the thoroughfares poured in like an unresistless torrent. Little time was lost in seating the visitors. Mrs. Garfield, who had given a reception to the President early in the day, drove over to the cemetery in advance of the procession, and, with her daughter, Mollie Garfield Brown; J. Stanley Brown, her son-in-law; Harry Garfield and J. A. Garfield, jr., were seated immediately behind the orator of the day, with the President on the right of the chair; Vice President Morton on the left, with members of the cabinet supporting them on either side.



JAMES ABRAM GARFIELD.



MRS. JAS. A. GARFIELD.

The singing of "America" by a choir of 500 voices prefaced the exercises, and after ex-President Hayes had succeeded in securing attention from the multitude which, considering its size, was remarkably quiet and well ordered, he made a few brief remarks as President of the Memorial Association. Prayer was offered by Rt. Rev. Bishop W. V. Leonard, of the Episcopal Church, and then the presentation of Hon. Jacob D. Cox, of Cincinnati, the orator of the day, was greeted with cheers loud and long repeated. In a clear, distinct voice, which could be heard far into the throng, ex-Gov. Cox spoke. The oration was repeatedly applauded, and at its conclusion Gen. Cox was called again and again to the front of the stage.

The hallelujah chorus was rendered by the choir, the audience joining. Ex-President Hayes then presented General Harrison to the assemblage and another hearty welcome was given him.

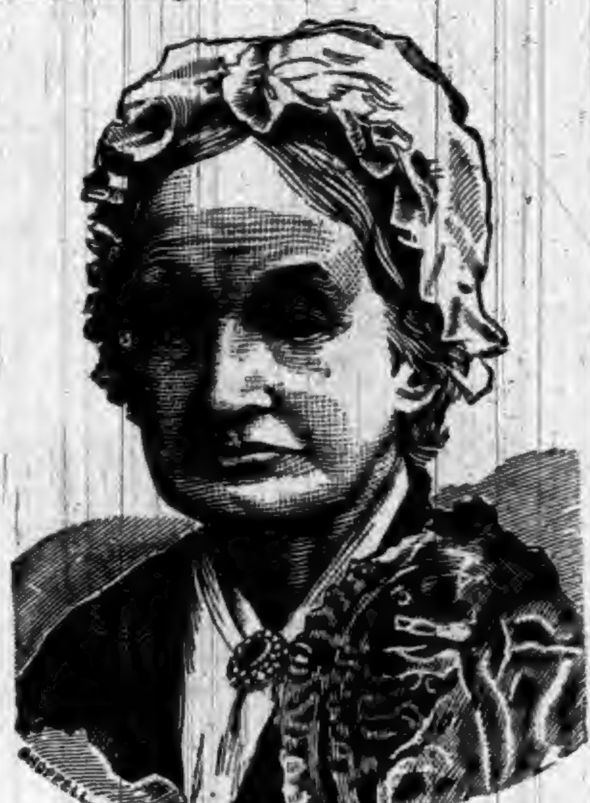
The Chief Executive made a few brief remarks which were inaudible half a dozen feet distant, and Vice President Morton, the members and ex-members of Cabinet, Generals Schofield and Sherman and Governor Campbell, were introduced in turn. Then came a song by the choir and prayer by Sir Knight Q. F. VanCleave, after which the monument was dedicated with knightly honors. The benediction was pronounced by Rev. T. D. Powers, D. D., and the exercises and the events of the day were brought to a fitting conclusion. The Presidential party were at once driven back to the city and left for Washington.

Child's Horrible Death.

Nellie, 4-year-old daughter of William Plumber, of Greenfield, Ohio, was run over by a heavy farm roller and crushed to death. She had been sitting on the roller when the horses, partly unhitched, became frightened and ran. The child was thrown under the heavy roller, which, notwithstanding her father's frantic efforts, passed over her fragile body. Death was instantaneous.

The Honored Dead.

Decoration Day was generally celebrated throughout the country.



GRANDMA GARFIELD.

SOUTHLAND'S HERO.

UNVEILING OF LEE'S MONUMENT AT RICHMOND.

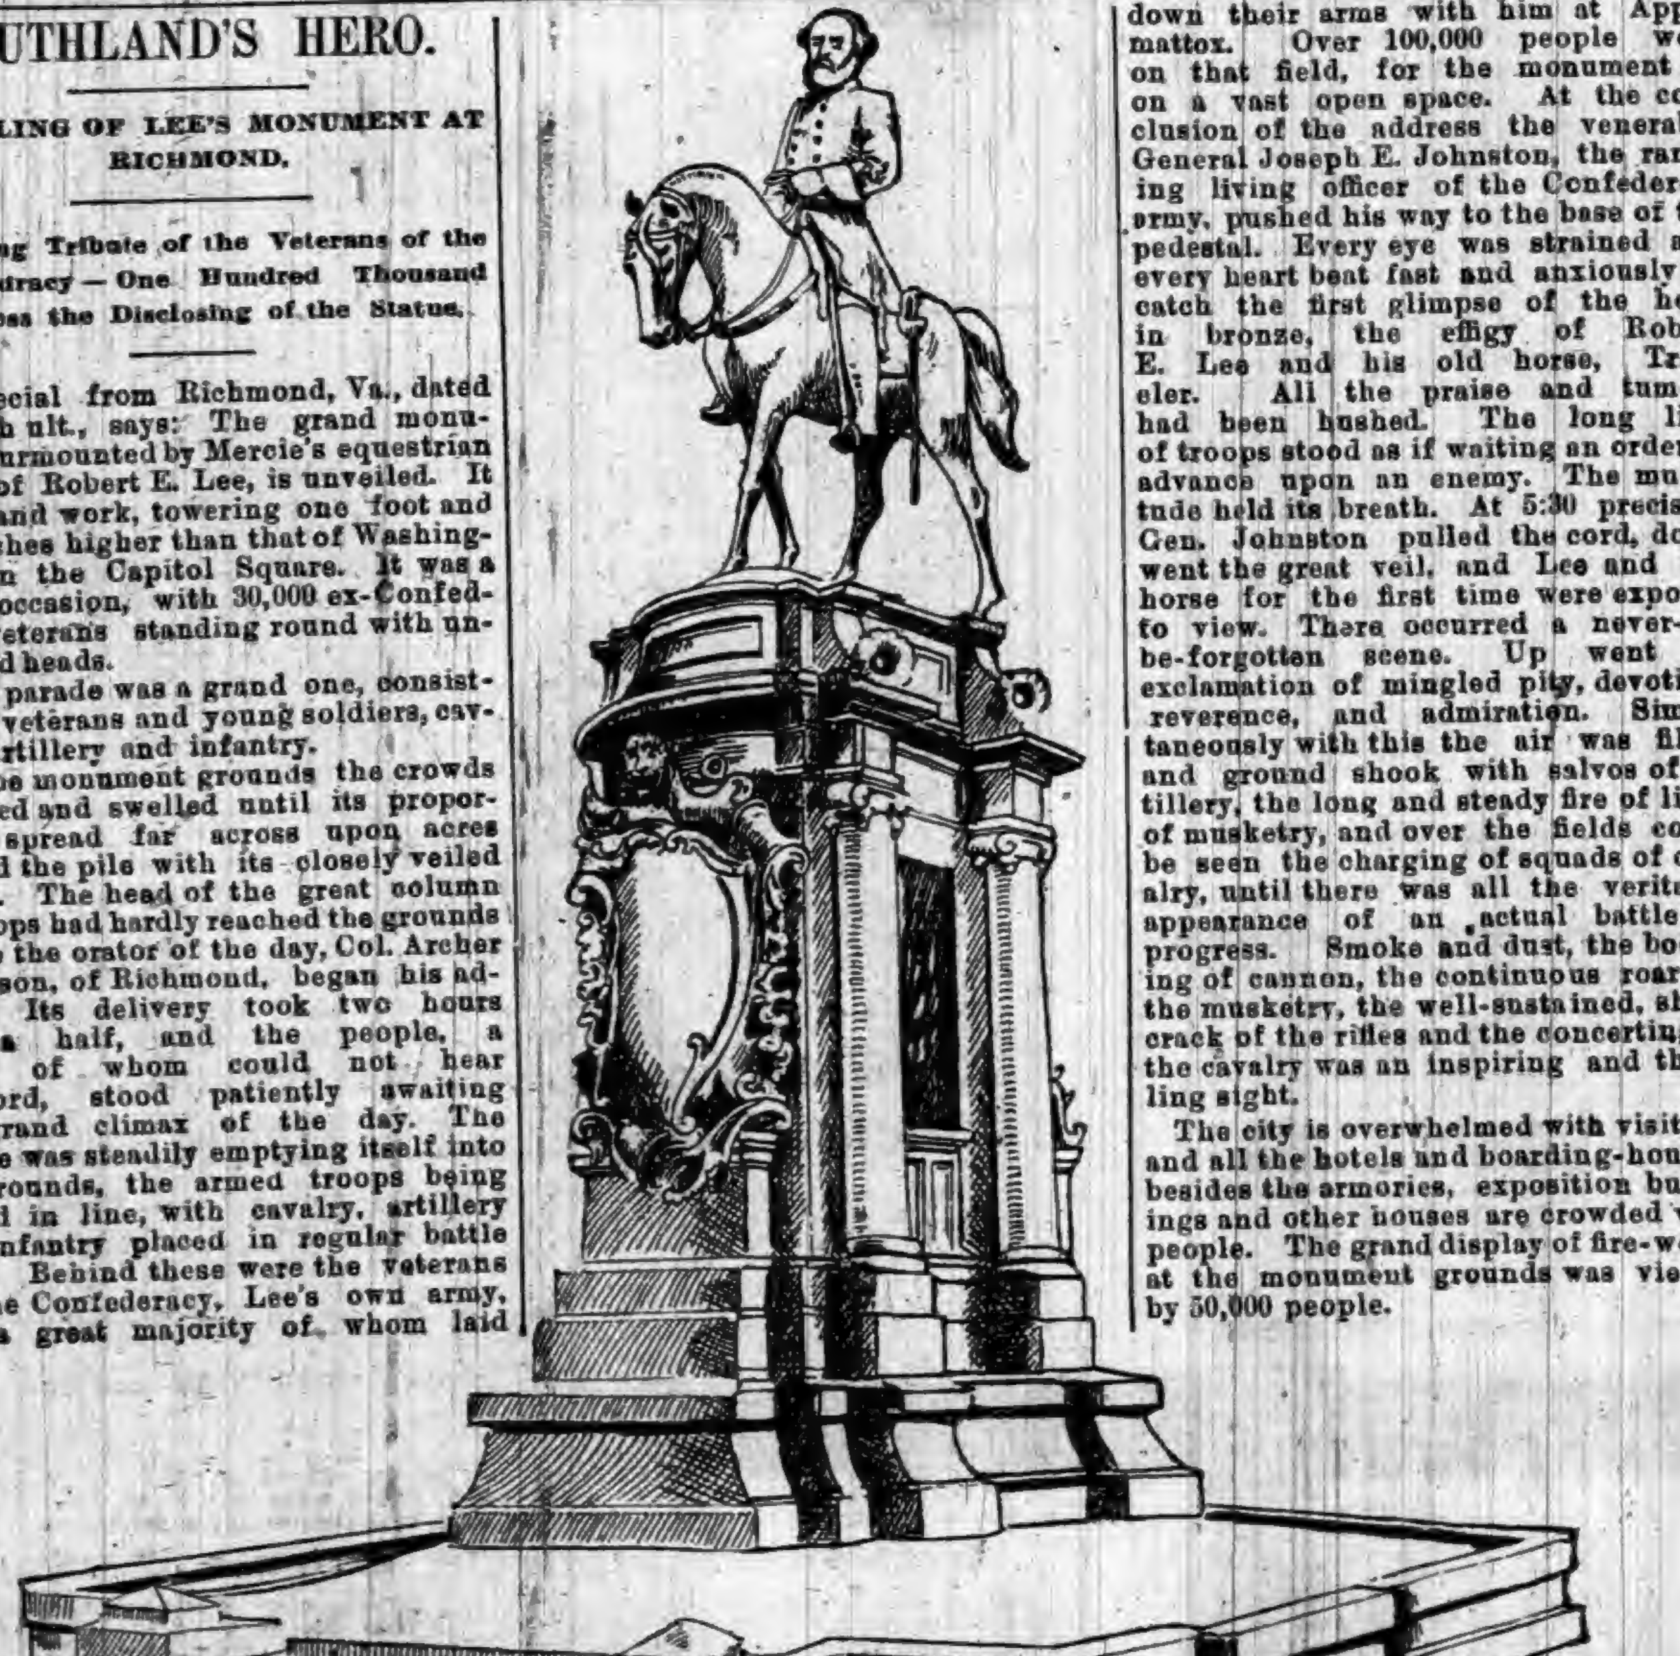
Imposing Tribute of the Veterans of the Confedracy — One Hundred Thousand Witness the Disclosing of the Statue.

A special from Richmond, Va., dated the 29th ult., says: The grand monument surmounted by Mercie's equestrian statue of Robert E. Lee, is unveiled. It is a grand work, towering one foot and ten inches higher than that of Washington, on the Capitol Square. It was a grand occasion, with 30,000 ex-Confederate veterans standing round with uncovered heads.

The parade was a grand one, consisting of veterans and young soldiers, cavalry, artillery and infantry.

At the monument grounds the crowds swarmed and swelled until its proportions spread far across upon acres around the pile with its closely veiled statue. The head of the great column of troops had hardly reached the grounds before the orator of the day, Col. Archer Anderson, of Richmond, began his address. Its delivery took two hours and a half, and the people, a tenth of whom could not hear a word, stood patiently awaiting the grand climax of the day. The parade was steadily emptying itself into the grounds, the armed troops being placed in line, with cavalry, artillery and infantry placed in regular battle array. Behind these were the veterans of the Confederacy, Lee's own army, and a great majority of whom laid down their arms with him at Appomattox. Over 100,000 people were on that field, for the monument is on a vast open space. At the conclusion of the address the venerable General Joseph E. Johnston, the ranking living officer of the Confederate army, pushed his way to the base of the pedestal. Every eye was strained and every heart beat fast and anxiously to catch the first glimpse of the head in bronze, the effigy of Robert E. Lee and his old horse, Traveler. All the praise and tumult had been hushed. The long line of troops stood as if waiting an order to advance upon an enemy. The multitude held its breath. At 5:30 precisely Gen. Johnston pulled the cord, down went the great veil, and Lee and the horse for the first time were exposed to view. There occurred a never-to-be-forgotten scene. Up went an exclamation of mingled pity, devotion, reverence, and admiration. Simultaneously with this the air was filled and ground shook with salvos of artillery, the long and steady fire of lines of musketry, and over the fields could be seen the charging of squads of cavalry, until there was all the veritable appearance of an actual battle in progress. Smoke and dust, the booming of cannon, the continuous roar of the musketry, the well-sustained, sharp crack of the rifles and the concerting of the cavalry was an inspiring and thrilling sight.

The city is overwhelmed with visitors, and all the hotels and boarding-houses, besides the armories, exposition buildings and other houses are crowded with people. The grand display of fire-works at the monument grounds was viewed by 50,000 people.



A Child's Appeal to a King.

The good nature of the King of the Belgians is illustrated by a story which is now being circulated. It seems that six years ago a seaman, named Frank Moore, deserted from the Red Star steamer Rhinelander, at Philadelphia. For this offence he was arrested at Antwerp and imprisoned. While the prisoner was lying under sentence at Antwerp, his little niece dispatched a letter to King Leopold. The little girl, whose name is Bessie Keim, wrote from Philadelphia, beseeching the King for the release of her uncle Frank. The little suppliant told her story very childishly, but pathetically, saying that six years ago her auntie was dying and that her only prayer was that she might live to see her brother Frank. The letter which the uncle received containing this intelligence was shown to the captain of the steamer, who was asked to allow the seaman permission to go and see his sister. This the captain refused, and then the man deserted. Bessie, after reciting the circumstances, asked.—

"Your Majesty, if you had been in his place, would not you have done the same?" and concluded with "hoping you will pardon Uncle Frank for deserting and me for writing."

The letter had the desired effect, and Bessie received a reply from a high government official saying that her uncle had been released "out of compliment to his majesty's little friend."

INJURES ALL CLASSES.

FRANKLIN MACVEAGH, OF CHICAGO, ON THE TARIFF.

The Wealthy Wholesale Grocer Gives His Views on the "Protective" Policy of the Republican Party—An Open Letter to Western Merchants.

The following letter from Franklin MacVeagh, for twenty-five years one of the leading wholesale grocers of Chicago, will be read with interest by merchants throughout the West, inasmuch as he has never been in politics, never held an office and never was a candidate for one, but discusses the tariff question from the standpoint of a business man:

The time has at last come when the Western merchant—whether a wholesale merchant or a retail merchant—is pecuniarily involved in the tariff question. Until now he has felt no pecuniary interest in it; but henceforth he must recognize himself as an important sufferer from the burdens of the tariff and as one of the victims of its oppressions.

He has considered himself an outsider. He has thought that he could afford to take any view of tariff reform that suited his fancy, and to subordinate this view, if he pleased, to any other political fancy, and especially to his partisan prejudices. He has felt at full liberty to prefer political associations to the exclusion of tariff reform notions; and if he choose, to go back and rake up the issues of the civil war and rest his vote upon these, and to be perfectly indifferent to the cruel exactions of our excessive tariff. All this he felt he could afford to do, notwithstanding many other pockets were involved, because his pocket was not involved. But the inevitable has overtaken him. The hour is at hand when he must rank himself with the farmer and the workingman, making a third in a trio of tribute bearers.

That he has had little suspicion of this is but a part of that public blindness which has so long delayed the emancipation of the people. High protection has itself been protected by this blindness of the people, while tariff reform has been handicapped by it from the start. It has grown up because the burdens of the protective system are indirect and disguised, and, therefore, if the country is rapidly developing and universally prosperous, pass unfelt, and consequently unresented. Only those who study political questions apart from personal considerations see burdens that are not personally felt. Meanwhile the protected classes receive directly and constantly the benefits which correspond with these burdens, and have accordingly a lively sense of pecuniary interests to defend. These interests they have defended persistently and energetically. The defense has been organized, powerful and sleepless, as becomes the defense of pecuniary privileges so great and so vividly realized.

This until now has made the contest between high protection and tariff reform an unequal one.

The situation is, however, rapidly changing. The burdened classes are beginning to realize their burdens. The tribute-payers are beginning to feel the payment of their tributes. They will sooner or later feel also the personal humiliation of tribute-paying. The laboring men are also getting their attention fixed upon the sums they are paying for somebody else's protection, and are already being counted for tariff reform. The farmers, too, at last are being forced to see that their prosperity is diminishing, and are consequently beginning to ask why. When they shall ask why with the earnestness which is fast growing out of their diminishing prosperity, and perceive, as they surely will, that but one reply is possible, farewell to the privileges of our protected classes. The protected classes will no longer have mere quiet reformers to deal with then, but an aroused force, about which they can profitably ask the railroads of the West. They will be sorry then that they did not listen to the mild protests of the disinterested period, since, instead of political persuasion, they will have to face political force, and, perhaps, political fury.

For to take the place of the disinterested period when tariff reform is urged upon purely scientific grounds there is coming in an interested period, when oppressed communities will hotly contend for their rights. The battle is to be between two parties, both pecuniarily interested. The advantage will be with the greater number, and the protected classes are the few.

As a result of the new light that is breaking upon the victims of high and higher protection, I believe an awakening of the wholesale merchants and retail merchants is at hand.

The merchants have to pay the regular bounties on all they individually consume like the other consumers; and as they are not all superfluously rich, a great many of them will get tired of doing this, as everybody else is getting tired. But this is not where their shoe will really pinch. The serious trouble at hand for the Western merchant lies in the diminishing ability of the farmer to buy the merchant's wares. The farmer is the chief customer of the merchant; and the prosperity of the merchant is bound up with the prosperity of the farmer. When the farmer's surplus is cut down his buying power goes with it.

Now, the farmer's profits have been diminishing for some time, and they have at last reached the point where in average communities he is running behind. He has but one thing to do, and that is to reduce his scale of living. This result has long been inevitable. The farmer's prices have been going down because he has to meet the competition of the world, and cannot possibly avoid doing so, while on the other hand he must buy of our protected classes, or at their dictation, and pay immensely more for all he consumes than he would pay if the Government would let him buy as he sells—under the competition of the world.

As long as the farmers were making money freely it did not matter to the merchants, nor for some time after, because the farmers at first took to running into debt and mortgaging their farms or moving further west, thinking that the bad weather would pass over, as is shown by the abandoned farms of the East and the increased farm mortgages of the West. But that could not go on forever; and the time is now upon us when the farmer is compelled to reduce his expenses and his scale of living. He must cut his coat according to his cloth. This would be very unfortunate for our civilization and would seriously tell upon it, if it should last. But it is immediately unfortunate for the Western merchants, wholesale and retail, all of whom depend either directly or indirectly upon the purchasing power of the farmer.

Therefore I say that the merchant has become an interested party in the tariff question, and must take his part in the movement for reform. He must give his time and money to reform, as the protected classes give theirs to resist reform, for he has certainly and somewhat suddenly became a party to the fight.

FRANKLIN MACVEAGH.

HOW WE ARE TAXED.

[From the Chicago Herald.]

The big rumored starch trust is now a fixed fact. Besides the rank injustice that an increased price will impose upon every household in the country the direct object of the trust is to lay further burdens upon the various branches of the cotton manufacturing industry. Every yard of cotton cloth requires starch in the finishing, and if converted into a printed fabric requires a greater quantity than was used in the first instance. Fall River, with forty cotton mills running 2,128,228 spindles in 1889, used 2,250,000 pounds of starch, and as this represents but one-sixth of the spindles in the country some idea may be formed of what will be exacted from the entire number of spindles. There are twenty print works, besides many bleacheries and finishing works that are large consumers of starch. It is evident that the requirements of these works and mills have been duly considered and that a conspiracy has been organized to extort from them the uttermost farthing.

There are few items in the McKinley bill which more grossly illustrate some of its absurdities and injustices than the proposed duty on seal plushes. This article is almost exclusively manufactured in England. The consumption in this country is very large, and, being an imitation of the seal fur, these goods are worn almost exclusively by the poorer classes or such as cannot afford the price of the real article. Until about a year ago the seal plush was not manufactured in this country at all, owing partly to inability to dye and finish the goods, and partly to natural conditions, and even now there is only one mill that has succeeded in producing it in anything like a fairly satisfactory manner. Under the present tariff the duty levied on this article is 50 per cent., which should afford more than ample protection to any legitimate industry. But it seems that it struck the framers of the new tariff in a different light, for the duty proposed therein is to be in the future $3.50 per pound and 15 per cent. ad valorem. In plain figures this simply means that an article heretofore costing say $4 per yard to land will cost in future from $7.25 to $7.50 per yard, and that in order to help a millionaire manufacturer in this country to make more millions, thousands and thousands of our women and girls will have to pay for their winter garments double the price that they are paying now.

Not one of the smallest of the tariff burdens is the salt tax. We imported in 1889 $846,761 worth of foreign-taxed salt. On every pound of it received in bulk the consumers had to pay 85 per cent. duty, and on every pound in bags 44 per cent. The Treasury thereby collected a revenue of $469,435 which it did not need. The domestic production of salt is worth about $5,000,000. By the operation of the tariff the price of this home product was greatly enhanced. How much it was enhanced cannot be stated exactly. The increase in the price of the domestic product on account of "protection" has been estimated by good authority at no less than $2,000,000. On that basis the people of the United States pay for the privilege of using salt a tax of some $2,500,000 per annum. In 1880 just 4,289 men, women, and children were engaged in making salt in this country, and for the benefit not even of this small number, but of the handful of millionaire employers of this small number, 60,000,000 citizens bear the odious salt tax. Farmers, why not join with James A. Garfield and Levi P. Morton in asking Congress for free salt?

In February a committee of the Wholesale Hardware Association of the United States went before the McKinley Committee to protest against any increase of the already protective duties of the present tariff. They presented protests from some three hundred of the jobbing hardware houses in the country, representing all shades of political opinion and also representing $35,000,000 of capital. This protest was not only unheeded, but the McKinley committee proceeded to raise the duties on all kinds of hardware by from 50 per cent. to 150 per cent. Here are a few of the extortions proposed: On pocket cutlery costing not more than 50 cents a dozen, from 50 per cent. to 74 per cent.; costing from 50 cents to $1.50 per dozen, from 50 per cent. to 83 per cent., at least, and in some cases 150 per cent.; costing from $1.50 per dozen, from 50 per cent. to at least 83 per cent., and in some cases 116 per cent. On carving and cooks' knives, from 35 per cent. to at least 55 per cent., and so on up to 71 per cent. On butchers' knives, from 35 per cent. to at least 40 per cent., and to an average of 65 per cent. Most of these duties will be prohibitory. They will not enable American manufacturers to make the kinds of goods now imported, but only to substitute their own at higher prices.

With their usual recklessness of the real interests of the working classes, the Ways and Means Committee have managed to make the duty heaviest in the great majority of cases on the goods used by the poorer consumers. This is shown in the duties proposed on breech-loading guns. Thus, a gun costing only $6, on which the present duty is $2.10, is taxed under the McKinley bill at $6.10, or over 100 per cent., the duty being trebled; but a gun costing a penny under $12 is taxed at the same rate exactly, which is only one-half as much relatively to the cost.

It would not be difficult, says Congressman Carlisle, to show by a citation of authentic reports of the markets here and in other countries that in almost every instance the domestic producers of protected articles have added the whole or a large part of the duty to the foreign prices of the same kind of articles and thus forced the farmers to pay millions of dollars more every year for their clothing, medicines, paints, glass, salt, earthenware, agricultural implements, board and wire fences, barns and other buildings, wagons, harness and other necessities than they would have been required to pay if the duties had not been imposed or had been properly adjusted and fixed at a reasonable revenue rate.

As is well known, the protectionist pressure in France has come from the side of the agricultural interest. It has been called into being largely by the importations of American agricultural products. The French farmers have long been protesting that they were being ruined by American competition. Various shifts have been resorted to to keep out the obnoxious cheap food under the guise of sanitary regulations, but now a franc tax is to be laid on grain and meat. France will be none the less eager to hold our nose to the grindstone in that way for our proposing in the McKinley customs bill to shut out French goods from our markets. Of course the burden will fall upon the shoulders of our long-suffering farmer. Corn and wheat and cattle will be even less remunerative than they are now if the French market is closed against them. But the Committee of Ways and Means apparently believes that the broad agricultural back that has so long staggered under the varied assortment of its tariff loads will not mind this new weight if only the agricultural mind can be tickled enough with such amusing favors as a tax of five cents a dozen on foreign eggs.

A Tax on Daylight.

From Pittsburg recently was sent the following dispatch:

"The Western Window-glass Manufacturers' Association met here and decided to shut down all the factories in the country for the summer on June 14. A combine was also made with the jobbers by which the price of glass is to be made uniform hereafter to all cities. The jobbers and manufacturers agreed to neither buy nor sell to any but members of their respective associations. This action, it is claimed, will result in the removal of unequal competition and a general steadiness of trade."

This meeting occurred on the day following that on which the McKinley bill was passed by the National House of Representatives. By that bill the following increases in the tariff on window-glass are made:

	Present duty.	Proposed duty.
Common window-glass, 10x15, per lb.	67.61	73.72
Common window-glass, 16x24, per lb.	115.41	123.10
Common window-glass, 24x30, per lb.	128.58	133.34
Common window-glass, above, per lb.	132.29	138.04

The mildly worded Pittsburgh dispatch simply means that the price of window-glass, which has been advanced very materially during the last few months, is likely to go still higher; that competition is to be shut out by careful combines; that production is to be stopped; that the payment of wages to workingmen is to cease for an indefinite period, and that the householders are to be well taxed for the daylight in their dwellings.

A high tariff is a very delightful thing—for the trusts.—Chicago News.

It Must Be Settled.

Foreign capital now has control of nearly all our leading industries and enterprises, and sends its own laborers to carry on and operate them. These foreign capitalists, by ocean telegraphs and the means of rapid ocean transit and communication between countries, have full supervision and control over their investments through American and their own local agents on the ground. They are our own manufacturers in reality, and we pay them, the foreign capitalists, the tariff bounties, and our own laborers give way to the foreign laborers whom they send to take their places. The capital of Europe is pooled in London. The investment from the enormous income derived from it is a matter of constant watchfulness and effort. It is employed in every quarter of the globe. By means of it and her free trade, England commands a monopoly of the shipping and commerce of the world, and by free trade in labor and capital in the United States, she has come over here and acquired control of all our leading enterprises, and by them England supplies our home-markets and puts in her pocket all our home tariff bounties. Our tariff is England's industrial and commercial strength. It enables her to keep the markets and carrying trade of the world, while she comes over here, buys and conducts our leading businesses, and reaps the bounties our tariff affords—bounties paid by our unfavored millions.—Geo. L. Yaple, in Lansing Journal.

NERVOUS DISEASES.

As a cure for every class of Nervous Diseases, no remedy has been able to compare with the Nervine Tonic, which is very pleasant and harmless in all its effects upon the youngest child or the oldest and most delicate individual. Nine-tenths of all the ailments to which the human family is heir, are dependent on nervous exhaustion and impaired digestion. When there is an insufficient supply of nerve food in the blood, a general state of debility of the brain, spinal marrow and nerves is the result. Starved nerves, like starved muscles, become strong when the right kind of food is supplied, and a thousand weaknesses and ailments disappear as the nerves recover. As the nervous system must supply all the power by which the vital forces of the body are carried on, it is the first to suffer for want of perfect nutrition. Ordinary food does not contain a sufficient quantity of the kind of nutriment necessary to repair the wear our present mode of living and labor imposes upon the nerves. For this reason it becomes necessary that a nerve food be supplied. This recent production of the South American Continent has been found, by analysis, to contain the essential elements out of which nerve tissue is formed. This accounts for its magic power to cure all forms of nervous derangements.

CRAWFORDSVILLE, IND., Aug. 20, '86.

To the Great South American Medicine Co.:

DEAR GENTS:—I desire to say to you that I have suffered for many years with a very serious disease of the stomach and nerves. I tried every medicine I could hear of but nothing done me any appreciable good until I was advised to try your Great South American Nervine Tonic and Stomach and Liver Cure, and since using several bottles of it I must say that I am surprised at its wonderful powers to cure the stomach and general nervous system. If every one knew the value of this remedy as I do, you would not be able to supply the demand.

Mr. Solomon Bond, a member of the Society of Friends, of Darlington, Ind., says: "I have used twelve bottles of The Great South American Nervine Tonic and Stomach and Liver Cure, and I consider that every bottle did for me one hundred dollars worth of good, because I have not had a good night's sleep for twenty years on account of irritation, pain, horrible dreams, and general nervous prostration, which has been caused by chronic indigestion and dyspepsia of the stomach and by a broken down condition of my nervous system. But now I can lie down and sleep all night as sweetly as a baby, and I feel like a sound man. I do not think there has ever been a medicine introduced into this country which will at all compare with this Nervine Tonic as a cure for the stomach."

A SWORN CURE FOR ST. VITUS'S DANCE OR CHOREA.

CRAWFORDSVILLE, IND., May 19, 1886.

My daughter, twelve years old, had been afflicted for several months with Chorea or St. Vitus's Dance. She was reduced to a skeleton, could not walk, could not talk, could not swallow anything but milk. I had to handle her like an infant. Doctor and neighbors gave her up. I commenced giving her the South American Nervine Tonic; the effects were very surprising. In three days she was rid of the nervousness, and rapidly improved. Four bottles cured her completely. I think the South American Nervine the grandest remedy ever discovered, and would recommend it to every one.

INDIGESTION AND DYSPEPSIA.

The Great South American Nervine Tonic

Which we now offer you, is the only absolutely unfailing remedy ever discovered for the cure of Indigestion, Dyspepsia, and the vast train of symptoms and horrors which are the result of disease and debility of the human stomach. No person can afford to pass by this jewel of incalculable value who is affected by disease of the Stomach, because the experience and testimony of thousands go to prove that this is the ONE and ONLY ONE great cure in the world for this universal destroyer. There is no case of malignant disease of the stomach which can resist the wonderful curative powers of the South American Nervine Tonic.

Harriet E. Hall, of Waynetown, Ind., says: "I owe my life to The Great South American Nervine. I had been in bed for five months from the effects of an exhausted Stomach, Indigestion, Nervous Prostration and a general shattered condition of my whole system. Had given up all hopes of getting well. Had tried three doctors with no relief. The first bottle of the Nervine Tonic improved me so much that I was able to walk about, and a few bottles cured me entirely. I believe it the best medicine in the world. I can not recommend it too highly."

Mrs. M. Russell, Sugar Creek Valley, Ind., writes: "I have used several bottles of The South American Nervine Tonic, and will say I consider it the best medicine in the world. I believe it saved the lives of two of my children. They were down and nothing appeared to do them any good until I procured this remedy. It was very surprising how rapidly they both improved on its use. I recommend the medicine to all my neighbors."

Mrs. Ella A. Bratton, of New Ross, Indiana, says: "I can not express how much I owe to the Nervine Tonic. My system was completely shattered, appetite gone, was coughing and spitting up blood; am sure I was in the first stages of consumption, an inheritance handed down through several generations. I began taking the Nervine Tonic and continued its use for about six months, and am entirely cured. It is the grandest remedy for nerves, stomach and lungs I have ever seen."

Ed. J. Brown, Druggist, of Edina, Mo., writes: "My health had been very poor for years, was coughing severely. I only weighed 110 pounds when I commenced using South American Nervine. I have used two bottles and now weigh 130 pounds, and am much stronger and better than have been for five years. Am sure would not have lived through the Winter had I not secured this remedy. My customers see what it has done for me and buy it eagerly. It gives great satisfaction."

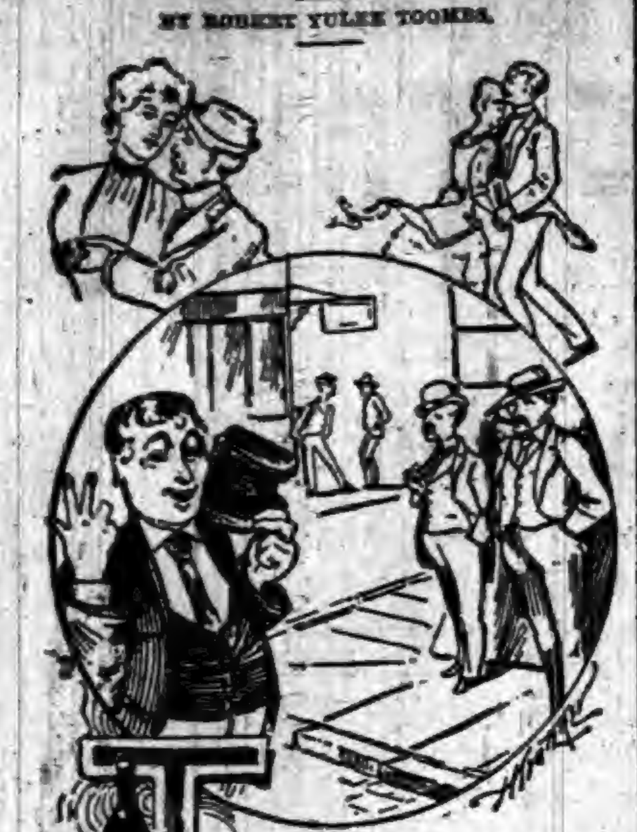
LOAFING ON THE CORNER.

BY ROBERT YULEE TOOMBS.



THE honeyed kisses of pretty misses
We seek not nor scorn, sir;
Of earthly blisses the greatest this is:
Loafing on the corner.

We do not wait among the great,
Nor with the idle scorner,
But early and late await our fate
Loafing on the corner.

Some fun enhance in whirling dance,
Some seek it in a "horn," sir;
Yet each joy will annoy or cloy
But loafing on the corner.

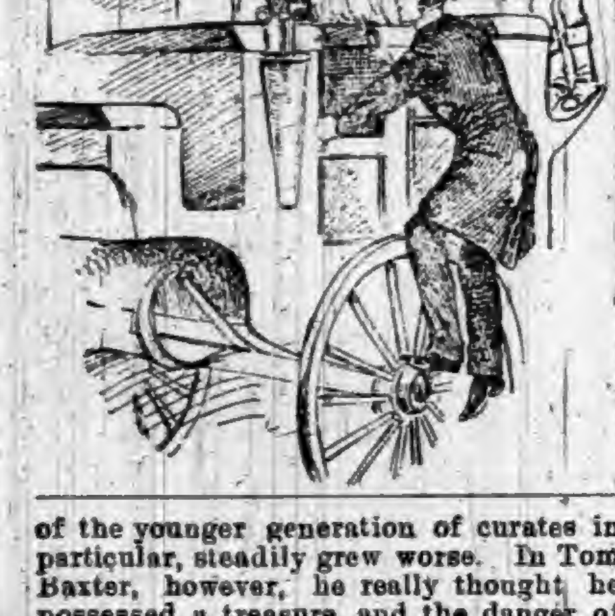
We envy not another's lot,
We dread no man's scorn, sir;
We'll pass our day in bliss away
Loafing on the corner.

NORTH KAUKAUNA, Wis.

MR. BAXTER'S DILEMMA.

THE Rev. Thomas Baxter was a curate of the muscular, energetic type, which, fortunately for the church, is turned out not unfrequently by our universities and public schools. He was a big, broad-shouldered young man, who, besides distinguishing himself greatly both on the river and in the cricket field, had taken a very respectable degree, for he was by no means afraid of hard work of any description. Such men often make capital parsons, and Tom was hardly less energetic in his parish work than he had been in very different spheres of action at Eton and Oxford. But there were limits to Mr. Baxter's endurance; he liked an occasional holiday, and this was the only point upon which he and his vicar, the Rev. Septimus Straightway, were not entirely agreed.

The Rev. Septimus was an honest man, and took a severe and gloomy view of the pleasures of life. He worked terribly hard in an East-end parish, knew nothing and cared less about outdoor sports, or, in fact, about any form of amusement, and fully expected his curates to follow unhesitatingly in the extremely narrow and steep path up which he led them. Hence it came to pass that Mr. Straightway experienced considerable difficulty in finding curates after his own heart; the young men were continually leaving him for less arduous duties, and the vicar's opinion of human nature in general, and of the younger generation of curates in particular, steadily grew worse. In Tom Baxter, however, he really thought he possessed a treasure, and the danger of working a willing horse to death never so much as entered into his head.



Poor Tom did his very best to satisfy Mr. Straightway's requirements, for he really respected the man and valued immensely his good opinion, but, as has already been indicated, he could not help longing that his superior would enter a little more into his own harmless liking for occasional relief and sympathize with his passion for rowing and all that was connected with athletics.

At the time I write of the cricket season was in full swing, but Tom's duties had not only prevented him from playing in a single match, but even from looking on at one a few hours from the roof of the pavilion at Lord's. Moreover, the University cricket match, in which he took an absorbing interest, was fast approaching, and he was sorely troubled by the dread that he might not be able to see it. It worried him during his visiting and mission work, spoilt his rest, and occasionally obtruded itself upon him in the pulpit. Even the absent-minded Mr. Straightway at length noticed that his curate's mind was ill at ease, and one day he went so far as to inquire the cause. Tom stammered out something about being out of sorts, and ventured to hint that he thought a day's holiday would do him good.

"When I was your age, Mr. Baxter, I never wanted a holiday," replied the austere vicar, "but you are certainly not looking well. Let me see—to-day is June 25. In about a fortnight I think I can arrange a date for you. Say July 12."

"Can't it be managed a week sooner?" queried Tom, desperately, for the University match was fixed for the 4th.

"Quite impossible," I fear, said the vicar decisively, for he was a terrible martinet with his curates. So, with a wave of his hand, he dismissed the subject, and Tom knew that further appeal was useless.

"It's rather too bad," grumbled Mr. Baxter, as he walked home to his humble lodgings. "But it's no use talking to him about cricket, and he doesn't know a bat from a ball." And with a heavy heart he tried to resign himself to the inevitable.

But two days later a circumstance occurred which entirely routed Tom's virtuous resolutions. A letter arrived at the reverend gentleman's lodgings which was couched in the following terms:

> HEATHCOTE HALL, Loamshire.
> DEAREST TOM—We are actually coming to town! Only for two days, though, and we are going to Lord's to see the match. Uncle has got a drag there, Block B. Of course I shall never forgive you if you don't come and see me; Wednesday afternoon we go to Essex to stay with the Chivertons, so this is our only chance of meeting. Do come; in terrible haste. Yours lovingly,
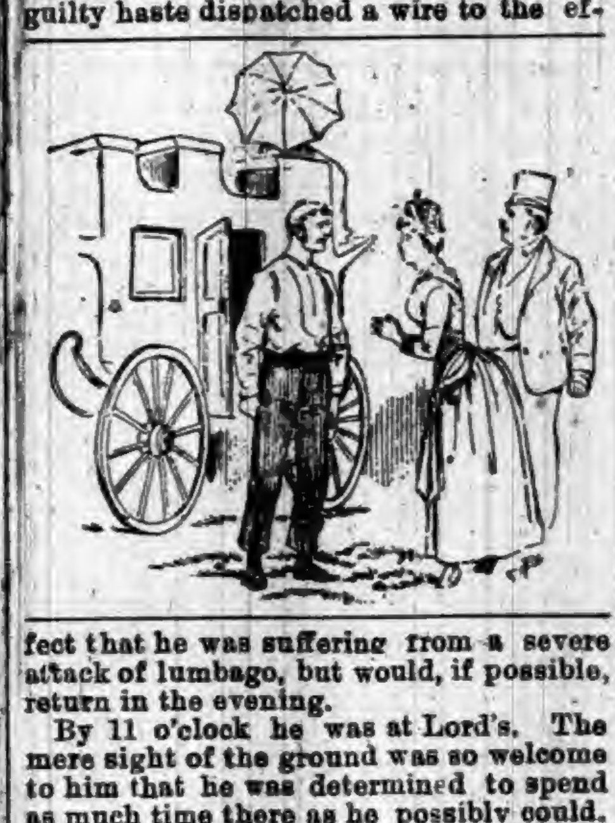
> ALICE.

From the foregoing it may be gathered that Miss Alice Heathcote and Tom Baxter were on tolerably intimate terms. As a matter of fact, they had been engaged for six months, during which time they very rarely met. Baxter's people were well off, and he had a very rich uncle, among whose possessions was an excellent family living, destined in the future for Tom and his bride. But the uncle was a stern and conscientious gentleman, and he was determined, before he definitely agreed to give Tom the vacancy—when it occurred—to see what the young gentleman was made of. And this was why Baxter had been sent to help Mr. Straightway in the East End, why he worked so hard in the parish, and why he was so desperately anxious to stand high in his vicar's opinion.

When Tom read the letter his first impulse, unclerical though it may appear, was to use strong language. But he restrained himself and fell to thinking over the various means of escaping his duties. A fresh appeal to Mr. Straightway he knew to be hopeless. That worthy ascetic did not only look upon cricket as a frivolous waste of time, but he was a strong advocate of the celibacy of the clergy. Moreover, by merely asking the question Tom might offend him, and this he certainly could not afford to do under the circumstances.

There was nothing for it then but a pious fraud, and although Tom's conscience rebelled against the idea of deceiving his vicar, who trusted him implicitly, he could not make up his mind to disappoint Alice or to deny himself the pleasure of seeing her. He might, under more favorable circumstances, have dined at her uncle's house in Portman Square, but as luck would have it he had undertaken to conduct an evening class on both nights of her stay in town. So he wrote a very affectionate answer, promising that nothing short of an earthquake should prevent him from appearing at Lord's, and he at once set to work to arrange a plot for the deception of Mr. Straightway.

The day before that on which he had promised to meet his intended, Tom told his vicar that he was passing the night with a very old friend who had just come home from India, in his rooms near Jermyn street. This, it must be said, was perfectly true, and, of course, Mr. Straightway could offer no valid objection, as Baxter had done all his work for the day. The next day, however, Tom slunk off to a telegraph office, and in guilty haste dispatched a wire to the effect that he was suffering from a severe attack of lumbago, but would, if possible, return in the evening.



By 11 o'clock he was at Lord's. The mere sight of the ground was so welcome to him that he was determined to spend as much time there as he possibly could. He knew, of course, that he would be certain to meet any number of his old friends, and that the whole proceeding was extremely risky, but he consoled himself with the thought that as Mr. Straightway rarely if ever went into society of any sort, he was not at all likely to hear anything about it. So he ensconced himself in the pavilion and awaited the beginning of the play with pleasurable impatience. The Heathcotes were all enthusiastic cricketers, and he counted on their appearance by 12 o'clock at the latest.

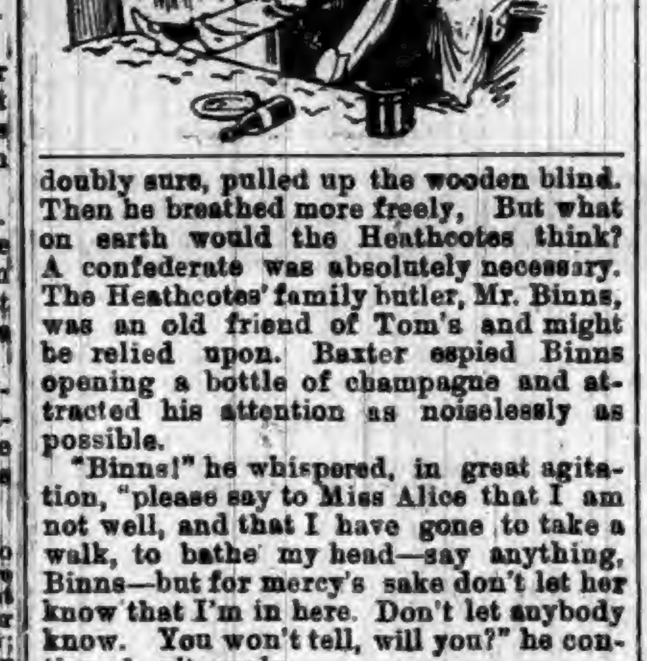
The match commenced in due course, but upon its varying fortunes it is not necessary to dwell. The Heathcotes also arrived, and Tom at once took up a position on the drag by the side of Miss Alice, the warmth of whose greeting at once speedily banished all fears and qualms of conscience from his breast. Nothing, in fact, could have been more perfect than Mr. Baxter's happiness up to the luncheon interval. His stentorian "well hit" or "well bowled" could be heard one hundred yards away. He clapped his hands, stamped, and waved his hat like the veriest schoolboy, and meanwhile he was unremitting in his attention to the girl of his heart. Two o'clock struck.

The bell rang for lunch, and the occupants of Mr. Heathcote's drag prepared for the substantial meal which forms so prominent a feature of the two great matches at Lord's. Tom by no means despised creature comforts. Mr. Straightway's curates were expected, at all events when with him on duty, to follow their vicar's example in asceticism, so a good lunch was very acceptable to him. He had supplied Alice's wants, and was in the act of lifting to his mouth a piece of salmon, when suddenly he turned pale, his jaw fell, his eyes dilated, and the piece of salmon, accompanied by the fork, fell unheeded to the ground.

It was too true. Beside the very next drag, talking to a gentleman on the box seat, stood a tall, lean man, in clerical attire, whose figure was horribly familiar to the guilty curate. He could not be mistaken; it was Septimus Straightway, though what could have brought the reverend gentleman to Lord's was beyond Tom's imagination. The vicar had his back turned, and evidently did not suspect his curate's proximity. Instant flight was the only hope.

"Good gracious, Tom!" cried Miss Alice, "what on earth is the matter? You look as white as a sheet."

"I don't feel very well, dear. Excuse me one minute," stammered Mr. Baxter. And he rose hurriedly, upsetting his plate, and jumped to the ground. Just as he reached terra firma he saw the clergyman shaking hands with his friend on the box-seat; he was turning toward Mr. Heathcote's drag; in another second detection would follow. Tom glanced hurriedly round, the door of the drag was open and no one was looking. He accordingly plunged in head foremost, shut the door, and to make assurance doubly sure, pulled up the wooden blind. Then he breathed more freely. But what on earth would the Heathcotes think? A confederate was absolutely necessary. The Heathcotes' family butler, Mr. Binns, was an old friend of Tom's and might be relied upon. Baxter espied Binns opening a bottle of champagne and attracted his attention as noiselessly as possible.



"Binns!" he whispered, in great agitation, "please say to Miss Alice that I am not well, and that I have gone to take a walk, to bathe my head—say anything, Binns—but for mercy's sake don't let her know that I'm in here. Don't let anybody know. You won't tell, will you?" he continued, piteously.

Mr. Binns thought that Tom was off his head, but his impassive face betrayed no surprise.

"Certainly, sir. Any other message?"

"No! that will do—and, Binns, come back here at once; I want you to do something else."

"Yessir."

The message caused some little surprise and much sympathy.

"Poor fellow!" said Miss Alice; "it all comes from working so hard in those terrible slums, and never taking a holiday."

When Binns returned, Tom asked him in the same agitated whisper:

"Did you notice a tall, thin gentleman—a clergyman—standing beside the drag just now?"

"Yessir."

"Do you see him now?"

"Yessir," said Binns, almost whispering, "he's a-standing close here."

"Good gracious!" murmured Tom. "Look here! come and tell when he's gone."

And Tom pulled up the other wooden blind half-way and cowered on the floor among the cushions and dust-cloaks. It was terribly hot and stuffy, but he dared not move until Binns returned, and that personage was absent for no less than half an hour by Tom's watch! The captive was growing desperate, when at last a welcome face appeared at the window above the blind.

"Mr. Baxter, sir," whispered Binns, "the clerical gent, sir; he's on the roof of our drag."

"You don't say so!" groaned Tom.

"He is indeed, sir. He and master seem very thick; they're talking over old Cambridge times. I never waited on him before, sir."

"Of course," said the curate in despair. "I see it now. Old Septimus was at Cambridge, so was Heathcote. They are old friends. How in the name of providence am I to get out of this? I say, Binns, do you know I must stop here until he goes. You will keep it dark—now won't you?"

"Most certainly, sir," said the sympathetic butler. "Won't you have some lunch, sir? Nobody will know."

Tom smiled in his misery at the idea. After all, why shouldn't he?

"Well, Binns, I really think I will."

And the trusty servitor disappeared to return with a huge plateful of cold pie, a bottle of champagne, and some strawberries.

"Thank ye, Binns," said Tom, gratefully; "now go away and don't come back till the clergyman has gone. Whew! Now hot it is!"

It was hot and no mistake. On a scorching day the interior of a drag, with the windows shut, is about as agreeable a resting-place as the Black Hole. Tom could not let the blinds down, so he drank a tumbler of iced champagne, which made him much warmer than before, though it inspired him to smile at his position. His stiff collar was growing limp, and his heavy black garments began to grow insupportable.

"Wonder if I dare to take my coat off?" he asked himself. The mental answer was "Yes," and he proceeded to do so. Then he felt better, finished the plate of pie, and had another tumbler of champagne. "I feel half inclined to go out and face him," reflected Tom, but his heart failed him. He piled the dust-cloaks, coats, and umbrellas in one corner, and tried to make himself comfortable. Presently, however, the match was resumed, and then his real suffering began. Tom had never endured such torture. Loud applause frequently broke upon his ears; shouts of "Well hit!" "Well bowled!" "Well caught!" and sometimes, more maddening even than these sounds, there was a deep hush of suspense in the noisy crowd or a distinctly audible sigh of relief, which told his practiced ears that some exciting crisis of the game had come or gone.

He vainly peered over the half-drawn blind to catch a glimpse of the players. He could, however, see nothing but a forest of black hats and variegated sunshades. Binns returned not; Tom dared not quit his hiding place, and despair once more possessed his soul. "Suppose I'm here for the afternoon. Holy Moses, how appalling hot it is!" Heat is apt to relax the propriety even of a curate's language. "Wish I dared to take some more of my clothes off!" And then his eye fell on the champagne bottle, which was nearly half full. "Well, I can have another drink at all events." And again his troubles seemed less. He stretched himself out as well as he could, for he was a big man and the space was small, and by degrees he finished the bottle. "If only I had a weed," he reflected; "haven't smoked for months, it seems years." And growing bold even to recklessness he hunted in the pockets of the other men's overcoats till he found a cigar-case. When he had lit a cigar he felt comparatively at ease. It was very hot, he thought, but a peaceful feeling stole over him; the hum of the crowd grew fainter and fainter; the shouts of applause more distant; even the hammering of sticks and umbrells on the drag within six inches of his head ceased to annoy him. He pulled at his cigar less energetically. Soon it fell from his lips and the Rev. Thomas Baxter slept as peacefully as a child.

* * * * *

He was awakened by a rough shake and a shout in his ear of "Hi, wake up!" Returning to semi-consciousness he indistinctly heard exclamations of "Shameful!" "Disgusting!" "Who would have thought it?" And then a familiar voice said in somewhat quavering accents: "Leave him to me, papa. I must see him alone." Tom pulled himself together with a jerk, opened his heavy eyes, and found himself confronted by Miss Alice Heathcote, who stood with flushed cheeks and indignant expression at the door of the drag.

"Are you awake, sir," she inquired, with elaborate sternness.

"Awake! yes, why not, dear?" stammered Mr. Baxter.

"Then what is the meaning of this? You leave me hours ago and say you don't feel well, and here I find you sound asleep when the play is over for the day, and we have been sending all over the ground for you. And in your shirt sleeves, too."

"Good gracious! I beg your pardon. I forgot." And, blushing scarlet, the curate huddled on his coat.

"And they all say that you are drunk," she continued, with a half sob. "Oh, Tom, it's shameful."

"Drunk!" cried Mr. Baxter, indignantly. "I should like to meet anybody who says that I'm drunk! Let me explain, darling. I'll come out now."

And then he caught sight of his vicar again and shrank back, saying:

"Is that man never going?"

"What man?" asked Miss Alice, with impatience. "Really, Tom, you must be mad to-day."

"Why, the clergyman, Alice, dear; do you know who he is?"

"Of course I do. It's Mr. Grayson, a vicar somewhere in Yorkshire, an old college friend of papa's; they haven't met for twenty years. I'm sure he's not an alarming person—in fact, the only strange thing about him is that about twenty people have mistaken him for your man—Mr. Straightway, you know. Are they at all alike?"

"Yes, they are—rather," gasped Tom, scarcely knowing whether he stood on his head or heels. "Come and introduce him to me, darling. I'll make it all right with your father."

And he did; but it will be some time before he hears the last of that cricket match.

Making the Composing-Room Howl.

Two printers were eating their midnight lunch. Says Sam: "Tom, have you got your take up?" to which Tom replied, "No, but I've got my coffee cup."

On another occasion, Sam took umbrage at some remark from Tom, and he sarcastically remarked, "Tom-ass." But Tom's ready wit was equal to the occasion. He replied, "Sam-mule."—Exchange.

THE word cyclone was first proposed by Piddington in 1848, to describe the violent hurricanes of the tropics, in which the wind rotates, in the northern hemisphere, opposite to the hands of a watch. The term anticyclone was first used by Mr. F. Galton in 1863 to represent wind motion in the opposite direction.

BE proud. It is said that a proud man cannot be mean.

The Messenger Boy and the Tortoise.

It happened once that a Messenger Boy was taunting a Tortoise with his inability to smoke Cigarettes or pitch Pennies. "What you say is true," replied the Tortoise, "but Nature gives different gifts to different creatures. I may not be able to smoke Cigarettes nor to make a confiding Woman pay 37 cents and car fare for delivering a Message to her Dressmaker in the next Block, but I can beat you in a Foot Race." The Messenger Boy's Spanish blood was roused and he accepted the Tortoise's Challenge. The Tortoise was so Confident of Victory that after he had gone a Little Distance he went into a Convenient Doorway and went to sleep. Perceiving which, the Messenger Boy persevered, and by Diligent Effort won the Race. Moral—The race is not Always to the Swift.—Life.

The Preventive of a Terrible Disease.

No disorders, excepting the most deadly forms of lung disease, involve such a tremendous destruction of organic tissue as those which fasten upon the kidneys. Such maladies, when they become chronic—and none are so liable to assume that phase—completely wreck the system. To prevent this terrible disease, recourse should be had, upon the first manifestation of trouble, to Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, which experience has proved to be highly effective as a means of imparting tone and regularity to the organs of urination, as well as to the liver, stomach, and bowels. Another beneficial result of this medicine, naturally consequent upon its diuretic action, is the elimination from the blood of impurities which beget rheumatism, neuralgia, gout, dropsy, and other maladies. By increasing the activity of the kidneys, it augments the depurative efficiency of these organs, which are most important outlets for the escape of such impurities.

Important to Druggists.

A New York druggist, who spent the winter in a Texas town for his health, was asked by the genial clerk of the hotel:

"Stranger, what might your business be?"

"I am a pharmacist."

"A what did you say?"

"A pharmacist."

"O, yes, a pharmacist. Well, you can buy as good farming lands in this neighborhood as you can find in Texas. You have struck the right locality, stranger, if you want to farm. I'll take you out this afternoon in my buggy, and show you one I've got to sell."—Texas Siftings.

Opposed to Ground Floors.

Broker (persuasively)—It's a splendid opportunity, and remember you get it on the ground floor.

Capitalist—Don't want it. Last time I was let in on the ground floor I dropped right through into a sub-cellar, and I've been there ever since. No, you'll have to let me off.—Texas Siftings.

J. C. SIMPSON, Marquess, W. Va., says: "Hall's Catarrh Cure cured me of a very bad case of catarrh." Druggists sell it, 75c.

Careful with Kind Words.

A merchant in a certain Mexican town is a great funkey after people who are rich, and has a corresponding contempt for those that are in failing circumstances. One day he remarked to his clerk:

"Have you written that letter to Smith, Jones & Co.?"

"Yes, Sir."

"Have you signed it?"

"Not yet."

"Well, in signing it do not put: 'Very respectfully yours.' Just leave out 'very.' There are rumors that they are embarrassed, and we have got no taffy to throw away on beggars."—Texas Siftings.

"STRUCK THE GOLDEN MEAN"

As a Blood Purifier.

The Detroit Free Press says: "Hibbard's Rheumatic Syrup, prepared by The Charles Wright Medicine Company, of this city, has struck the Golden Mean in the treatment of all blood diseases, and its success is an evidence that an honest, pure and valuable medicine is not incapable of attracting the attention of every family. There seems to be but one opinion as to its merit as a family medicine."

This is the real secret of the success of this wonderful remedy. Its perfect and speedy action in removing all impure and poisonous matter from blood. No home should be without it, as a thorough and effectual blood purifier for young and old. For sale by all druggists.

Monkey Versus Man.

Son—Pa, a monkey is five times as good as Deacon Good, ain't he?

Pa—Jimmy, I'm surprised! Why do you say so disrespectful a thing?

Son—Why, you only gave him a cent last Sunday when he came around with the plate, and you gave the organ grinder's monkey five cents this morning.—Texas Siftings.

"The outlook isn't bright to-day."

"What's the matter with my brains?"

"There isn't any, that's all."—Texas Siftings.

GETTING Rid of Chappie.—(What he says): "It's the queerest thing, you know; I called on that Miss Hankinson, of Harlem, last night, and that Chubb was there. I hadn't been in the room 10 minutes when Chubb offered to bet Miss Hankinson that I couldn't go down to the Battery and back in two hours. She took the bet, and I started. I did it in an hour and 40 minutes, but when I had got back to the house Chubb had gone home, and Miss Hankinson had retired."

Commencement.

The exercises Thursday evening at the Opera House were even better than usual, if that were possible. The stage was, as usual, beautifully ornamented with a profusion of choice flowers, and looked like a little garden of Eden. The large hall was full, for our people always take pleasure in attending our high school commencements. Mr. Harrison presided, and Mr. Coe was master of ceremonies, making the announcements etc. The opening prayer was by Mr. Lamport, and was very appropriate to the occasion. "Moonlight Dance," a song by Widney, Harper, Scott and Hanna, was fine, of course. All they do in this line is excellent. The instrumental duet, ocarina and guitar, by Walter Hartman and Frank Davenport, was very nice. The first of the graduates, Carrie Ensley, had for her graduating piece, "Consider the Lilies," which she delivered with grace and spirit, surprising even her best friends. Mrs. Post sang with her usual ability, for she always sings well. "Ideas, the Life of a People" was Hattie Shearer's subject. The young lady has an excellent voice and is earnest in all she says. The effect was excellent. Miss Alda Barclay and Miss Edna Davis, next played a duet on the piano. Both are accomplished musicians. The next regular exercise was that of Della Shugers, "The Rainbow in the Bubble." She spoke well and has a fine strong voice making every word easily distinguished by the great audience. In fact the young ladies of this class, are all good readers, and their articulation is much above the average. The "Little German Band," always popular wherever they appear, came out at this point of the program and gave one of their popular pieces. The two brothers Harry and Ed. Rainier, use the mouth organ, Will Schaab and Frank Davenport, have guitars, and Walter Hartman, the ocarina. They make delightful music, and were cheered till they had to appear again. "Dreams of the Past and Realities of the Present," was the subject treated by Lucy Otto. Miss Otto is a good speaker, and has a fine appearance on the stage. And she felt greatly at home in her part, giving such earnest and natural delivery, as to impress her hearers very favorably. Mr. Harrison then, in an earnest and eloquent speech, presented the young ladies their diplomas, and to Miss Ensley, the Adrian Scholarship for excellence in language. The quartet then sang "Good Night," and Mr. Lamport dismissed the people with a benediction. The class of '90 is a success, though all are girls. We are sorry that more of our boys do not find it convenient to stay in school longer. We feel as if the class motto of these young ladies "Resolutae etsi Feminin," ought to be broken up enough to be construed like this: Four resolute young ladies have more pluck and perseverance than forty irresolute young men. However we will not say too much, as come to think of it, next year's class is nearly all young men. May be the tide is turning.

They Were All at Home.

J. J. Latson and his good wife, Charlotte Latson could have had no better day to celebrate uncle Jimmy's 71st birthday, than last Sunday. It was bright and clear and just warm enough to make the shade trees pleasant. But a greater pleasure was found in the presence at the old homestead on that day of all their children—something that may never happen again. In the order of their ages, they are: Emmeline Plum, Wm. Latson, Helen Baxter, Hattie Britton, Sadie Harris, Frank Latson, Fannie Cowen, Joel Latson and Alda Shaffer, nine in all, for there has not been a death in the family in all the long years of the married life of the worthy pair. Of the husbands of the daughters, there were present, Sheriff Plum of this place, A. J. Baxter, of Butler, Albert Harris, and H. W. Shaffer, of Wichita, Kansas. William is single, but Frank's wife and boy, and Joel's wife, two boys, and a girl were present. Mrs. Cowen resides in southeast Steuben county, and her husband, was not present, neither was Mrs. Britton's husband, John Britton, of Churubusco. The children of A. J. Baxter, Ott, Nora and Rilla were present. Also a granddaughter, Winnie Askew, and her husband, G. W. Askew, and Wm. Valleau, of Altona, and his wife, who is Mr. Latson's sister, and with them was their little grandson Voyle. Of neighbors not relatives, were Cal. Husselman and wife, J. A. Barns, wife and daughter. It was a most friendly gathering and was supplemented with a grand dinner, which can be more easily tasted than described. Then the whole family were placed at the table in the order of their ages, and formed a group, the like of which will not be often seen. Then Mr. Rice came up from town with his "Kodak," and took the whole group of eleven. And then the happy groups began to break up and separate, never perhaps to meet all at one time again. The birthday, proper, was Monday, but various duties took several away, and so the gathering took place as stated. The daughters had gathered in there Saturday, while the old folks were in town, and on their return, the old couple were greatly surprised to note the absence of their old familiar furniture, and the presence of a supply that was bright and new. The goodwife came near exclaiming like Tom Hood.

> * * * * "I'll bet a farden,
> That little Prince Silverwings has ketched me up
> And put me down in some one else's garden."

But she didn't, for the truth soon flashed on her mind. Mrs. Latson is two years younger than her husband, but both are in fair health, and we wish in common with all present that "Uncle Jimmy and Aunt Charlotte" may live to see many more days like this.

Special instruction will be given on the latest approved methods of teaching, on the organization, management and government of schools. It is the aim to educate and train teachers for their educational work. Other classes will be orgnaized to accommodate those not intending to teach, but who intend to follow other avocations of life. Drill classes in reading, writing, spelling and other practical branches, will receive proper attention.

EXPENSES.

Students coming to the normal will bring the books they wish to study. And those not having books can purchase them at nominal cost. We call special attention to the following fact: That we employ none but the most thoroughly qualified and efficient teachers; that our teachers use no cramming processes, but require the most thorough work of their students; that every student will be called upon for a recitation every day. Many institutions permit students to go three or four weeks at a time without obliging them to make a recitation. We work upon the theory of letting the students recite and not the teacher. If you desire any further information on any particular point, address.

Catarrh

IS a blood disease. Until the poison is expelled from the system, there can be no cure for this loathsome and dangerous malady. Therefore, the only effective treatment is a thorough course of Ayer's Sarsaparilla—the best of all blood purifiers. The sooner you begin the better; delay is dangerous.

"I was troubled with catarrh for over two years. I tried various remedies, and was treated by a number of physicians, but received no benefit until I began to take Ayer's Sarsaparilla. A few bottles of this medicine cured me of this troublesome complaint and completely restored my health."—Jesse M. Boggs, Holman's Mills, N. C.

"When Ayer's Sarsaparilla was recommended to me for catarrh, I was inclined to doubt its efficacy. Having tried so many remedies, with little benefit, I had no faith that anything would cure me. I became emaciated from loss of appetite and impaired digestion. I had nearly lost the sense of smell, and my system was badly deranged. I was about discouraged, when a friend urged me to try Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and referred me to persons whom it had cured of catarrh. After taking half a dozen bottles of this medicine, I am convinced that the only sure way of treating this obstinate disease is through the blood."—Charles H. Maloney, 113 River st., Lowell, Mass.

Stanley, in his address to the Royal Geographical Society, describes a forest of 224,000,000 acres and 10,752,000,000 trees. Nature in that region of the world must have been an industrious observer of Arbor Day for thousands of years.

CATARRH—CATARRHAL DEAFNESS—Hay Fever—A New Home Treatment

Sufferers are not generally aware that these diseases are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of living parasites in the lining membrane of the nose and eustachian tubes. Microscopic research, however, has proved this to be a fact, and the result of this discovery is, that a simple remedy has been formulated whereby catarrh, catarrhal deafness and hay fever are permanently cured in from one to three simple applications made at home by the patient once in two weeks.

N. B.—This treatment is not a snuff or an ointment; both have been discarded by reputable physicians as injurious. A pamphlet explaining this new treatment is sent free on application by A. H. DIXON & SON, 337 and 339 West King St., Toronto, Canada.—Christian Advocate.

Sufferers from Catarrhal troubles should carefully read the above. ly

It is said that a Frenchman has discovered that by watering dahlias with tepid water a delicious aroma is imparted to them.

The First Step.

Perhaps you are run down, can't eat, can't sleep, can't think, can't do anything to your satisfaction, and you wonder what ails you. You should heed the warning, you are taking the first step into Nervous Prostration. You need a Nerve Tonic and in Electric Bitters you will find the exact remedy for restoring your nervous system to its normal, healthy condition. Surprising results follow the use of this great Nerve Tonic and Alterative. Your appetite returns, good digestion is restored, and the Liver and Kidneys resume healthy action. Try a bottle. Price 50c. at Robbins & McCord's Drugstore. 6

Great Discoverers.

What Bell and Edison are to the telephone and electricity, says the Pittsburg News, Dr Franklin Miles, the well known specialist in nervous diseases, is to the nervous system and nerve fluid. Among his numerous discoveries the Restorative Nervine is undoubtedly one of the greatest. It is unsurpassed in nervousness, dyspepsia, headache, epilepsy, neuralgia, backache, melancholy, sleeplessness, change of life, etc. Free trial bottles of it may be had of F. E. Davenport, the druggist. All should read his "New and Startling Facts for the Afflicted," a very able, interesting, and finely illustrated book. Free to all. 6

A Valuable Discovery.

Dr. Brown Sequard's elixir of youth may be an important discovery, but every one knows that Dr. Franklin Miles' New Heart Cure certainly is. It has given thousands afflicted with serious heart disease a new lease of life. Druggists who can observe its effects on many customers everywhere speak highly of it. Mr. John Weaver, of Knightstown, Ind., says: "I have sold much of Dr. Miles' New Cure and have received many good reports." O. Monroe, of Dunkirk, N. Y., reports large sales. "And the best part of it is every bottle has given satisfaction." Sold and guaranteed by F. E. Davenport. 6

Better Roads.

The winter through which we have passed, has been a forcible reminder of our needs in this line. It is often said that a good farming country is a bad one for roads. It is likely there is much truth in this, for rich land is generally soft, and roads over such lands are easily soaked soft by rains. Our own county, is a county of soft, rich land, and such a winter as the last one, soaks it through and through. Then there was an unusual amount of heavy teaming to do last winter, and this served to cut up the roads, till from all causes, they became simply impassable. It was a great misfortune to the people of the county, both in town and in the country. It needs no argument to prove this. The only question we are to meet is. Shall this state of things continue? Now, as the summer weather comes on, when in general we have fair roads, people who have to drive teams, find the roads still full of deep holes, with solid sides, making them almost as disagreeable and dangerous as they were in the winter. "In time of peace, prepare for war." Our roads may be tolerable now, but how long will they remain so? Much may be accomplished by intelligent and careful work by the supervisors. But they cannot entirely control the matter. Much depends on the active, willing cooperation of the people, the property owners and the taxpayers. If they stand ready to turn out and work the roads, at the proper time and in the most approved manner, much may be accomplished. We fear, however, that too often, this work is put off to "a more convenient season," a time when other work is slack. But this, is not always the best time to work roads, and if it is it often happens that the work is hastily done, and sometimes but partly completed. Then other work again comes on, and the half finished road remains in that state all summer. A few years ago, we had a road law that required the road tax to be all in money, and we believe much good would have resulted. But as it left us the first season with neither money nor work for the roads it became unpopular and was at once repealed. Yet there are thinking men, who believe it would have been a good law if fully tried. There are those who are now in favor of a similar law. If it is thought too burdensome to keep up the poll tax for instance at the present figure, they say reduce it. Many believe that $1 paid in cash and properly applied on the roads, would result in greater benefits than we now receive. At all events, it will do no harm if we begin now and talk these matters over.

Stole a Watch.

Some thief broke into Lafayette Miser's house, south of Waterloo Sunday afternoon about four o'clock, and stole Mrs. Misers's gold watch and a valuable chain, necklace and some money. Mr. Miser was at church and his wife was over to see her sister, so the house was left alone. The thief got in through a window. He was seen to go up to the house, by some of the neighbors and some time later they saw him go away. But as they supposed the family were at home, they thought nothing of it. When Mr. and Mrs. M. came home and discovered their loss, they at once began to hunt for the thief. Some strangers were run in that evening, but nothing could be proved on them, and they were set free. Monday Mr. M. was over here continuing the search, but at last accounts, had not succeeded. He offers a suitable reward for the apprehension of the thief, or the return of the property, or both.

Electing Senators by the People.

The recent action of Illinois will attract much attention. Remembering the brilliant and almost successful race for the governorship, made by Gen. John M. Palmer two years ago, they have concluded to put him before the people at large as a candidate for United States senator. To this end, the democratic papers over the state, and their county conventions generally indorsed the general for the place, and when the state convention met at Springfield last week, he was unanimously nominated as their candidate for senator. He made them a speech, just as a candidate for governor or for any state office would have done, and accepted the nomination. He says he will canvass the state, and if possible through the direct vote of the people, secure enough members of the legislature to make his election certain. It is the first step looking to popular election for this great office, and people in other states will watch the result with interest.

One at Night.

One dose of Dr. Marshall's Lung Syrup taken in the evening before retiring will give you a good night's rest. It will cure your cough quicker than any other, and is pleasant to take. If you have never tried this remedy, ask your druggist for Dr. Marshall's Lung Syrup the next time you buy. It is guaranteed to give satisfaction. Sold by F. F. Davenport.

The public debt of France is estimated at $6,200,000,000, making it the heaviest of any country in Europe.

Never Give Up.

Many cases of so called consumption have been cured by Dr. Marshall's Lung Syrup. Never give up, as long as life there should be hope, take this medicine; use it persistently, and you will notice a change for the better, as it is peculiarly adapted to this class of diseases. Do not fail to try this remedy in time. Sold by F. E. Davenport.

ON THE MEDITERAANEAN.

Prof. Horace Hoffman's Impressions. On His Way to Athens—Marseilles, Genoa, Naples, the Alps, Vesuvius and Stromboli—The End of the Voyage.

Through the kindness of Mrs. Anna Hoffman we are permitted to give our readers the following letter from her husband, Prof. Hoffman, who is now pursuing his studies at Athens:

STEAMSHIP L'EUROPE, OF FRAUSINET & CO.
MEDITERRANEAN SEA, WEST OF ITALY,
April 4, 1890.

This is the Mediterran boat, which I was counting upon making, but I find that it will not make as quick a trip to Athens as I had expected that it would.

They have changed their course, but do not go direct to Piræus, but one week they stop at Genoa and the next at Naples, alternately. This was the week for it to go by way of Genoa.

Marseilles has a splendid harbor. There were vast numbers of vessels lying there—more it seemed to me than one sees at New York—though I must be mistaken about that. Marseilles is, however, well known to be one of the first ports in the world.

The country around Marseilles, as seen from the harbor, is mountainous, rocky and largely barren. The high hills, or mountains, of grey, bare rock, that skirt the harbor, and the coast, have a very desolate appearance. Some of them had been carved by the forces of nature into forms resembling great castles, towers, grottos, &c. I noticed some grotesque forms high upon a cliff, of which one resembled a sphinx, and another a crouching lion.

The sea was rough, rougher I think than the Atlantic was at any time while we were crossing it, and as this boat is only about half as large as the average ocean steamer, it plunged around a great deal. Some of the ladies, were desperately sick.

The sea was much smoother in the morning, and we were sailing eastward, with the western part of Italy north of us. We had a fine view of the Maritime Alps, whose tops covered with snow, gleamed like fire in the sunlight. We had a distant view of the city of Savona, and presently Genoa came in sight, at first a mere spot on the side of the high hills which skirted the sea, and at their foot, and could be distinguished only by its having a lighter color than the hills themselves. Little by little, as we approached, the details were unfolded to our view until we were near by, and Genoa, the city of Columbus, lay distinct and close before us. As you know, it lies at the angle formed by the coast of Italy at that point, from which on the one hand it stretches away to the southeast, and on the other, to the west.

This general outline of the coast could be distinctly discerned, as we sailed up. At the head of the gulf, thus formed, lies the city, beginning down by the water and extending for some distance up the high hills which rise rapidly from the shore and are crowned by a number of large buildings on their several summits. Some of the buildings I recognized as forts and castles, and some as probably monasteries. The buildings of the city are for the most part covered with stucco, and all of them have a light color, either grey, white or yellow. The light colors harmonize well with the Italian landscape, and this city, as seen from the sea, makes one of the prettiest sights I have ever seen. I took some views of it with my kodak.

We anchored off Genoa about noon and went ashore. We were fortunate in striking the city just when we did, as it is the week before Easter, and the city has a holiday dress. The streets were thronged with people finely dressed, going to and from the churches, or simply promenading and shopping. Many lovely flowers, both natural and artificial, were displayed in the shops, and many other attractive things were to be seen displayed everywhere. The city of Genoa has many attractions—beautiful streets, well paved, and swept clean as a floor, fine buildings, statues, &c.

We passed rather near quite a number of islands the largest of which was Elba.

We shall have quite a voyage on the Mediterranean, but we can not complain, as we have plenty to eat and are comfortably lodged. Almost all the passengers are second-class. There is only one first-class, and he now wishes he had gone second-class too. The cooking is French and is No. 1.

Saturday, April 5.—We have had another splendid day, with clear sky, balmy air and smooth sea. The boat has run as smoothly all day as a river boat.

This afternoon we passed far to the west of Naples, and caught distant views of the islands of Ischia and Capri on our left or to the east, and still more remote beyond them, dimly outlined on the sky, we saw Mount Vesuvius.

About the middle of the afternoon we began to see in the distance, some of the Lipari Islands, a volcanic group north of the eastern part of Sicily. Most conspicious among them was the island mountain of Stromboli, for mountain and island are identical. It rose like a dark pyramid against the sky on the southeast, and we were headed straight for it. The pyramid grew larger and more distinct in its outlines as we approached, and presently we could see the smoke issuing from the crater, and at times a flame leaped up from the smoke.

The sun set as we approached the mountain, a lovely sunset to our rear and right while to our front and left rose the great pyramid of Stromboli, capped with cloud and fire.

It was full moon to-night, and the moon rose just as the sun set, but we could not see it, for it was behind the mountain on our left, and as we sailed by it suddenly, the full moon swung out in all her glory from behind the mountain.

Stromboli is over three thousand feet high, and rises very precipitously, apparently at an angle of about 45 degrees to the sea. The mountain seems to fill all the islands, and yet on a shelf on the south side, near the base of the mountain, we saw a small village. It looked like a desolate and dangerous place to live. We expect to pass the Straits of Messina at about 11 to-night, and I want to stay up to see Scylla and Charybdis by moonlight.

Athens, Greece, April 8.—I am at last at my destination, renowned Athens. I landed at the Piræus at about noon today, and after some delay at the custom house, came on to Athens, and am now located, perhaps only temporarily, at the Hotel d'Athens, Stadium street.

The trip from Marseilles took just six days. Sunday night and Monday it rained and thundered and lightened, and the sea was very rough. The boat flopped up and down, so that one could hardly keep his feet. I never experienced anything half so bad. It cleared off about the time we reached the harbor, but was not clear enough to see the lay of the land as well as we wished. Still, I made out many historic places, such as Aigina, Salamis, Phalerum, &c. We got a view of the Acropolis before we came into the harbor, though rather dim from the haze. I have seen it several times from a distance, but have not visited it yet. It looks much like the pictures.

I can hardly say that I have seen Athens yet, but on the whole it seems about as I thought it would. It is not a large and grand city like Paris, but some parts of it are fine looking and others dirty. It is near the Easter festival of the Greek church, and the city is full of people at present. Their Easter is next Sunday; yours was last. They still follow the Julian calendar here, and are twelve days behind us in their dates. I left Marseilles April 2, and arrived here March 27. I understand that after this year they are to have our way of marking time, in other words, the Gregorian calendar.

STREET-CAR STRIKE.

The Columbus Strikers Standing Firm in Their Demands for Increased Pay—The City Council Takes a Hand in the Matter.

Columbus (Ohio) special: The strike of the Consolidated Street Railway Company is beginning to look serious. This is the second week of the strike and as the consolidated company control every line in the city, Columbus is totally without street-car facilities. All kinds of business is badly affected, the largest establishments being compelled to furnish carriages to convey their customers to and from their stores. The company has made several attempts to run cars under police protection, but without success. All efforts to compromise the differences have proved futile.

Two unsuccessful attempts were made Wednesday to run cars. The whole laboring population of the city swarmed the streets and were determined that no cars should run until the men got their wages demanded. A terrible riot seemed imminent and Mayor Bruck issued an order that no more attempts at running cars should be made until the wage question was settled. Public sentiment is almost unanimous for the strikers, who receive less pay than any carmen in the country. The City Council has adopted a resolution instructing the City Clerk to notify the Consolidated Street Car Company to immediately put its cars in motion, taking back worthy employes to operate them at the increased wages asked or consent to submit the matter of wages to arbitration. In case the company does neither, the City Solicitor is authorized to bring suit to oust the company from its franchises in the streets.

DISASTER ON THE RAIL.

Seven Men Reported Killed and Others Injured in a Collision.

St. Louis special: A very serious railroad wreck is reported from Warrenton, Mo., sixty-one miles west of here on the Wabash road. Dispatches to headquarters of the road here say that two freight trains collided just outside of Warrenton, that both engines and eighteen cars were wrecked and that seven men were killed and several wounded. There were eight palace horse cars attached to one of the trains laden with race horses en route for Kansas City, two of which were wrecked and seven men in charge of the horses are killed. Fifteen horses are also reported killed. Of the trainmen Engineer Shivelle had a rib broken, Fireman Lee Parsons had his collar-bone broken, Fireman Brown had his legs badly sprained, and Brakeman Norton was slightly hurt. A wrecking train was sent out from Moberly and surgeons from several points were sent to the scene as soon as possible. The following are the casualties:

Killed—William H. Thomas, Cynthiana, Ky.; Henry Stone, trainer, Harrodsburg, Ky.; James Kelley, Chicago; Frank Kelley, Chicago; Ed. Simmons, hostler, Lexington; Morris Green, colored, Frankfort, Ky.; Samuel Davis, jockey, Lexington, Ky.

Injured—William Taylor, colored, trainer, Covington, Ky., arm broken; Louis Augustus, colored, Harrodsburg, left thigh broken; George Hurley, colored, Cynthiana; Lee Brown, Louisville, arm broken; Merritt Johnson, colored, St. Louis, arm broken.

The Filibusters.

San Francisco special: A special received here from Ensenada, Lower California, gives an interview with Governor Torres, Governor of the peninsula. Governor Torres says he has been in constant cypher communication with this government since the disclosures were made and has sent a full report, substantiating all that has been published. He says the Mexican Government has decided to demand that the United States punish Walker G. Smith, Augustus B. Merrett, Sanford Worden, Edward Hill and others for their part in the conspiracy. Torres will soon send the English Government the proofs that an English corporation was undoubtedly guilty of conspiracy.

Riot at a Circus.

Quite a riot was reported from Ellsworth, Me., where some men of the place became involved in a bloody fight with some employes of Robbins' circus. A large number took part in the fight, which resulted in many broken heads and severe bruises. After a desperate struggle partial order was finally restored. It is reported that a special police force was appointed and patrolled the streets armed with rifles. Several men were severely injured.

"Gold Spike" Railway Contracted For.

The contract for building the Detroit, Indianapolis & St. Louis (gold spike) Railroad has been awarded to Mr. Charles H. Benjamin, of New York. Work will be begun immediately, and it is the intention to have the cars running between Warsaw, Ind., and Kendallville, a distance of thirty miles, inside of thirty days. When completed the road will extend from Fayette, O., to Bloomington, Ill.

Elevator Burned.

The elevator at Memphis, Tenn., built for the Kentucky Central road at a cost of $75,000, burned. E. C. Adams, of Atchison, Kan., the contractor, who had just completed the building and was sleeping in the second story, was lost. He was 75 years old.

Three Workmen Killed.

While workmen were getting out iron ore two miles south of Pineville, Ky., the earth suddenly caved and three of the twelve workmen were caught and crushed to death. Two others had their legs broken.

SHOT BY INDIANS.

A Picture of Life on Civilization's Border.

Miles City (Mont.) special: Frank S. Carson, a settler on the border of the Tongue River Reservation, arrived here and told the first authentic story of the attempted wholesale killing by a band of Northern Cheyennes. One night a short time since, about twenty savages stole from the ranch of James S. Ferguson three thousand or four thousand pounds of beef, and were carrying it away when the theft was discovered by one of Ferguson's cowboys, who gave the alarm. Ranchman Ferguson and about forty of his men gave chase and recovered the meat. Three or four days later Ferguson and six of his men left the ranch with a couple of teams and did not return until late in the night. The Indians watched their movements, armed themselves, hid among the trees along the roadside, and as the ranch men passed opened fire upon them with deadly results. Mr. Ferguson, who came here from New Hampshire and was the largest stock grower in the valley, was shot through the left lung and heart and died almost instantly. One of the men was shot in the groin and died the next day, and two others received serious wounds. The Indians have since been thoroughly armed and the settlers have become so alarmed that many of them have abandoned their homes and run away. It is learned from Fort Keogh that the two companies at the Tongue River agency and Rose Bud are considered sufficient to cope with the recalcitrant reds, and no more troops will be ordered out for the present.

HIGHBINDERS.

Thirst for the Life of Wong Chin Foo.

New York special: Wong Chin Foo, the only Chinese journalist Gotham can boast of, is at the present time living in abject terror of losing his much-valued life. According to his own story a united effort will be made in the next few days by the "Highbinders" of New York and vicinity to get rid of him. The trouble between Wong and the Highbinders was caused by Wong rescuing a Chinese girl, Suen Yee by name, from the den of Lee Khi, a rich celestial of Mott street, and the subsequent arrest of Kee Khi. So afraid is Wong of his enemies that he has requested Inspector Byrnes to detail a detective to accompany him from his home, on Pell street, whenever he ventures out. Wong Chin Foo has for the last several years been a familiar sight at Park Row. He frequents the offices of the daily newspapers, writing up the news of Chinatown, as Mott Street is called, earning sufficient thereby to live. He dresses in American style, has no cue, and is credited with knowing a great deal more than he really does. Wong first obtained notoriety when he first set foot on American soil. On the steamer on which Wong Ching Foo set sail from China were a number of Chinese women in charge of several Mongolian slave dealers, bound to San Francisco, there to be sold to the Chinese merchants. He took pity on the unfortunate captives, and when the vessel arrived in port he at once notified the United States authorities of the case, the women being sent back to China. Wong was beset with many difficulties in his benevolent work, and incurred the enmity of many Mongolian countrymen. Thrice Wong was mobbed in San Francisco for his work, and it finally became so hot for him that he came east. Since he came to New York, Wong has had many difficulties with the Highbinders, and once barely escaped with his life. When Dennis Kearney, the Sand Lots anti-Chinese agitator, visited New York, he was introduced to Wong, who challenged him to debate on the Chinese question. Kearney declined it, and Wong made fun of him. Wong Chin Foo is about 36 years old, and a native of the Province of Santung, in Northern China. When a boy he was sent to this country by the Chinese Government and educated, returning to China when 18 years old. At home he fell in with a number of revolutionists and was banished from China. This is what brought him to this country.

MASKED ROBBERS.

Stop a Train and Rob the Mail and Express Cars.

A special from Mandan, N. D., dated the 9th inst., says: The through eastbound passenger train, due at midnight, arrived at 1 o'clock this morning, the mail car presenting a sorry appearance. Two miles west of New Salem, and twenty-five miles west from here, the engineer and fireman were surprised to see two masked men climbing over the tender and ordering the train stopped at the end of big revolvers. The summons was obeyed. Express Messenger Anglevaine hearing shots fired forward and suspecting something, hid $600 in money from the safe, locked the small safe, put out the lights, and ran back to New Salem. The mail car was first tackled by the robbers. Only one mail agent was in the car and he immediately obeyed orders by turning over the mail matter. A number of registered letters were rifled and then the two robbers turned their attention to the express car. This they found deserted, much to their chagrin, and mistaking the fireman for the express messenger, they ordered him at the point of pistols to open the safe. He protested that he knew nothing about it, and finally satisfied the robbers. The train backed to New Salem and finally came on east. The express messenger remained incognito and got on the train as it left New Salem. The passengers were not touched. One put his head out of the window during the delay, but was told to get his head back, and a bullet whistled past his head as a reminder that orders had better be obeyed. A posse of men with the Sheriff, mounted and armed, left this morning on special train for the scene of the daring robbery. The robbers compelled Engineer Kilmartin to break in the door of the postal car. Only four masked men were seen at any one time and suspicions are rife that only two were engaged in the work.

Lunch Stands Must Go.

Quite a flurry was caused at the House end of the Capitol by an order by Speaker Reed removing all news stands, cigar stands, etc., from the House end of the building. The telegraph offices are the only things allowed to remain in the corridors and they will be cleared out of the corridor and be put in a room after the close of this session. There are now a number of these stands in the corridors. In the basement corridor there is a cigar stand and a lunch stand kept by an old woman who sells sandwiches and milk to employes cheaper than they can be had at the very expensive House restaurant. On the main floor there are two cigar stands, one of which is a news stand also, one lunch stand, where many members take milk, pie, cake, and sandwiches standing, and the old stand of Clara Morris, where records, pictures and all sorts of fancy articles, such as visitors buy as mementoes, have been sold for many years. In the dome there is one stand which does not come under the jurisdiction of the Speaker.

Destructive Storm.

Another severe storm swept over Western Iowa and did great damage to the towns of Underwood, Neola, Persia, and Weston, and in Pottomattomie County. At Underwood about thirty residences in low lands were wrecked by water and as many families were rendered homeless. Five miles of the Milwaukee track were washed away and all that part of the town traversed by the Milwaukee and Rock Island roads is submerged under fifteen feet of water. At Weston thirteen houses were wrecked and fifty more or less damaged, but there was no loss of life. At Persia water flooded the town five feet deep and four houses were wrecked.

A Terrific Explosion.

An explosion occurred on the German tank steamer, Hans and Kurt, lying at the works of the Atlantic Oil Refining Company at Point Breeze, Delaware River, in the oil district of Philadelphia. The explosion set fire to the vessel and the wharf property, almost destroying the former and burning a brick storage building. Joseph H. Quinn was killed and twelve others were wounded. Damage to ship and cargo, $150,000.

Indiana State Alliance.

The Farmers have met in convention and the State Alliance has been perfected. The plan of organization, the rules of action, with a series of resolutions outlining the principles of the order, were adopted as soon as created by the committee and an intelligent conception of the work was manifested on all sides. The officers of the State Alliance are as follows: President, John C. Lawrence, of Whitley County; Vice President, Samuel Keefer, of Huntington County; Secretary, W. A. Kelsey, of Allen County; Treasurer, Thomas L. McKee, of Allen County; Executive Committee, Joseph Bush, Whitley County; E. H. Stough, Lagrange; Samuel Smith, Elkhart, with President Lawrence and Secretary Kelsey added. Lecturer, J. M. Wade, Lagrange County; Chaplain, Perry Johnson. The Executive Committee have power to locate the next annual meeting and they are also instructed to put lecturers in the field with a view to placing an alliance branch in every county in the State.

Illinois Democrats.

The Democratic State Convention met at Springfield, for the purpose of nominating State officers. A letter from ex-President Cleveland regretting that he could not be present was read. Joseph B. Mann was introduced as temporary Chairman, and in the course of his speech mentioned the name of Gen. Palmer. The wildest scene of the day then ensued. The delegates stood up on the chairs, waved their handkerchiefs, threw their hats, canes, and umbrellas into the air and yelled at the top of their voices. Judge E. S. Wilson was nominated for State Treasurer on the first ballot. Henry Raab, of Bellville, was nominated for State Superintendent of Public Instruction. Gen. Palmer was given the unanimous endorsement of the convention for United States Senator. He came before the convention and made a speech which was received with hearty cheers.

Y. P. C. A. Convention.

The United Brethren Young People's Christian Union Convention, 200 delegates representing fifteen annual conferences met in Dayton, Ohio, adopted a constitution and elected the following officers to serve two years: Dr. J. P. Landis, of the Miami conference, President; Rev. W. A. Dickson, of the Pennsylvania conference, Corresponding Secretary; D. Runkle, of Libson, Iowa, Recording Secretary; Mrs. R. L. Swain, of Westerville, Ohio, Treasurer and one Vice President from each episcopal diocese of the church, and an Executive Committee, which consists of the President, Corresponding Secretary and Rev. A. E. Davis, of Gallion, Ohio; and E. L. Shuey, of Dayton, Ohio. The convention adjourned to meet at such place and time as the Executive Committee may determine.

Down the Bank.

Louisville special: A Wagner through sleeper from Louisville to Boston via Cincinnati, over the Louisville & Nashville, was wrecked near English, Ky. A train sent on to the wreck has just returned with the wounded. Eight persons were seriously injured, two of whom will probably die. The train left Louisville at 2:15 Sunday afternoon. It passed English at about fifteen miles an hour and was going twenty miles an hour just beyond where it ran upon the embankment, which had just been repaired and had been softened by rains. The engine and one coach, which made all the train except the sleeper, passed safely, but the track spread under them. The sleeper was derailed, and broke in two about one-fourth back.

A Broken Wheel.

A Northwestern passenger train from Freeport, which reaches Chicago at 2 o'clock, jumped the track two miles west of Rockford, Ill., on account of a broken wheel. A gang of section men were working about two hundred feet from the point where the engine left the rails and before they could get away, the train had run them down and toppled over on them. The entire train was wrecked, and the engineer and four section men were killed outright. The firemen and two section men and some of the passengers were injured. The killed are: Edward Blaisdell, Freeport, engineer on this division for over thirty-five years; August Johnson, Winnebago; Emil Anderson, Winnebago; John Gustafsen, Pecatonica; John E. Drehmer, Pecatonica.

A Crash in Virginia.

Duffield (Va.) special: A collision occurred six miles west of the Nattonal Tunnel on the South Atlantic and Ohio Railroad between a passenger and mixed train No. 2 and construction train No. 1. About fifty passengers were on board, all of whom were terribly shaken up, and the following are bruised and injured: Jeff Price, a drummer of Bristol, Tenn., injured internally and will probably die. Charles Carpenter, engineer, leg broken; K. Frank, commercial agent, nose broken and otherwise injured. N. H. Beech, Milton Tatten, and Jos. P. Morris, construction hands, all injured internally, but will probably recover.

An Awful Disaster.

A report has just reached Wheeling, W. Va., of a horrible wreck on the Ohio River Railroad between here and Parkersburg. The train was a special of two cars filled with Baltimore and Ohio officials en route to Wheeling. A special train, with surgeons and an Associated Press reporter on board have just left the depot. The train went through a trestle, and the disaster is said to be appalling, though not yet confirmed, as the officials can give no information. A private dispatch says none of the persons in the wrecked train near Parkersburg were badly hurt.

Firemen Injured.

Philadelphia special: A fire broke out at the works of the Pennsylvania Gas Globe Company. It was probably started by a spark from a pipe. Twelve barrels of gasoline exploded and seriously burned eleven firemen about the face, hands and body. They are McConnell, Hetuck, Hillman, John Warner, of company five, Thomas Brogan, Thomas Smith and James Russell, of truck C, and Thomas Graham, David Patterson, Robert Burns and Joseph McQuare, of engine twenty-five. The loss to property is small.

Mayor Arrested.

Pittsburg special: A sensation was created here in political circles by the arrest of Mayor James Wyman, of Allegheny City, upon the charge of perjury in taking the oath of office. Wyman swore he had not used money or other consideration to secure his election, but James H. Walkup, who made the charge against Wyman, says he can prove that the latter did use money and promised positions to his friends during the canvass.

The Nebraska Cyclone.

The fatalities at Bradshaw now reach fifteen. The wounded have been removed to other towns or into the country. Of the 300 stricken households it is estimated that not 10 per cent. will be able to erect roofs over their heads.

An Infuriated Boar.

Samuel Boss, a farmer living near Mt. Vernon, Ohio, a few days ago had a desperate fight with a 5-year-old boar which has lately been ugly. The hog chased Mrs. Boss from the barnyard, and Boss started with a pitchfork to put the boar back into the pen. Boss stabbed the animal with the pitchfork, and the infuriated beast threw him down and tore his clothing into shreds, cutting and bruising him fearfully. The hired man went to Boss's assistance and laid out the hog with a singletree.

Will Be Expelled.

The authors of an indecent pamphlet attacking certain students and professors of the Indiana State University at Bloomington have been discovered. Eight students are said to be implicated and all will probably be expelled. The circular was published at Spiceland. A son of one of the University Trustees is said to be implicated, and four members of the senior class will probably not be allowed to graduate because of the scandal. A student from Fort Wayne is one of the eight.

Three Men Killed.

A wagon containing four men was struck by the Washington limited on the Pennsylvania Railroad at Newark, N. J. The accident occurred at the Market street crossing. The wagon was struck exactly in the center and carried a distance of fifty feet. William P. McGinnis, unmarried, was killed, and Frank Houck and John Kenny, fatally hurt. James Coyle escaped by jumping. It is said the accident is the fault of the men as the flagman warned them.

Helped the Prisoners Escape.

Pat Morris, a prominent Meridian street saloon keeper, and Pat Morgan, census enumerator for the Cardonia district and Treasurer of the Miners' Relief Committee, were arrested at Brazil on the confession of young Pat Lynch, who accuses them of furnishing the tools with which ex-Councilman Kerins and himself sawed their way out of jail. Both men were put under heavy bonds.

Shot a Negro.

A white man named J. S. Shelton shot a negro named Johnson, at Bessemer, Ala., inflicting a serious wound. A crowd of negroes surrounded Shelton and threatened to hang him, but the white men rallied to his rescue and the threatened lynching was not attempted. Shelton was arrested and put in jail.

Fined and Confined.

City Treasurer Tuite, of Detroit, the ardent Cronin partisan, was recently adjudged guilty of contempt by the Supreme Court, and fined $250. He has neglected to pay the fine, and the Chief Justice ordered the Sheriff to arrest him and keep him in confinement until the fine is paid.

Each Have a Dozen Children.

A Quebec special says: One thousand applications have already been made to the Provincial Government for the bounty of 100 acres of land to families of twelve or more living children. The act of the Legislature authorizing these grants was only sanctioned April 6 last.

Assaulted and Nearly Killed.

David Mayer, private secretary to W. J. Spicer, Superintendent of the Grand Trunk Railway, was assaulted by robbers and nearly killed while going home through the suburbs of Detroit. He was unable to give any account of the affair.

Killed in a Runaway.

R. C. Hickman, an old resident of Danville, Ill., while driving alone near here was thrown from his wagon by his horse running away. His dead body was found in his orchard. He had tried to creep home, dying on the way.

The Oregon Election.

Incomplete returns from all counties in Oregon give Herman, Republican, for Congress, 8,977 majority. Pennoyer, Democrat, for Governor, 3,466 majority. It is thought these majorities will be increase by official counts.

High License Killed Him.

The body of Frederick Huester was found in the river at Terre Haute, Ind. It has been learned that he committed suicide on account of the passage of the bill charging saloons $250 annual license.

The Unknown Dead.

The body of a man with a bullet hole in his head was found near Jacksonville, Fla. The cuff-buttons bore the initial "H.," and a paper in his vest pocket had on it the name, "J. House, Piqua, O."

Killed Two Birds with One Stone.

Frank McIlvain, Cashier of the Sulphur Deposit Bank at Sulphur, Ky., has disappeared with $10,000 belonging to the bank, and the wife of John Watkins accompanied him in his flight.

Burned with Moulten Steel.

A ladle of molten steel was accidentally overturned at the Allegheny (Pa.) Bessemer Steel Works, burning five men, one fatally. The victim was Thomas Holland.

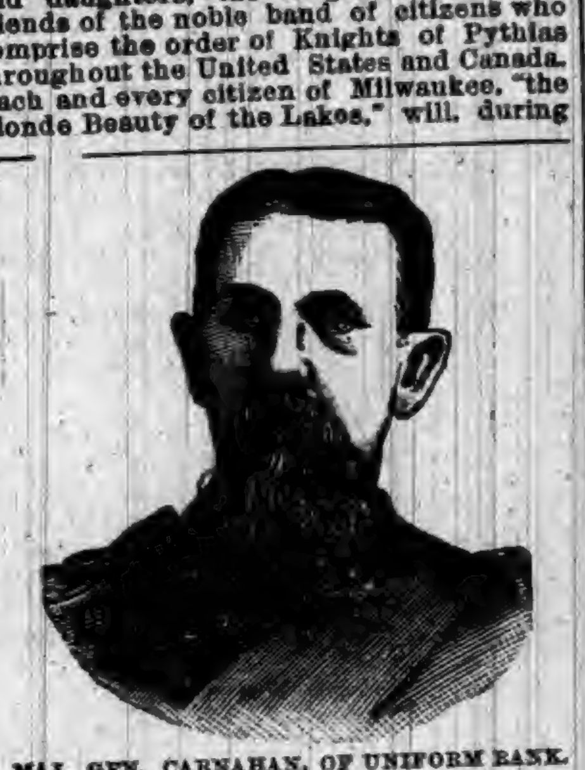
KNIGHTS OF PYTHIAS.

PREPARATIONS FOR THE GREAT CONCLAVE IN MILWAUKEE.

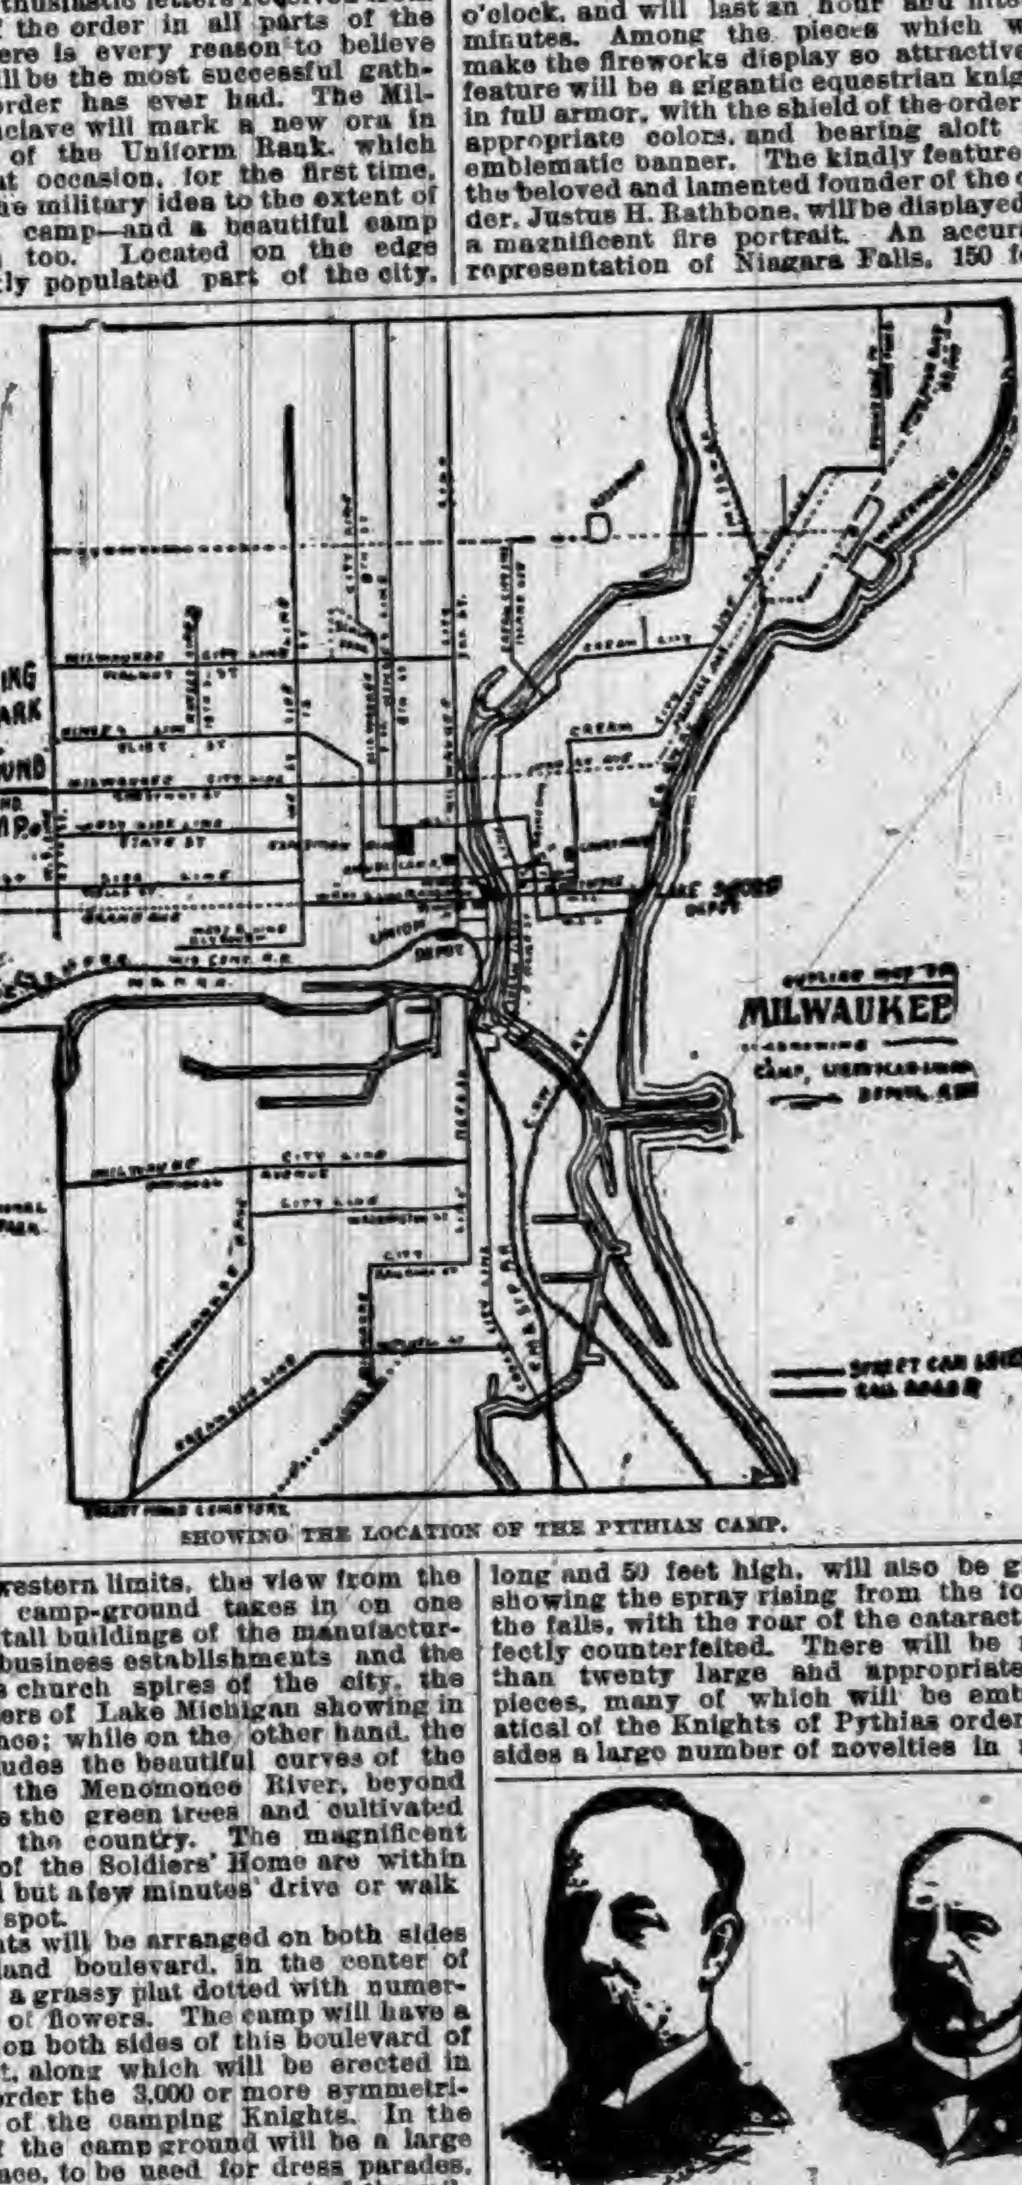
The Cream City to Royally Entertain Her Visitors—Big Features to Be Made of the Uniform Rank Prize Drills and Parade—The Pyrotechnic Display.

MILWAUKEE, Wis., June 2.—The sixteenth session of the Supreme Lodge of the Knights of Pythias of the World, and the first encampment of the Uniform Rank of that flourishing secret society, will, together, form the most attractive gathering of the kind to be held on the Western Continent during the year 1890. For the week of July 7-12, inclusive, the hospitable people of Milwaukee will open the gates of the city, and of their hearts as well, and will give to the visiting Knights, uniformed and without uniform, a most royal welcome. They will also welcome the wives and daughters, the neighbors and the friends of the noble band of citizens who comprise the order of Knights of Pythias throughout the United States and Canada. Each and every citizen of Milwaukee, "the Blonde Beauty of the Lakes," will, during that week, constitute himself a committee of one to attend to the pleasure of the thousands of strangers who will be here.



MAJ. GEN. CARNAHAN, OF UNIFORM RANK.

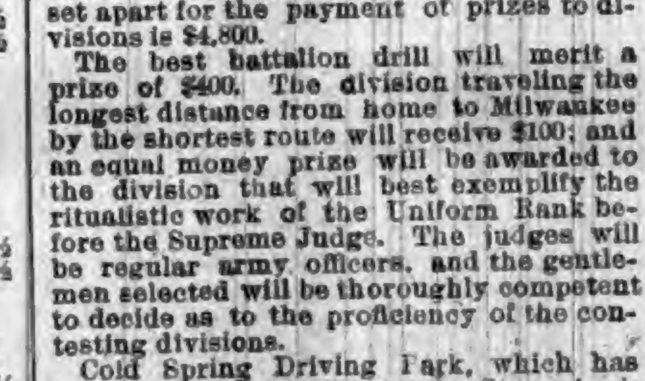
From the information now in hand, and from the enthusiastic letters received from members of the order in all parts of the country, there is every reason to believe that this will be the most successful gathering the order has ever had. The Milwaukee conclave will mark a new era in the history of the Uniform Rank, which will on that occasion, for the first time, carry out the military idea to the extent of going into camp—and a beautiful camp it will be, too. Located on the edge of a thickly populated part of the city, near its western limits, the view from the proposed camp-ground takes in on one hand the tall buildings of the manufacturing and business establishments and the numerous church spires of the city, the blue waters of Lake Michigan showing in the distance on the other hand. The view includes the beautiful curves of the valley of the Menomonee River, beyond which are the green trees and cultivated fields of the country. The magnificent grounds of the Soldiers' Home are within sight and but a few minutes' drive or walk from the spot.



SHOWING THE LOCATION OF THE PYTHIAN CAMP.

The tents will be arranged on both sides of Highland boulevard, in the center of which is a grassy plat dotted with numerous beds of flowers. The camp will have a frontage on both sides of this boulevard of 2,400 feet, along which will be erected in regular order the 3,000 or more symmetrical tents of the camping Knights. In the center of the camp ground will be a large open space, to be used for dress parades, which each day will form a part of the military discipline under which the camp will be managed. Gen. E. L. Brand, of Chicago, chief of the staff for Maj. Gen. Carnahan, of the Uniform Rank, has charge of the laying out of the camp ground. He will assign the different divisions to their quarters in the order of seniority.

While the conclave is an affair of great interest to all the members of the Knights of Pythias order, the main features of the week will be those parts in which the Uniform Rank will participate. The prize drills by competing divisions will form an especially notable feature. Milwaukee citizens have offered eight prizes for proficiency in drill, which will be hotly contested for by divisions from every State in the Union. The aggregate amount of money set apart for the payment of prizes to divisions is $4,800.



WM. WARD, Supreme Chancellor. GEO. B. SHAW, Sup. Vice-Chancellor.

The best battalion drill will merit a prize of $400. The division traveling the longest distance from home to Milwaukee by the shortest route will receive $100; and an equal money prize will be awarded to the division that will best exemplify the ritualistic work of the Uniform Rank before the Supreme Judge. The judges will be regular army officers, and the gentlemen selected will be thoroughly competent to decide as to the proficiency of the contesting divisions.

Cold Spring Driving Park, which has been used by the Wisconsin State Agricultural Society for the State Fair for several years past, has been chosen for the drill ground. It is in fine condition. The covered amphitheater will seat several thousand people who will witness the drill, and the open space within the mile track will make a magnificent drill ground, and, at the same time, afford standing room for thousands more.

The programme for conclave week will open on Tuesday morning, July 8, although it is expected that the Uniform Knights will arrive in time to go into camp on the previous evening, and that a vast crowd of ununiformed lodge members and visitors, who are not members of the order, will have arrived in the city and be comfortably fixed in their quarters by that time.

Officers and members of the Supreme Lodge will rendezvous at the Plankinton House at 9 o'clock Tuesday morning, and will march to the Exposition Building, the mammoth auditorium of which will be arranged for the royal welcome which will there be tendered to the delegates. The cordial greetings of the State of Wisconsin and the city of Milwaukee will be extended in a fitting manner by Gov. W. D. Hoard, Mayor Geo. W. Peck, and Chancellor Hoskins, of Wisconsin. Responses will be made on behalf of the Supreme Lodge by Supreme Chancellor Ward, of Newark, N. J., and other members of the Supreme body. Following this reception, which will be an elaborate affair and will be attended by a vast audience, the Supreme Lodge will go into session and will hold meetings every day until the business before it is completed.

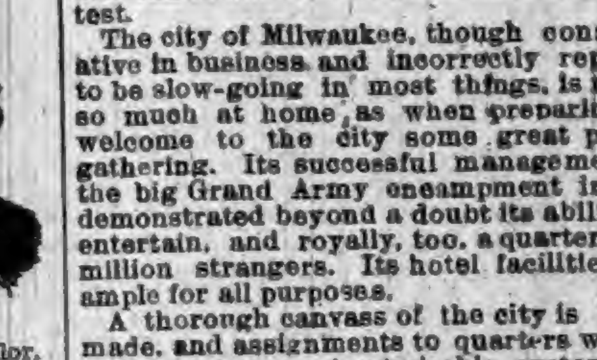
R. L. C. WHITE, Sup. Keeper Record and Seal. HOWARD DOUGLASS, Past Sup. Chancellor.

On Tuesday afternoon, promptly at 4 o'clock, General Carnahan's Pythian army will move forward on a grand parade over a line of march extending three miles through the principal parts of the city. The column will be reviewed by the Supreme Chancellor and Major General. There will be fully 12,000 Knights in the line, all fully equipped in their attractive uniforms. Including the officers of divisions and half a dozen or more mounted divisions, there will be nearly 2,000 men on horseback in line. This will be one of the most magnificent military displays ever seen in the United States. Following the parade of Uniform Knights will come a long procession of lodge members without uniforms.

On Wednesday morning the competitive drill will commence and will be continued all the morning. In the afternoon the entire Pythian army will be drawn up in line for inspection and review.

Thursday morning will be given up to prize drills. In the afternoon the Supreme Lodge delegates will be given a complimentary drive around the city by the citizens of Milwaukee. At that time or some other convenient occasion during the week, it is expected that the Supreme Lodge will enjoy an excursion on Lake Michigan to Whitefish Bay, a beautiful pleasure resort five miles north of the city.

The pyrotechnic display at Cold Spring Park on Thursday evening is intended to eclipse all similar efforts so far made in the West. The bombardment will open at 8:30 o'clock, and will last an hour and fifteen minutes. Among the pieces which will make the fireworks display so attractive a feature will be a gigantic equestrian knight in full armor, with the shield of the order in appropriate colors, and bearing aloft an emblematic banner. The kindly feature of the beloved and lamented founder of the order, Justus H. Rathbone, will be displayed in a magnificent fire portrait. An accurate representation of Niagara Falls, 150 feet long and 50 feet high, will also be given, showing the spray rising from the foot of the falls, with the roar of the cataract perfectly counterfeited. There will be more than twenty large and appropriate set pieces, many of which will be emblematic of the Knights of Pythias order, besides a large number of novelties in movable pieces which have never before been attempted.



MAYOR GEO. W. PECK, Milwaukee. W. C. WILLIAMS, Manager Conclave Com.

On Wednesday evening Schlitz Park will be the scene of a grand prize band concert, in which there will be a lively rivalry on the part of the various bands, numbering probably fifty or more, which will attend the conclave. The prizes given to the band will aggregate $800 in value. The first, second, and third prizes will be offered without reference to the number of musicians composing the band, but Milwaukee bands will be excluded from this contest.

The city of Milwaukee, though conservative in business and incorrectly reputed to be slow-going in most things, is never so much at home as when preparing to welcome to the city some great public gathering. Its successful management of the big Grand Army encampment in 1889 demonstrated beyond a doubt its ability to entertain, and royally, too, a quarter of a million strangers. Its hotel facilities are ample for all purposes.

A thorough canvass of the city is being made, and assignments to quarters will be made upon a most admirable system, the persons desiring quarters being placed in direct communication with the proprietors of hotels or the owners of private houses.

The railroads are all making the lowest excursion rates, and it is expected that the rate wars will reduce to a still lower point the cost of traveling to Milwaukee during the conclave.

To provide for the exportation of fermented liquor in bond without payment of internal revenue tax. House bill to authorize the President of the United States to cause certain lands, heretofore withdrawn from market for reservoir purposes, to be restored to the public domain. The silver bill was again taken up and Mr. Farwell addressed the Senate in its favor. At the close of Mr. Farwell's speech the silver bill was again laid aside and the fortification bill taken up. The amendment to increase the appropriation for rifled sea-coast mortars from $250,000 to $400,000 was agreed to—yeas, 24; nays, 22. Without further action on the bill the Senate adjourned. In the House, on motion of Mr. Perkins (Kan.), the Senate bill was passed changing the boundaries of the reservation of the Uncompahgre Utes. The House then proceeded to the consideration of the Alabama contested election case of McDuffie vs. Turpin. Mr. Comstock (Minn.) opened the discussion with an argument in favor of the claims of the contestant. Mr. Crisp (Ga.) presented the claims of the contestee. Mr. Bergen (N. Y.) spoke for McDuffie and Mr. Oates, of Alabama, for Turpin. Pending further debate the House adjourned.

In the Senate, on the 4th inst., the presiding officer announced as the select committee on the bill for the establishment of the University of the United States: Messrs. Edwards, Sherman, Ingalls, Blair, Dolph, Harris, Butler, Gibson and Barbour. The fortifications bill was then taken up. All the amendments recommended by the Committee on Appropriations were agreed to, and the bill was reported to the Senate. Mr. Frye offered a joint resolution to authorize the President to form alliances with foreign countries for the suppression of the liquor traffic. Referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations. The Senate then adjourned. In the House, Mr. Osborne, of Pennsylvania, presented the conference report on the army appropriation bill. After some debate over the "Canteen" clause, the report was agreed to. The House then entered into further consideration of the Alabama contested election case of McDuffie against Turpin. Mr. Rowell, of Illinois, summed up the case of the contestant. The first vote was taken on the minority resolution, declaring that Turpin was elected, and it was rejected—yeas, 114; nays, 130. The majority resolution seating McDuffie was agreed to—yeas, 130; nays, 113—and Mr. McDuffie appeared at the bar of the House and took the oath of office.

In the Senate, on the 5th inst., Senator Evarts, from the Library Committee, reported the Senate bill appropriating $30,000 for a monument in Washington City to Captain John Ericsson, inventor of the Monitor. Placed on the calendar. The following bills were taken from the calendar and passed: The Senate bills granting pensions of $50 a month to the widow of Rear Admiral Donaldson, and to the widow of Commander Winslow, of the Kearsarge; the Senate bill to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Columbia River by the Oregon Railway Extension Company. Mr. Blair introduced a bill to prohibit the exportation of alcoholic liquors to Africa and the islands of the Pacific Ocean. Referred. The Senate then adjourned. In the House, Mr. McKinley, of Ohio, from the Committee on Rules, reported a resolution providing that the House shall proceed immediately to the consideration of House bill 5381 (the silver bill), and that the consideration shall continue until Saturday at 3 p. m., when the previous question shall be considered as ordered. The previous question having been ordered on the resolution, forty minutes' debate was allowed. The resolution was adopted—yeas, 120; nays, 117. The motion to reconsider was tabled—yeas, 124; nays, 118. The bill having been read, Mr. Conger of Iowa offered the caucus bill as a substitute. Mr. McComas of Maryland moved to amend the substitute by adding to Section 6 the words "and the purchase of silver bullion shall be suspended while it is being so deposited for coinage." Mr. Taylor, of Illinois, offered an amendment to the original bill providing that if the net amount of silver bullion received shall be less than $2,000,000 any one month the Secretary of the Treasury shall in the succeeding month purchase a sufficient amount to supply the deficiency. Mr. O'Donnell, of Michigan, moved to amend the amendment by striking out $2,000,000 and inserting $3,000,000. Mr. Williams, of Illinois, spoke in favor of the free coinage of silver. Mr. Taylor, of Illinois, spoke in favor of the bill and Mr. Lanham, of Texas, opposed it. Pending further debate the House adjourned.

In the Senate on the 6th inst., after some minor business, a new conference on the dependent pension bill was ordered, after which the silver bill was taken up, Mr. Plumb addressing the Senate. After Mr. Plumb had finished the silver bill was laid aside, and a message from the President in relation to the landing of an armed force from the revenue cutter McLane at Cedar Keys, Fla., was presented, read, and referred to the Judiciary Committee. After an executive session the Senate adjourned. The silver debate was resumed in the House, Mr. Lind (Minn.) being the first speaker. He spoke upon the three measures before the House and upheld the Republican caucus bill as the least objectionable. Mr. Flower (N. Y.) confined his remarks not to the silver question but to a constitutional amendment relegating to the people within prescribed localities the choice of such administrative officials whose functions of office lie entirely within the prescribed area, and whose choice is of consequence only to the people whom they immediately serve. Mr. Lacey (Iowa) maintained that the country needed an expansion of the currency in a safe way. Mr. Walker (Mass.) said that more money meant more misery, and Mr. Perkins (Kan.) retorted: "We all love misery." Speeches were made by Messrs. Blount (Ga.), Bland (Mo.), Kerr (Iowa), Townsend (Colo.), Dorsey (Neb.), and McRae (Ark.), and at 5 o'clock the House took a recess until 8 o'clock, the evening session to be devoted to a general debate on the silver bill. At the evening session Mr. Perkins (Kan.) acted as Speaker pro tem. The orators of the evening were: Messrs. Barnes (Ga.), Parrott (Ind.), Ellis (Ky.), Burton (Ohio), Lane (Ill.), Shively (Ind.), Wickham (Ohio), Montgomery (Ky.), Holman (Ind.), Heard (Mo.), and Wheeler (Ala.). The House at 11 o'clock adjourned.

A TENDER CHORD.

BY MANDA L. CROCKER.

Stranger, there you've twanged a chord I'd rather never hear,
Tho' upon my soul it is the sweetest to my ear;
But, ye see, I'd kinder lost 'em—pleasant thots,
ye know, of yore—
And I wish I'd altogether, seein's they return no more.

Yes, your tellin' of the homestead an' yer mother at the door,
Watchin' for her boy a-comin' with the cows on jest afore,
Makes me think o' times that's drifted out beyint
the settin' sun,
Leavin' me, a vag, to wander up and down 'till
I am done.

I've bin tryin' to forget it, sames I would a troubled dream,
All that nestled there together in the bendin' of the stream;
From the cabin in the orchard, where the shadders
uster steal,
To the bridge an' clump o' elders jest above my flutter-wheel.

But yer talkin' of yer childhood brings mine
back agin to me,
An' the things I hed forgotten are the very ones
I see;
An' I hear agin my mother callin' me her darlin'
Roy,
An'—I raley wonder, mister, if I aint her little boy?

Seems as if I were barefooted, with the rim all off my hat,
Runnin' 'cross the fields at sunset for the cattle in the "flat;"
Seems to me I hear the tinkle of the bell that Cherry wore,
An' look back an' see my mother standin' in the kitchen door!

An' I smell the bloomin' clover, as I skip along the ridge;
An' hear the clutter, clutter of the wheel below
the bridge;
Later then my mother comin' with the milk-pail
on her arm,
An' she talks, as she is milkin', of the prospects of the farm.

Later still I skip before her, puttin' down an' up the bars,
Whistlin' to the whip-poor-will an' countin' biggest stars,
Watchin' swallers skim the zenith, bizzy with their evenin' meal,
List'nin' to the milk a-strainin', while the shadders round us steal.

Seems to me I hear her hummin' of the hymns
she uster know;
Patient, hopeful mother allers—but, my friend,
that's long ago,
An', ye see, I'd kinder lost it, pleasant picture,
stained by time,
If I hadn't heard yer story of yer happy auld lang syne.

But ye twanged a chord vibratin' with a bubblin', childish joy
That's bin mighty silent, mister, sence I was a little boy;
An' that's why, tho' 'tis the sweetest to my lonely,
friendless ear,
That I kinder wish ye'd missed it, for I'd rather never hear.

BETRAYED;

—OR—

A DARK MARRIAGE MORN.

A Romance of Love, Intrigue and Crime.

BY MRS. ALICE P. CARRISTON.

CHAPTER II.—(Continued).

It was nine o'clock in the evening before Ray called at Eugene's room.

He found him as he had expected, writing; and after tarrying for half an hour, and speaking what words of encouragement he could think of, he left, feeling that it would be a relief to his friend to have him do so.

The next morning when he arose, Eugene found a business letter awaiting him. After a wondering glance at the envelope he tore it open. The letter it contained was brief and to the point:

"DEAR SIR—I am greatly in want of an efficient book-keeper. You have been strongly recommended to me, and I offer you the position. The salary I am prepared to pay is one thousand dollars per annum. If you accept, I should be glad to have you enter upon your duties to-morrow morning. Respectfully, etc.,

"JOHN NORTON, Publisher,"

For some moments Eugene was almost unable to speak, or, for that matter, even to think; but presently he was more himself, and then the truth flashed upon him.

"John Norton? Why, that's Ray's relative. Ah! I see it all now; this is his doings, or—no! it's more like Meta. I must go to them at once;" and he went.

Yes, it was Meta's doings. Ray had hastened home from the bank, and, full of the subject, had told her everything.

Without a word, but with pale face and quivering lips, she had hurried to her own room, and after dressing for going out, had hastened through the sitting-room, saying, as she passed into the hall:

"Brother, I hope to be back in an hour. If I do not come, don't worry; I shall be safe," and then she had almost flown to the publisher.

He heard her story, gave her a hundred dollars, telling her to see that it was handed to Eugene on the morrow, and then told her that their friend should not want for employment.

And thus it was that young Cleveland, on this next morning after his dismissal from the bank, found himself far better off, in a worldly point of view, than he had been on the day before.

In the dark hour of his trouble and disappointment he had written a letter to a sweet and trusting girl in a pretty New England village, informing her that he had lost his situation, but saying never a word about the woman who had caused his disgrace.

On returning to his room after his second day's service at the publishing house, he found a note on his table. It was simply this:

"Come to me, my own love, and be comforted. I am here at my aunt's.

"MILDRED.

"298 West Thirty-second street.

"Tuesday morning."

Eugene gave a glad shout of satisfaction, and started for Thirty-second street at once.

Ah! how much those two had to say to each other! How earnestly she regarded him—how eagerly she watched his every movement!

"And so you are to have one thousand dollars a year, now?" she said, at last.

"Yes, dear; that is to be my salary."

"Isn't that a great deal—I mean, won't it support you quite comfortably?"

"Yes, indeed; and my little wife, too, if she will be my wife. What do you say, Mildred?"

"I see very clearly," she responded demurely, "that unless I say yes you will be getting into fresh trouble directly."

"Ah! then you consent. Bless you, Mildred—bless you, my own darling!" And he covered her lips with kisses.

CHAPTER III.

THE WEDDING—THE FLIGHT.

Mildred Lester's home was a pretty vine-covered cottage, in an attractive New England village on Long Island Sound, where her whole life had been passed in quiet happiness with her widowed mother.

She was less than ten years of age when Eugene Cleveland, then in his seventeenth year, first saw and became interested in her; but it is not to be supposed that she felt drawn toward him at that time.

Her mother, however, who was still far from old, took a sudden and great liking to the boy, and when she discovered his manifest preference for her child, gravely, and even earnestly, declared to him that it should be the one great object of her life to train her up to be worthy of his love.

Eugene was delighted, and from that moment not only the more diligently worshiped his little friend, but included her mother in his devotion.

And so the years passed—happy, joyous years, with hardly a care. But at length misfortunes came, and the young lover lost father and fortune at the same moment.

Then, through his uncle's influence, he became a book-keeper in the Atlantic National Bank.

How he lost his situation we already know, and we also know with what tender solicitude Mildred, who had long since learned to love him with all her heart, had flown to his side, to be with and to comfort him.

Time sped swiftly by; the wedding day was fixed, and was rapidly approaching.

The only question that had not been settled was the place where the ceremony should be performed. Should it be at the widow's cottage in New England, or at the bride's aunt's in New York?

"I am afraid, love," said Eugene, one evening, when this question was brought up, "I am afraid that it will have to be here, though I should like so much to be married at your own dear home, where we have both known so much of happiness."

"And why can't we?"

"Why, you see, dear, we are so busy now. I am wanted at the publishing house every moment in the day, and having been there so short a time, I hardly see my way clear to asking for a leave of absence, even with so important an object in view as taking to myself a wife. So I think your mother had better come down, and that the ceremony had better be quietly performed in the evening, after the business of the day is over."

"But I fear mamma may not be well enough to come down," objected Mildred.

"Not well enough?" repeated Eugene, wonderingly.

"Ah!" sighed Mildred, "you don't know how fast she has been failing lately. Why, she can no longer go out of doors. It is even as much as she can do to get from one room into another at times."

"Good heavens!" he exclaimed, "that's bad. I am very sorry to hear that;" and then, after considering for a moment, "but, dear, we must have her with us some way."

"I fear she'll think it best not to attempt to come to the wedding," said Mildred; "but she may come to us after we return from our bridal trip."

"I am afraid you have not quite understood me, Mildred," said Eugene, gently; "we sha'n't have much of a bridal trip, I think."

"What! Not have any bridal trip at all?" exclaimed Mildred, in a disappointed tone.

"Why, really, my darling, I don't quite see how we could have much of one, any way," he responded.

"In the first place, as you see, I can't very well get the time, and if, as I greatly desire, we go to house-keeping at once, as my friend Raymond Fielding and his sister have done, why, we shall require all my surplus cash to purchase our fitting out."

"It will hardly seem like getting married, not to have a wedding trip," mused Mildred; "but I can very well see that it will hardly be practicable or wise to undertake one."

"I knew you would look at it in that light, my darling," exclaimed Eugene, approvingly, "and now about your mother, Mildred; let us settle that."

"Ah! I will write to her at once, and find out what suggestions she has to offer. But, say, Eugene, couldn't we take the 4 or the 4:30 train up, get married at our house in the evening, and then return by the early train the next morning?"

"Why—yes; I think we might possibly manage that. At any rate, write and see what your mother says, and when we get her answer we can settle all details more intelligently."

Mildred did write that very night before preparing for bed, and two days later the answer came.

Mrs. Lester professed herself as very much surprised at the haste the young couple were making, but did not attempt to dissuade them from carrying out their plan.

One thing, however, she made very clear. She could not possibly bear the excitement of a wedding taking place in her house.

She suggested, therefore, that they should be quietly married at her sister's; have a brief reception afterward, if perfectly agreeable to her, and then take a late train to Riverside, and spend one night at the cottage.

After they had been married a month or so, she further said, she would, if they wished it, rent her little cottage, and make her future home with them.

As nothing better could be done, they concluded to act wholly on Mrs. Lester's suggestions.

Mrs. Vernon, Mildred's aunt, cheerfully consented to have the wedding and reception take place in her parlors, and so the necessary arrangements were made, and the invitations sent out.

It was not their intention to ask a great many to congratulate them; but Eugene's acquaintance in the city was large, and Mrs. Vernon had a host of friends, whom, she said, it would not do to slight on such an occasion.

So that, when the list came to be revised for the last time before the eventful day, they found there was still quite an army left, after dropping every name they could find any excuse for rejecting.

At last the wedding day arrived. Eugene had seen Ray the night before, and received from him the assurance that he would be promptly on hand.

"As for Meta, poor girl," he had said, "I don't know whether it will be possible for her to be present or not. She hasn't been at all well for some days past, and when I left her this evening she said she hardly thought she should try to sit up till my return; and, by Jove, old fellow, if she don't let me in to-night, it will be the first time she's missed since we've kept house together."

The marriage was to take place at an early hour, and only a favored few were to witness the ceremony.

The appointed hour arrived, the minister was on hand. They only waited for Ray and Meta.

Five—ten—fifteen minutes passed, and still the expected guests did not appear.

The minister looked impatiently at his watch; he had another engagement, and the time was slipping by. Moreover, it was nearly the hour for the reception.

"I would suggest," whispered the clergyman, meeting Eugene in the hall, "that the ceremony be no longer delayed. Doubtless your friends have been unavoidably detained."

"We will wait just five minutes," rejoined Eugene, "and if they are not here then, not a minute longer."

"Very well," and the minister turned to answer a remark of the bride's aunt.

The five minutes passed; still no Ray—no Meta. They must give them up. Eugene, who had been to the door for the twentieth time, closed it once more and went up stairs to fetch the bride.

The ceremony was quickly over; the clergyman, as in duty bound, kissed the bride, and the happy couple received the warmest congratulations of their friends. And now other guests began to pour in, and the house filled up rapidly.

Presently, while Eugene and his wife were surrounded by and were conversing with a number of their guests, the footman who had been engaged for the occasion made his way to him and placed a sealed note in his hand.

"'Urgent,' the bearer requested me to say, sir," he said, with a bow, and then discreetly withdrew.

"Excuse me," said Eugene, and wonderingly he opened the note.

His wife, who was watching his face with eager interest, saw a strange look of fear, remorse or alarm settle there, and was about to speak, when he hastily exclaimed:

"I must leave you for a little while, dear; I am very sorry, but it can't be helped. I shall be back in ample time to take the train. Don't let it be generally known that I am gone." And with a hasty glance at those about him, he left the room.

A strange sense of impending evil weighed upon poor Mildred's heart, and she even thought that those around her, who had seen her husband's hasty withdrawal, partook of the feeling.

Fifteen—twenty minutes passed. She thought she would find her aunt, and ask her what it could possibly be that had called her husband from her side at such a time.

She had just reached the hall when some one pulled the bell.

A sense of dread seized her, and, clasping her hand to her side, she leaned against the wall for support.

The footman opened the door. A messenger stood without; he handed in a letter, and immediately departed.

The solemn menial glanced at the address.

"For you, ma'am," he said, and placed the missive in Mildred's outstretched hand.

A sudden impulse took possession of her; and gathering up her skirts she fairly flew up the stairs and closeted herself in her own room.

To tear open the letter was but the work of an instant, and it hardly took longer to devour its contents.

This is what she read:

"Poor innocent and betrayed one, where do you think the husband you are waiting for is at this moment? Would you know the truth? Then go to the home of her whom he loves but too well—the sister of his friend.

"Do you doubt? Think for a moment. For whom did he disgrace himself and lose his situation in the bank? Her brother. Who procured him another and better place? This girl herself.

"I tell you again you are betrayed. She has summoned him to her, and he has gone—even before you are the bride of an hour!

"This warning comes from

"A FRIEND."

With a groan Mildred crushed the cowardly letter in her hand, and abstractedly thrust it in her bosom. As she did so, something white on the carpet attracted her attention.

She picked it up and saw that it was a note. Quickly she remembered that Eugene had left his hat and overcoat in that room, and that he must have come there for them when he went out. This must have been the very note he had received, and he must have dropped it then.

She opened it with trembling hands.

One glance was enough. She uttered a sharp cry of pain.

"Oh, mother! oh, my poor mother!" she moaned; and, seizing hat and shawl, threw them on any way, and stealthily leaving the house, fled in the darkness of the night.

CHAPTER IV.

AN OPPORTUNITY LOST.

On leaving his bride in the parlor, Eugene Cleveland had hastened upstairs to the room in which Mildred a little late sought seclusion.

After closing the door, he had once more carefully read over the note he had received, and then, as he thought, thrust it into his vest pocket.

His overcoat lay across the back of a chair, and his hat was on the table close by. In putting on his coat the somewhat crumpled note, which had been rather carelessly thrust into his pocket, fell out upon the floor.

This, unfortunately, he did not notice; and having buttoned his coat and seized his hat, he hastened from the room.

Passing down a back stairway, in order to avoid attracting attention, he descended to the basement, kept on through the servants' hall, and so at last gained the street.

For a moment he hesitated, as if uncertain what course to pursue, and then started at a rapid pace toward Sixth avenue.

He had hardly reached the corner when he saw an empty cab approaching. He at once hailed it, and as it drew up to the sidewalk, sprang inside.

"Where to?" asked the driver, as he opened the door.

"Two hundred and ninety-five West Forty-seventh street," was the answer; and in another moment he was being rapidly whirled up the avenue.

"Here we are, sir," exclaimed the driver, as the cab came to a stand and he sprang from his seat. But before he could open the door Eugene was on the sidewalk.

"Wait here," he said; "I shall not detain you for more than ten minutes," and running rapidly up the steps, he gave a loud ring at the bell.

He waited for some time, and hearing no movement inside, rang again.

A moment later he distinguished the sound of heavy footsteps slowly ascending the basement stairs, and then, with aggravating deliberation, approaching through the hall.

The key turned in the lock, and the door was opened just enough to permit the person within to get a fair view of the would-be visitor without.

"Who are ye, sor, an' phat do yez want here, if ye plaze?" came a voice through the aperture. "Sure, the mistress is out, an' I——"

"I don't want to see your mistress, you know that very well," interrupted Eugene, impatiently. "I called to see Miss Fielding."

"Miss Meta, is it? Thin she'd better resave her company whin her brother's within the house! That's phat I'm thinkin'."

"But she is sick, and has sent for me. I must see her, I tell you. Come, don't keep me standing out here all night."

"I'm knowin' she's sick," nodded the girl, without offering to move; "an' I'm thinkin' it's best she should be kept quiet loike. Anyways at all, I'm not paid to do her throttin'. Why don't her brother stay at home an' wait on her friends?"

"Come, get out of the way," exclaimed Eugene, almost fiercely; and, thrusting the impudent girl aside, he hurried through the hall and up the stairway.

Bridget started to cry murder and fire; but just at that moment she discovered a policeman on the opposite side of the street, and so thought better of it.

Deliberately she shut and locked the door, and descended to her own regions in the basement, muttering as she went:

"The mane thief, the miserable Turk, wouldn't give me aven a cint to bless meself wid; an' him a courtin' an' a courtin' of her, wid niver a wan in the way barrin' meself to watch him?"

Meanwhile Eugene had gained the door of Meta's sitting-room and knocked.

There was no response, and, after an instant's hesitation, he mustered courage to open it.

The room, as he expected to find it, was empty.

He passed on into the next. This also was empty, but just before him he saw a door standing ajar. He knew it opened into Meta's sleeping apartment, and, drawing near, he knocked gently.

"Who is there?" called a sweet, but feeble voice, in a tone of surprise and alarm.

"It is I—Eugene. You sent for me, you know."

"Eugene! I sent for you? Great heavens! what does this mean? Go back to the drawing-room. I will join you there directly."

"But you are sick—unable to rise, perhaps. I——"

"Go—go. Don't worry about me. I must see you. I must know more of this. I will be with you almost instantly."

And so Eugene returned to the drawing-room, and, seating himself in the first chair that came handy, gave himself up to wondering what Meta's strange reception of him might mean.

He had not to wonder long. The girl herself speedily joined him.

After turning up the light, she drew a chair near her visitor, and, as she sank into it, said, earnestly:

"Did you not say that I sent for you?"

"Yes, of course," was the reply.

"What! to come here—here, when my brother was away, and on your wedding night, too?"

"Certainly, Meta. You know you sent me a note not half an hour ago."

"Who brought it to you?"

"I haven't the least idea—a messenger boy, I suppose."

"Let me see it, please."

"Certainly, I have it here in my vest pocket—no, it must be in the other one.

"By Jove!" he exclaimed, growing pale and becoming extremely agitated, "it's gone. What if I dropped it at the Vernons', and my wife has picked it up. That wouldn't be pleasant, especially as I am not there to explain."

"What did the note say?" asked Meta, with forced calmness.

"Why, you ought to know better than I, as you wrote it," returned Eugene, quickly.

"No matter, what did it say?" persisted the girl.

"It said that you were very ill, and that Ray had suddenly been called out of town on a matter of the utmost importance, and that it was absolutely necessary you should see me this very night, before I left the city, as you had something to tell me that I must hear from your own lips."

"It said all that, did it?"

"Yes, and—and more."

"What else?"

"Why, really, Meta, I can't remember everything. And, indeed, I think there was nothing more of real importance."

"Well, then," said the fair young girl, very impressively, "let me beg that you will hurry back to your wife without the loss of another moment of time. If you have a carriage in waiting, so much the better; don't let the driver spare his horses."

"What do you mean, Meta?"

"If you have any regard for me—if you have any love for your wife—don't stop to inquire, but fly to her at once—fly as you would if you knew her life and all her earthly happiness were in danger."

"I can't comprehend you, Meta."

"O heavens! what stubborn mules men can be if they have only a mind to. Can't you understand, Eugene, that I never wrote that note—that I am utterly incapable of writing such a thing to a man not an hour married? Do you not see that it is the work of an enemy—an enemy bent upon wrecking your happiness, and perhaps mine?"

"Merciful Father! can it be possible? and yet——"

"And yet you do not know all—no, nor half. I see it clearly now. Ray was utterly confounded when he received the note that called him out of town this evening. He did not understand it at all, but felt that it might be something of the last importance to us; and so he went.

"Yes," she added, "I can see it now only too well. It was all a piece of this same plot to injure you. They thought it necessary to get my brother out of the way. They mean to do you or your wife some dreadful harm, therefore I beg you to hasten back to her as fast as possible."

"You are right, Meta—yes, I am sure you are right, as you always are, and I will go at once, only let me first ask——"

"No, no! don't stay to ask anything. How do you know but, having got you out of the way, your enemies have found means of communicating with her? Or, as you yourself suggested a little while ago, how do you know but she has found the note you so carelessly lost?"

"By Jove! you're right, I must be off at once," and starting to his feet, he seized his hat, and hurried to the door. But here he stopped, with his hand upon the knob.

"We're going to Riverside to-night, Meta," he said; "but we shall be back in the morning. And to-morrow evening you and Ray must come and see us, then we will talk over this strange matter.

"Ah," he added abruptly, "I begin to think I can point out the very hand that's working against us. But I mustn't stay longer. Good-night." And, having at last opened the door, he hastened across the hall and down the stairway.

"And so can I point out the hand that is doing this cruel work," murmured Meta, as she slowly approached the window and looked out into the night. "Yes, I could go right to her, and say—'you are the one,' and she would not dare deny it."

She heard the front door close, and she saw Eugene hurry down the steps, across the walk, and enter the waiting carriage.

She saw the driver slam to the door, mount his box and drive away. And then she saw a muffled female form cautiously approach the house and regard it attentively.

"Who can that be, and what does she want here?" she involuntarily asked herself.

Before she could find an answer to her question the woman had moved slowly away and disappeared in the gloom.

Feeling weak and faint, Meta sought the lounge and sank heavily upon it.

Ah! had she but remained at the window a moment longer how much of sorrow—how much of misery—might have been avoided!

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

An Awful Mistake.

A friend told me the following story, says the Brooklyn Citizen, which demonstrates the fact that it always pays to keep your eyes wide open, no matter how prompt you are compelled to be in attending to your business.

It was a rainy morning about two weeks ago. One of our large dry goods establishments had placed on one side of its entrance a wire dummy with a rubber cloak thrown over it for the purpose of catching the eye of some of the female passers-by who did not possess a "McIntosh." The young man who had received orders to place the figure outside the door was a foreigner but a short time in the country. Pretty soon it cleared up and one of the cash boys was told to bring it inside, which he did. In just about half an hour it dawned upon the young foreigner that he had forgotten something, and, making straight for the door, he proceeded to carry back the figure whence it came. It happened that a young lady of medium build stood upon the spot the dummy had occupied but a short time before. She had her back toward the window and was apparently waiting for a car. The young man rushed up to her, and throwing his arms about her waist, lifted her off her feet and was about to hustle her into the store when a shrill shriek rent the air. The clerk was dumfounded. He blushed, turned pale, and goodness knows how many other colors, but was, nevertheless, conscious of the awful mistake he had made. The young lady was about to thrash him with an umbrella which she carried when one of the floor-walkers appeared upon the scene. In the meantime the young man kept begging the young lady's pardon. But she would not have it, and instead of accepting his apologies she sought a member of the firm, who, however, was able to settle the matter amicably. The young man was not discharged, either, for his mistake was unintentional and perhaps natural in his hurry.

THE democrtic state convention is called to meet August 28, in Indianapolis. DeKalb county will be entitled to 16 delegates.

LIGHTNING struck a store house for powder, about a mile from Mansfield, Ohio, last week. About ten tons exploded and one or two lives were lost.

A CYCLONE completely destroyed the village of Bradshaw nine miles from York, Nebraska, last Wednesday afternoon. Not a building was left uninjured, and several lives were lost.

THE election in Oregon last week resulted in favor of the republicans in all cases, except as to governor, the democrats getting that office. With Ohio, Montana and Iowa, it begins to look as if the governorship is a democratic office.

HARVARD students painted the town, Cambridge, red last Saturday night, with crimson paint. Private houses, chapels, college buildings, and even statues, were defaced, the damage being estimated at $10,000. It is denounced by all, except a half dozen, or so who did it. They will be punished.

THERE is a painful silence on the part of republican papers around here just now, on their once favorite subjects, "The tariff makes an article cheaper." "The tariff comes out of the foreigner," "Elect Cleveland and prices of farm produce will go down. Elect Harrison and prices of produce will rise." Wool has come "up" to 22 cents, and butter has come "up" to 4 cents. And still there are a few farmers who believe republicans are dealing honestly with them.

CONGRESSMAN MCCLELLAN made a strong speech in the House the other day when McKinley's tariff monstrosity came up for action. We only wish we had room for the whole of it, for it is full of meat that high tax advocates will find hard of digestion. We can give only brief extracts. At one point, he says:

"All the suggestions so far adopted by the administration have failed to satisfy the people. Uneasiness, discontent and unrest universally prevail. Is not our system of taxation defective, unsound and unjust? Is not the inevitable result of this protective system to make the rich richer and the poor poorer? Are not the many taxed for the benefit of the few? If we increase duties, the price of protected goods will be raised at the expense of the consumers. * * * Shall we continue a system of taxation that leads to such results? It is clearly in violation of the constitution."

And he then quotes clause 1, section 8, of the constitution, which reads:

"Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, excises" etc., "but all duties, imposts and excises shall be uniform throughout the United States."

Here he contends, and correctly, that nothing is said about "protection," certainly nothing is said about shocking importations.

"The fathers never dreamed of such a perversion, such unjust discrimination as is provided for under it. The wealth of the country will pay no taxes, but will receive much more protection than those who do pay them."

Then he pays his respects to McKinley, who had sneered at low tariff, democratic times. McClellan said:

"What a slander upon the history of those times and of democratic rule! That period, as compared with the present, was a paradise to the people generally. It is true we did not have so many millionaires, but the people were happy, the middle classes were prosperous. Never in the history of the country were the farmers so prosperous.

Why, Mr. Chairman, under democratic rule was laid the foundation for all our future greatness. Under that rule we acquired the vast territory of Louisiana, out of which was carved the great states of Louisiana, Arkansas, Missouri, Iowa, Minnesota, Kansas, Nebraska, Oregon, Montana, Washington, North Dakota, South Dakota, Idaho and the Indian Territory. Under democratic rule we also acquired Florida, annexed Texas, an empire itself, and the war with Mexico, under democratic rule, gave us California, Nevada, Colorado, and the Territories of Utah, New Mexico and Arizona, while all the republican party has to show for its thirty years' rule is the frozen, uncultivable region of Alaska.

What have those democratic acquisitions done for our country? Have we not reaped billions of wealth from them; will we not reap hundreds of billions from them in the future? Was not this foundation of our future greatness laid by the wisdom and statesmanship of the fathers of the democratic party? Two million two hundred thousand square miles of valuable arable lands, enough to support one hundred million people, all acquired and paid for under a democratic rule and turned over to the rule of the republican party in 1860 with a national debt of only $58,496,837. Since that time republican administrations have had the benefits of the sale of a portion of those lands and they have received from sales $89,212,629, or $30,716,192 more than enough to pay the national debt when they assumed control of the government. They received this as the direct good management of the democratic party, and after they gave away millions of acres to corporations we have millions of acres left.

That was the financial condition of the government at the time the republican party went into power. Under this long period of democratic rule our taxes were adjusted upon a revenue basis, affording such incidental protection as necessarily followed. That protection was sufficient, however, to foster all the necessary industries, and agriculture prospered. From 1846 to 1860, there was no year that wheat did not reach $1.22 per bushel, and during the whole time it averaged $1.49 per bushel. Oats averaged 52 cents per bushel, and there was no year that it did not reach 47 cents.

There was no year that wool did not bring 30 cents per pound, and during the whole period it averaged 33 cents. There was no year during that time that corn did not sell for 70 cents per bushel, and the average price was 76 cents. These prices are taken from the last census reports and can be verified if disputed. At present prices wheat is worth 94 cents, corn 34 cents, oats 25 cents, and wool from 25 to 30 cents."

Voting Precincts.

The commissioners consulting with the voters of the various townships, have fixed the voting precincts of the county. The new law requires that each precinct must contain as near 200 voters as possible, and in no case over 250. BUTLER TOWNSHIP,

The commissioness say, shall constitute one precinct, with the voting place at the Center school house.

CONCORD TOWNSHIP

has three precincts, as follows:

The Flag Insulted.

There has been much excitement caused by reports published in various daily papers in regard to the desecration of the National flag and other decorations in the U. B. church near Blissfield, Mich., on Memorial Sabbath by seceding United Brethren. Rev. S. H. Yager writes to Rev. D. B. Keller, in regard to the facts, as follows:

"We gave an invitation to the G. A. R. to hold their memorial service in our church, and to this end they met on Friday and Saturday and had the church nicely decorated with flowers, mottoes and the American flag. The service was held at 2 p. m. on Sunday, at which time the seceders requested that their minister, Daniel Clark, should preach at night, and it was so announced, the old soldiers saying they would turn out and hear him preach also. After the congregation had gone, the radicals pulled down the flags, emblems and flowers and piled them into a corner. The news of this act was learned by our people about six o'clock and the excitement was high, and old soldiers stood and wept to see the flag they had fought to protect trampled upon."

It is needless to say the excitement was so intense in the neighborhood that the radicals were turned out of the church and Rev. Clark not permitted to preach in it. It will no doubt lead to a big lawsuit, as the names of the transgressors have already been given to officers of the law.

AN IMPORTANT PURCHASE.

The Warder, Bushnell & Glessner Company Buy the Interests of the Messrs. Whitely in the Champion Harvesting Machines.

The Warder, Bushnell & Glessner Company, whose factory is located at Springfield, O., and principal offices at the corner of Adams and Jefferson streets, Chicago, have just completed the purchase of all the right, title and interest of Wm. N. Whitely, Whitely, Fassler & Kelly, the Whitely Reaper Works, Amos Whitely & Co., and the Champion Machine Co., in the celebrated Champion harvesting machines, and are now the sole manufacturers of these famous mowers, reapers and binders. Heretofore all of these various corporations have been making these machines and operating in different territory, but by this arrangement the Warder Bushnell & Glessner Company become the sole manufacturers, and will supply the whole country. With the splendid record the Champion machines have made in the harvest fields of this and the old world, their factories will no doubt be taxed to their utmost to build the number of machines that will be wanted. The company informs us that they will manufacture to the fullest capacity of their works and expect to be able to meet the demand. Chicago Tribune.

Binder Twine.

It requires annually 55,000 tons of Binder Twine to bind the grain crops of the country. Ten years ago all the self-binders in existence required but a few tons. The industry practically started with a visit made by Mr. Wm. Deering, the harvester manufacturer, of Chicago, to Hon. Edwin H. Fitler, a rope manufacturer, and the present mayor of Philadelphia. Mr. Deering subsequently found it so difficult to get perfect twine that a few years ago he equipped a large twine factory with the best and most modern machinery, and is now making his own twine. The value of the annual output of binder twine is about $14,000,000.

The DeKalb boy generally takes a front seat from choice, but if he don't, they march him up to it. STILLWATER, MINN., Sept. 17, '89.
J. M. Loose Red Clover Co., Detroit:

You have my consent to use my name in praise of your Pile Ointment. You cannot make language strong enough to express my faith in it after the cure it has effected in me. I have reccomended it to a dozen or more of my friends, and in every instance I have cured them completely.

GEO. S. COOPER.

G. W. Link had a very close call last week, while assisting to put down a well in Garrett. They had raised the pipe out of the well, and he was bending over at work, when a part of the rod above him broke off and fell, striking him on the head. But it struck on the side, and the hat helped it to glance off. Had it struck squarely on the top of his head, it would have killed him instantly. As it is, an ugly gash was made.

John McClellan, one of our old pensioners, has had the good fortune to have his pension re-adjusted. About ten years ago, he was getting $16 a month but for some cause it was cut down under a republican administration, and Uncle John is a democrat. So he has been getting only $8 since then. Lately, however, he put his case into the hands of Judge McClellan, who has had the matter made right. He now will again get his $16 a month, and the odd $8 a month for ten years will be made up to him. This will secure for one old veteran, a snug sum to help make his declining days comfortable. Judge McClellan deserves the good will of the old soldiers for what he is doing for them.

There is a town in Indiana that has no saloon. The reason for it is, that the citizens of that town have become awakened to the fact that it is theirs to say whether a business of this kind shall be carried on or not and have formed a body as remonstrators against the liquor traffic. In a speech made there recently the theory was advanced that the saloon keeper is not the man to be condemned, but rather the people who accept an amount of money for the permission, then go wild because the saloon man uses his permit secured as it is by a full compliance with every requirement of the law. There is a principle exposed here, which cannot be ignored, Namely being a full partner in the business and then proving false to the trust.

Wool is still lower than it was last year. Farmers don't get the increased prices that were held out to them to induce them to vote for Harrison.

We publish this week a list of the new voting precincts. Our readers will do well to cut it out and preserve it, as we shall all want to know where to vote this fall.

Angola and Pleasant Lake played a good game of ball last Friday at Angola, the score standing 5 to 6 in favor of the Lake team. At the seventh inning the score stood 3 to 0 in favor of the Greys, but in the ninth inning they lost the game by good batting by the Lakes.

Bauer Brothers are closing out their stock of cheap goods at the bargain store on Eighth street, by the new Kiblinger factory. They are selling even their cheap articles at cost. It don't cost much to get an armful. There are hundreds of household articles needed in every family, that can be had for a trifle. Go and see.

The meeting of the W. C. T. U. last week, was a decided success. They had able speakers and a good attendance. The lecture of Mrs. Wallace was in the nature of a plea for woman suffrage and was excellent. The ladies showed marked ability in conducting these meetings, and are no doubt capable of exercising the rights of citizenship intelligently.

The Hicksville News speaks of the "Dog Industry" of that place. They must have an improved breed over there. We can't think of an Auburn dog that can lay claim to any sort of "industry." They "toil not neither do they spin," but they live off the fat of the land, roll on the flower beds, scratch up the garden, and make themselves a general nuisance. No, the only "industry" they develop is to sit up all night, and bark at nothing. Out on the dog business, anyhow!

J. A. Potter the boot and shoe dealer, and J. A. Barnes of the COURIER, again celebrated their joint birthday last Saturday, meeting this year at Mr. Potter's residence. These two frisky young chaps, though somewhat past the heyday of youth, with its verdancy and folly, are still able to enjoy life and its blessings. And for these they feel duly grateful to kind Providence. A number of the relatives, enjoyed the festal occasion with them. Besides the editor's wife and daughter, was Mrs. Lizzie Kelley whose birthday is one day later, her daughter Pearl was also present, as well as Mr. and Mrs. T. H. Sprott and children, and the immediate members of the family, Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Chapman. Mrs. Sprott and Mrs. Chapman, have thanks for as nice a dinner as heart of man could wish and everyone had a good time. All wished for "many happy returns," a sentiment with which the principals are in hearty accord.

"For a long time I had no appetite, was restless at night and very much debilitated. After taking two bottles of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, my strength and appetite returned, and my health was completely restored."—D. M. Fisher, Oswego, N. Y.

A box of Ayer's Pills has saved many a fit of sickness. When a remedy does not happen to be within reach, people are liable to neglect slight ailments and, of course, if serious illness follows they have to suffer the consequences. "A stitch in time saves nine.",

At the old settlers' meeting here the 19th, Rev. D. F. Kain of this place will deliver an address. He is an old settler of Wells county. Remarks will be made by Ex-Senator Hendry of Angola, and others. Let everybody come and enjoy the day with the old pioneers.

Richard Stone and J. D. Black, two of Albion's best business men were over here last Friday to look over the prospects of the Wabash Extension. They say they feel certain they will get the "Gold Spike" road, but are anxious to assist the new Wabash line, which would be very valuable to them.

Mrs. Roxana Davenport, F. E. Davenport's mother, accompanied the remains of her brother back to Connecticut, as noted last week. They write back that they arrived safe, and that the remains of her brother reached home in excellent condition. There was a large funeral, the immediate family with many relatives and friends from other points, making a large assemblage.

David Schieber, the baker at Ed Baker's, has a relic from California, in the shape of a genuine stiletto used by the thieving Italians and Chinese. The blade is about 7½ inches long and ¼ inch wide which runs to a sharp point and sharp on both edges. A Chinese inscription is engraved on the handle headed by a skull and cross bones. It is a curiosityand also a dangerous weapon.

The advertisement for Stanley's new book on Africa is in to-day's issue. Several so-called Stanley books have been advertised lately but they are reprints of his former travels, or else have been made up of his newspaper articles on his last trips. The only book containing the accounts of his last great journey, written by himself, is this book. It will prove a treasure to all who can get it.

David Greenewald, of Auburn Junction, is a very business-like young man. He has for some years been testing his ability as a book agent with fair success. His latest venture however, is in the rubber stamp line. If you are in need of handy combinations, we would suggest that you see Dave and get one of his rubber stamps, lead pencil and pen combines. They are neat, nobby and very useful.

The surveyors were called home last week, as they had been working on the line of the Old Canada Southern roadbed, and there was no need to survey that again. Monday they went down to Avilla to see if a better grade could be obtained by going a little further north. Of course, the Avilla people object to having the line too far away, but as they are not paying any of the expense, we can't see why they should have much to say.

R. H. Weamer, a former citizen of Auburn, now publishing the Bristol Banner, speaking of his old home says:

> Auburn, Ind., is experiencing a healthy boom. All its manufacturing institutions are enlarging their establishments, the town is building extensively to the outskirts of its suburbs, new railroads are being surveyed, its newspapers are ably edited and well patronized by the business men, and its schools and churches are doing a noble work. We gladly note these evidences of prosperity, say nothing of its natural gas, electric light and handsome ladies.

The Dispatch wastes its sympathy? when it speaks "words of consolation" about Barns coming so near getting left on "assistant secretary of the convention." Barns was there to write up the convention, and did it, making the most complete report of all the papers in the county. That is what we take pride in, and do not desire a complimentary, or formal appointment either as secretary or assistant. So we tender our friend, a clean handkerchief to wash away any additional tears that may "well up" on our account. Be comforted, brother. It is well with us.

Mrs. Wallace the venerable and famous lady who addressed the W. C. T. U. meeting last Thursday evening, was we believe, the second wife of Gov. David Wallace, whose term was from 1837 to 1840, at a time when Indiana governors held office for only three years. Mrs. Wallace, at one time, well known as Zerelda Zequin, has always been recognized as a highly cultured and talented woman. Gen. Lew Wallace, bears testimony to her great worth, when he says to her, his step mother, he owes much of his success in life. Those who were so fortunate as to listen to her the other evening, probably not many knew that the modest, unassuming lady before them, was the most famous of all the gifted women our state has produced.

There will be preaching at the Church of God Sunday morning and evening, June 15. A cordial invitation is extended to all to meet with the brethren and hear the words that may be spoken.

Judge McClellan's speech, an extract of which we give our readers, will be used all over the country as a democratic campaign document. This is a deserved compliment, for it is an unanswerable document.

Our church going people will be sorry to hear that Mr. Sawyers will probably remove to Missouri soon, to take charge of a church there. He has been untiring and faithful in his work here, and the change will be a loss to us.

The Y. L. M. C. of the M. E. church will give a parlor entertainment next Friday evening, June 13, at the residence of Mrs. Geo. Weamer. A good musical program has been prepared, and ice cream and cake will be served for 10 cents. Every body invited.

Childrens' Day was observed at the Baptist church last Sunday evening. The rostrum was profusely decorated with floral offerings, and the little folks did nicely in rendering the songs and recitations assigned them. The house was crowded, and all went away fully satisfied with the program of the evening.

Columbia City will dedicate her new court house Saturday, June 14. The regular address, will be by Hon. L. D. Thoman, and short speeches by Wm. F. McNagny, Joseph S. Baker, Williamson Wright, of Logansport, and others. We find many familiar names on the invitation, which, thanks to some of them, we have received.

George Hensinger, a lad who drives a mule team, was brought before 'Squire Ralston Monday and fined for cruelty, being in the habit of whipping his mules without mercy. The total expense was $12, and it was noticed that he carried a lighter whip that afternoon. We hope this will be a warning and that some others will take notice.

Day, Fox & Co., will paint your house neater, cheaper and give you the benefit of more styles and different colors, than any other painters in the county. And we would say to contractors and all others that want strictly first-class work done, you can do no better than to call on thm. All work guaranteed to be according to contract. 24 27

The Kendallville Driving Club will give their summer meeting June 26 and 27. Their races consist of a stake race; a three minute trot, purse $150, a free-for all pacing race, purse $250, on Thursday. A 2:40 trot, purse $150, a free-for-all trot, purse $300, one-half mile running race, purse $125, on Friday. The indications are that all will be first-class. Write J. S. Conlogue, Secretary, for full particulars.

Children's Day was celebrated at the Presbyterian church last Sunday evening. The young folks had made out an excellent program, and had it all ready to hand to Dr. Johnston, the superintendent that evening. He had told them they must show themselves able to do the planning as well as the preparation. And it was nicely done. It was about the best one we ever had. We can't give all the names of the little folks for we could not recognize all. But all did well. Two little girls, Ivy and Dora Fisher sang very sweetly and so did little Aileen Garwood. Their songs were quite long and even difficult, but they sang with great ease and skill, and were heartily applauded. Rowie Tefft spoke a piece with great courage and ability, as did little Ruthie Baker, Pearl Kelley, Elsie and Gertie Carruth, and little Herman Reed, a grandson of Mr. Sidney Reed. Lila Baker's class also sang, and Mrs. Plum's class gave a recitation. Among the names of little misses who took part we remmember these: Katie and Georgie Cool, Flora Reed, Lizzie Reed, Fidie and Viola Smith, Dollie Husselman, Edna Whitmer, Tina Umber, Ina Bartels, Blanche Maurer, Mabel Baker, Ethel McKay, Ruthie Baker, Annie Lewis and Dottie Gibson. All did well.

People now wish for rain as much as they wanted it to stop two or three weeks ago.

Miss Cora Snyder, of Waterloo, spent Monday with her cousin, Mrs. Ernest Sheets.

Mrs. W. H. Dills, and father Mr. Miner, of Michigan, are visiting relatives in Steuben county, this week.

Do you want the best painted house in the county? If you do, it will be to your interest to see Day, Fox & Co. 24 27

The members of the Willing Workers, of the Presbyterian church, are requested to meet at the church Thursday at 4 p. m. All come.

The M. E. church now stands in Sixth street, and the parsonage is on the ground where the church used to stand. Looks strange around there.

J. H. Krontz and Marshall Hadsell, two wideawake teachers called Saturday. They were at the teachers' convention which met here that day. It was a complete success.

Mr. and Mrs. L. D. Husselman, of Grant township, were here last week, and made us a friendly call. Mrs. H. being a sound democrat, they compromise by taking the COURIER. Good plan.

Gene Trout had a wild runaway yesterday morning. They got away from him at the railroad crossing on West Seventh street and ran the whole length of the street. As they turned around the public square to go to the stable, they struck the stone sidewalk in front of Harter's store and came near going into the south door. The stone was plowed with the wheels and the horses' shoe corks, and one horse fell flat. But they were not seriously hurt.

We publish to-day a letter from Prof. Horace A. Hoffman, well known to all people of this, his old home. He is now at Athens, in Greece, where he will pass the summer in securing a more perfect knowledge of the Greek language, that being his own special work at the university. We wish him great success in this most laudable enterprise, for we feel that our university will enjoy the advantage of having a Greek professor who has obtained his knowledge in the very cradle and home of that ancient tongue. Every student at Bloomington will, we hope, feel a just pride in this, and such efforts as Mr. Hoffman is making should not fail to produce good fruit, and assist more than ever to make this, our state institution, popular. Prof. Hoffman ought to have the good will and the good words of every citizen of Indiana.

It oftens occurs that some young men forget the true principles of courtesy and give obedience to a degraded sphere of humanity in which they can revel in what they are pleased to term fun, and it often happens that this fun as they call it, is secured at the expense and embarrassment of others, and even goes so far as to create suspicion upon the character of some one—an innocent person. Auburn is no exception to the general rule in this respect. And we would say that a business room on the north side of west 7th street, is infested, with a young man of good appearance, who seems to think it gentlemanly and funny, to conduct himself very disrepectfully towards two ladies, who are situated on the south side. We are very sorry for this state of things. But we find it necessary to inform this young man that it will be expedient for him to discontinue such actions in the future, unless he wishes a private interview with the grand jury. A word to the wise is sufficient.

The S. S. Convention.

The County Sunday School Institute held here Tuesday and Wednesday was in every way a success. The discussions and lectures were good, and the interest never lagged. The meetings in the day, were in the elegant new Lutheran church, but Tuesday evening it was in the Opera House which was well filled. This was the evening for childrens' work, and the young people acquitted themselves splendidly. Mr. Lamport, of the M. E. church was in charge, and presided with dignity. The first was a song by the Lutheran choir, followed by the "Tapestry Weavers" by Iva Richards and "Help One Another" by Dora Fisher. All did well. Mrs. Robbins' infant class sang a sweet little song, and were so cute that everybody cheered them. Mrs. Plum's class was excellent, and well trained. The same may be said of John Zimmerman's class, all marching and speaking finely. Mrs. Post sang "Christ is All." Clara Ensley, L. B. Fretz and Lila Baker, gave fine selections, and the audience led by Ben. Zimmerman, sang a closing hymn. The audience was dismissed with the benediction by Mr. Lamport. The work was finished the next day, and all agree it has been a pleasant meeting.

Obituary.

Rebekah Morr, daughter of John and Margaret Johnston was born in Wayne county, Ohio, February 8, 1826 and died at her home east of Auburn, June 1, 1890, at the age of 64 years, 3 months, and 23 days. She was united in marriage to Enoch Morr, Feb. 5, 1852. She was the mother of six children, two sons and four daughters, three dying in infancy and three survive to mourn the loss of a kind mother. She was converted in her sixteenth year and joined the M. E. church. After she came to DeKalb county, she united with the U. B. church, and she died in full assurance of a happy resurrection. Funeral services were conducted by Rev. Snyder, on Tuesday, June 3, at 10 a. m. at Union Chapel.

Auburn's New Addition.

The fine, level land on the east side of North Main street, at the north limits of town, has been laid off into building lots, and will be sold at reasonable prices. The ground is dry and finely located, and they will make the nicest residence lots in town. This plat was bought last summer by Boland, Robbins and Shaffer, who still own it. Parties desiring good residence lots should call on them.

THE law of divorce in France has been in operation since 1885, and during four years there have been 15,521 divorces, which is at the rate of 23 for 10,000 marriages.

SILKWORMS when newly hatched scarcely weigh one-quarter of an ounce, yet in the course of their life, which only lasts about thirty-five days, they will consume between 3,000 and 4,000 pounds of leaves.

AN Irish boy in a New York City court recently pleaded guilty to burglary to save his guilty brother, but the brother came forward when he saw the innocent one convicted and insisted on being sent to prison in his stead.

PRIVATE RICHARDSON, the only Manchester man now surviving of the "Gallant Six Hundred," served twelve years, has no pension, is nearly blind, and drifts from workhouse to workhouse. A dozen other survivors of Balaklava are paupers either in or out of workhouses.

DR. WEISMAN, a ponderous pundit among German biologists, is trying to show that artificial modifications of living forms can be transmitted from one generation to another. He has cut the tails off some nine hundred white mice in the hope that they will breed a race of mice without tails.

THERE are extensive deposits of petroleum in northern Peru, and an American gentleman has purchased a tract of land twelve miles wide and twenty miles long, covering the site of ancient oil works, and will develop the property as an oil region. He was formerly an operator in the Pennsylvania oil fields. He already has half a dozen flowing wells.

THE State of Michigan, almost alone in the great sisterhood of States, doesn't owe a dollar, having discharged its last financial obligation on 1st of May. Its institutions are all well equipped and cared for, and there is nothing in sight calling for any expenditure that will involve the creation of any new indebtedness. So Michiganders ought to be happy.

WHILE Robert Wilson, living near Columbiana, Ala., was plowing in an old field he unearthed a tin box containing $650 in gold and $25 in silver. The place was formerly owned by an old gentleman who always buried his money when he got drunk. It is supposed there is more somewhere on the farm, as he was wealthy, and all his money has never been accounted for.

THE efforts of English missionaries to change the customs and habits of the Greenlanders have thus far been unavailing. The old are sent to a pen to die of starvation and neglect, and the young get drunk as often as opportunity offers. Getting drunk and dying of consumption are the only two events of any importance in a Greenlander's life, and he won't innovate to accommodate anybody.

WILLIAM GALLOWAY, who ran the first locomotive on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, and was called the oldest railroad engineer in the world, died recently in Baltimore, at the age of 80 years. He was retired in 1887 by the Baltimore and Ohio Company, for whom he had worked for over 50 years, never missing a trip or meeting with a serious accident. In all, he ran his engine over 1,540,000 miles.

PRINCE AUGUSTIN ITURBIDE, who has been imprisoned in Mexico for criticising the Presdent, is the grandson of Emperor Iturbide. His mother was Miss Alice Green, of Washington. The young prince was adopted by the ill-fated Emperor Maximilian. He was educated in the United States, and is at present an officer in the Mexican army. As he is only twenty-four, it is not likely that he will be dealt with harshly.

THE Chinese are in some respects far in advance of our boasted civilization. When a house in the Celestial Empire becomes uncomfortably dirty, instead of turning everything upside down for a week or two, to the destruction of health, temper and happiness, they simply burn the house and the old man goes to his club, his wife to her mother's, while the contractor is building a new one. Thus the season so much dreaded in this country becomes a genuine holiday.

A FRENCHMAN named Henri Dubuisson has just been awarded a gold medal under rather curious circumstances. He is, it appears, the senior undertaker's man in Europe, and for the last sixty-seven years he has exercised his calling of croque-mort in Paris. This interesting individual is now in his eighty-second year, and a taste for the profession he has so long followed may be said to have been hereditary, his father and grandfather having been in the same line.

NEITHER the Arizona Howler nor the Arizona Kicker can produce anything more characteristic of frontier journalism and frontier life than the following bona-fide "ad" of an Arizona man: "'Ah, there!' J. H. Breed is on deck at the 'old stand,' with the largest and finest stock of goods ever brought to Arizona, and is prepared to give the people of Winslow and surrounding country the damnedest bargains ever heard of in this section of the world. I carry a h—— of a large assortment of goods, which limited space will not allow me to enumerate here, but if you will just hitch up your go-cart and call on the 'old man,' you can bet your 'whole outfit' he will treat you right, and sell you anything you may want in his line. J. H. Breed, Winslow, A. T."

LIEUTENANT VON BARBY, of the Twelfth Hussar Regiment, Germany, has taken the most interesting ride of late. He was riding with the troops in the neighborhood of Merseburg, when the horse took fright and bolted. All efforts to restrain him being fruitless, he gave him the rein, and waited his opportunity to jump off. To his dismay the animal swerved suddenly in the direction of a plateau overhanging a broad expanse of water; a few moments and both horse and rider would be over the edge. A bright flash was seen for a moment, the saber of the officer fell upon the head of his steed, and they both came to the ground, the man safe.

OUT in the wild West a mail bag was emptied of valuable contents by parties unknown and filled with stones. The loss was not discovered until the bag reached its destination, and no one had any notion where the theft was committed within a thousand miles of the journey. But a petrologist was shown the rocks, and he said at once that there was only one place in the United States where such was to found. He told where the place was, and a detective going there—it was 450 miles away—found two Cinamen at work in an isolated spot, where it was subsequently remembered, the robbed train had stopped for water. He promptly charged them with the crime, and they were so taken by surprise that they confessed it. So much for rocks.

THE proof that Marat, the French revolutionary leader, was really convicted of theft has set at rest a long-standing controversy. Marat was in England in 1776, was accused of a theft of old coins, escaped to Ireland, was apprehended at an Irish assembly in the disguise of a German count, and was brought from Dublin by habeas corpus for trial in England. A contemporary letter describing the assizes of 1776, at which it was thought that Marat would have been tried, is silent. The clerk of assize to the Oxford circuit has at last supplied the missing link in the evidence by finding that Marat was convicted at the assizes which commenced at Oxford on March 5 and ended on March 7, 1777. The delay in the proceedings is accounted for by the absence of the accused in Ireland.

WHILE journeying on a train a physician gave one of his children a drink of water by spreading a clean handkerchief over the top of the glass, to prevent the contact of the child's lips with the tumbler. A still better expedient with the same object in view has often been resorted to by the writer, and his children have been instructed to practice the same precaution when obliged to drink from a mug or tumbler on the cars, steamboats, or at public drinking fountains. It consists in bringing the lower edge of the drinking cup beneath the lower lip, in place of letting it come in contact with the mucous membrane of the mouth. Teach the children to put both lips into the cup when they take a drink under such circumstances, for it avoids a real and considerable danger of infection from certain contagious diseases.

BY some singular instinct, a man who was born blind can tell when he is opposite an object, and can perceive whether it is tall or short, slender or bulky. He can also determine whether it be a solitary object or a continuous fence; whether a close fence or an open one, and sometimes whether a wooden fence, a stone wall or a hedge. None of the five senses has anything to do with this perceptive power, but the impressions are made on the skin of the face, and by it transmitted to the brain. He, therefore, names this unrecognized sense "facial perception." The presence of a fog interferes with facial perception and makes the impressions faint and untrustworthy, but darkness is no impediment. A noise which distracts the attention interferes with the impressions. In passing along the street he can distinguish shops from private houses, doors from windows, and if the windows consist of a number of panes, and not of a single sheet of glass.

A Night with Artemus Ward.

Francis A. Hoffman, Jr.: I was a sophomore at Knox College, Galesburg, Ill. The students of the college were always on the alert to do something to relieve the suffering of that little city and vicinity. On one occasion we had the good fortune to secure as an attraction that eccentric humorist, Artemus Ward. We met him on his arrival and did all that was proper in the reception of a distinguished guest. The evening came on for the lecture, and the lecture was delivered. After its delivery A. Ward was our guest. We took care of him. Before doing so, however, we counted up the receipts of the house. Mr. Ward (or Browne) at once became magnanimous. Our terms with him were that he was to get one-half of the receipts and the poor one-half. When the proceeds were counted out Mr. Ward said, in his droll way: "Let the poor have theirs; and you, gentlemen, must allow me to spend my half in your midst. I insist upon your accepting my hospitality until the last cent of my half of the proceeds of to-night's lecture has been squandered. Let us begin at once."

The net proceeds amounted to $7.35. The amount "squandered" was $3.67½.—Chicago Tribune.

INDIANA HAPPENINGS.

EVENTS AND INCIDENTS THAT HAVE LATELY OCCURRED.

An Interesting Summary of the More Important Doings of Our Neighbors—Weddings and Deaths—Crimes, Casualties and General News Notes.

Is it a Swindle or Not?

James Christie, a well-known young farmer, living near Fletcher's Lake, went to Logansport the other day and obtained $800 from the banks on notes on which are forged the names of prominent farmers living in his neighborhood. Christie then called on an insurance agent and took out a policy of $5,000 on his life. While the policy was being written up Christie purchased a suit of clothes, shoes, hat, etc. Going home he gave the policy to his wife and ate his supper. About 8 o'clock a neighbor's boy called and the two went swimming in the lake near by. Christie swam out into deep water before his companion undressed. In a few moments Christie called to his friend on the bank, saying that he had the cramps and to get a boat near by and come to his rescue. The boat was secured, but Christie had disappeared. When his companion returned alarm was given, and the lake was dragged for two days and nights in search of the body. Christie's clothes on the bank were found where he took them off, and untouched tracks were discovered of a bare-footed man going toward Christie's house from the lake. A peculiar-shaped toe which marked itself in the foot-prints, and which tallies with Christie's foot, settles the fact in the minds of the neighbors that Christie made his way home naked while his friend was getting the boat, and, donning the new outfit which he purchased, he left the country. Christie was heavily in debt and he doubtless reasoned that his plans were so well laid that his death would be accepted as a certainty without question, and that his family would receive the insurance money to help them out of the financial difficulties in which he had left them. He has doubtless gone to the far West, where he has relatives, and where he often said he was going some time.

Minor State Items.

—Oil was "struck" at Greencastle, and the proprietors of the gas well feel greatly encouraged.

—William Wenzell, better known as "Hoosier Bill," fell into the lake at Michigan City and was drowned. He was fishing from the west pier.

—Jessie Mitchell, an old and esteemed citizen of French Lick Township, Orange County, was killed by a horse he was riding rearing up and falling back on him.

—Milroy Sexton, a young man, was instantly killed while loading saw-logs, a few days ago, in Wheatfield Township, Jasper County. One log slipped and crushed him to death.

—Ed. Williams at Lagro, was drowned while swimming. He was seized with cramps and sank in eight feet of water. The body was in the water over half an hour before it was recovered.

—The safe at the Road House, at the Soldiers' Home near Marion, was blown open and robbed of eighteen dollars. The proprietor shot half a dozen times at the robbers, but missed them.

—While swimming in the Wabash, near the western city limits of Wabash, Maurice, the eleven-year-old son of Conrad Ragan, was drowned. The body was recovered three rods from where it sank.

—The Brazil City Council, by a tie vote, the Mayor deciding, voted to increase the retail liquor license from $100 to $250, the full limit. Thirty saloons are affected, every saloon-keeper being opposed.

—Charles Marsha, car inspector at North Vernon, on the O. & M., attempted to board a moving train when he was thrown violently to the ground, had his shoulder dislocated and his collar-bone broken. He sustained other serious injuries, but there is hope of his recovery.

—John Lingard, of Mill Creek, La Porte County, was taken with a violent fit of vomiting, and during a severe struggle, a small lizard was ejected from his stomach. The animal was dead and partially encysted. It is supposed that he swallowed it about two years ago while drinking water, as he has suffered a great deal of pain in the region of the stomach about that length of time. The long retention of the animal had poisoned Mr. Lingard's entire system and his death ensued in a few hours. He was an old resident, having lived in the county forty-eight years.

—William Strothen, four miles southeast of Paoli, was taken from his home by a band of masked men, whipped in an outrageous and brutal manner, and notified that if he did not leave within one week he would be hung. Strothen was whipped in much the same manner some two months ago, and claimed to recognize his assailants, against whom he commenced a prosecution before a magistrate, which was dismissed, and it was understood that he would lay the matter before the coming session of the grand jury. He claims to have recognized his assailants as the same who first whipped him. There is considerable excitement over the matter and it will be fully investigated.

—Rufus Q. Lhaman, of Steele, Adams County, aged 22, and a student of the Indiana State Normal at Covington, was drowned in Wabash River, below town, while in swimming with five other students. Lhaman, J. P. Holmes, of Adams County, J. E. McKinley, of Illinois, all stepped off a sand-bar into a deep hole, and as none of them could swim, cries of help attracted aid, but before they could be rescued Lhaman was drowned. Holmes was taken out unconscious, and McKinney also had a very narrow escape.

—James Strawbridge was drowned in a pond south of Logansport while bathing. He was taken with cramps and went to the bottom before assistance arrived.

—John Mills, postmaster at Mechanicsburg, and a highly esteemed gentleman, committed suicide by drinking a half ounce of carbolic acid. He lived but three minutes after taking the poison. No cause has been assigned save that the deceased had been in poor health for months past. His suicide has produced a profound sensation at Mechanicsburg.

—Miss Agnes Hasfader, a handsome young lady of Columbus, alarmed her friends by taking a dose of morphine with suicidal intent. She has been keeping company with a young man named Behrman, to whom she was engaged to be married. From some cause the lover has grown lukewarm in his love-making, and the girl grew very despondent and attempted to end her sufferings with poison. Prompt action by two or three physicians saved her life. The girl bears a good reputation.

Drs. Bunker, Mowd, Voris, Arwin, McLeod and one or two others operated on Samuel Waltzs, a farmer of Franklin County, to remove a tumor of immense growth that had been forming on one of his legs for thirty years. It had attained immense proportions, being two feet long, one foot in diameter and nearly as wide. Mr. Waltzs, who had consulted physicians in Indianapolis, Cincinnati and other cities, was informed that amputation was the only hope. The leg was taken off at the thigh, and it with the tumor weighed fifty-five pounds, more than one-third the weight of the entire body. He stood the operation well, but the result cannot be determined for several days.

—The leading farmers of Allen, Noble, Whitley, Elkhart, Kosciusko, Lagrange, and Hentington counties were in session in Fort Wayne, to organize a new Farmers' Alliance. They were addressed by Newton V. Ashley of Iowa, National Organizer, on the near relation and common interests of the agricultural classes and the Knights of Labor. A constitution and by-laws were adopted, together with a number of resolutions expressive of the sentiment of the meeting on public issues. Officers were also elected: J. C. Lawrence, of Whitley County, Secretary; and W. A. Kelsey, of Allen County, Secretary; and Thomas L. McKee, of Allen County, Treasurer. The meeting was an enthusiastic one.

—A sad case of drowning occurred near Franklin, in which a young man lost his life while saving that of a boy. On the farm of William Smith is a large fish pond, in which a boy by the name of Gaylor was bathing. While in deep water he was seized with cramps, and was apparently in a drowning condition, when his cries brought to his assistance a son of Mr. Smith, a young man of about twenty-two years of age, who immediately jumped into the pond and succeeded in bringing Gaylor to the bank, where he was assisted out by others attracted to the scene. Smith, either from cramps or exhaustion, fell back into deep water and sank from sight. In risking his life for another he had lost his own.

—Three years ago the steamer La Mascotte, owned by Captains Durland and Perkins of Evansville, was burned at Cape Girdean and a number of lives lost. Among them was Roy Perkins, the first clerk, who attempted to leave the boat with a large quantity of gold and silver in a belt around the waist. His body was never found. The other day Capt. Perkins received a telegram from a young lady friend of the family, who resides in Washington, stating that on a visit to one of the hospitals she had found Roy lying dangerously ill, and, though he denied his identity, he finally confessed. Immediately upon receipt of this, Capt. Perkins left for Washington. It is thought that Perkins was injured in the wreck and has only now recovered his reason.

—The establishment of Swift & Co., Chicago, of a local depot in Fort Wayne, for the sale of Chicago dressed meats has well nigh ruined the business of local butchering establishments and made the raising of beef cattle by farmers profitless. Nearly all beef now supplied to retailers is sold by Swift & Co. As an offset to this monopoly, a movement is now on foot and will be carried out to form a stock company among the local butchers for the establishment of stock yards at a point east of the city, at which all kinds of live meat will have a ready market at current prices and where they will be slaughtered by the newest and most approved methods and sold to local dealers as dressed meats without the cost of railroad transportation and with the advantage of home inspection and the freshness that will come by the saving of extra handling and long railroad transportation. The names of the incorporators of this enterprise will soon be made public.

—While the Rev. Charles Morris, of Evansville, dean of the southern convocation, was en route to Indianapolis to attend the diocesan convention, he fell into the hands of confidence men. Shortly after leaving Terre Haute a man sitting in the front end of the coach was apparently seized with a terrible fit. The Rev. Dr. Morris' sympathy was aroused at once, and he went forward to lend his assistance. After rubbing the fellow's head for some time his struggles ceased, and the minister started to return to his seat. The man was immediately seized with another fit, and Dr. Morris again went to minister to his wants. This time the fit was of short duration, and the Rev. Dr. Morris was soon able to return to his seat, only to find that his grip, containing his vestments and reports, had been stolen by an accomplice of the man who had had the fits. The victimized preacher went on to Indianapolis without even an extra handkerchief in his possession. Once before, on a trip to Mount Vernon, he met with the same misfortune, having all of his vestry robes stolen.

—Polly Stott, one of the first pioneers of Jennings County, died at the house of her son, Allen Stott, in Vernon, at the age of ninety-four years, eight months and eleven days. She was the wife of Richard Stott, who died some years ago. She had been a resident of Jennings County for the past seventy-two years, and was the oldest person living in the county at the time of her death, and the best known old person in that part of Indiana. Her relatives, friends, and acquaintances are numbered by hundreds.

—The game law prohibiting shooting squirrels expired last week, and until Dec. 15, the little animals can be shot without violation of the law. The game is unusually plentiful in the woods of Harrison, Crawford, and other southern counties.

—Delmar Austin and Ed Cloud, the inmates of the Orphans' Home, at Wabash, who on several occasions set the building on fire, were ordered to be imprisoned in the House of Correction until they become of age. Tommy Garrett, who knew of their guilt, was not punished.

MR. DEPEW IN CHICAGO.

HIS ADDRESS ON THE COMING WORLD'S FAIR.

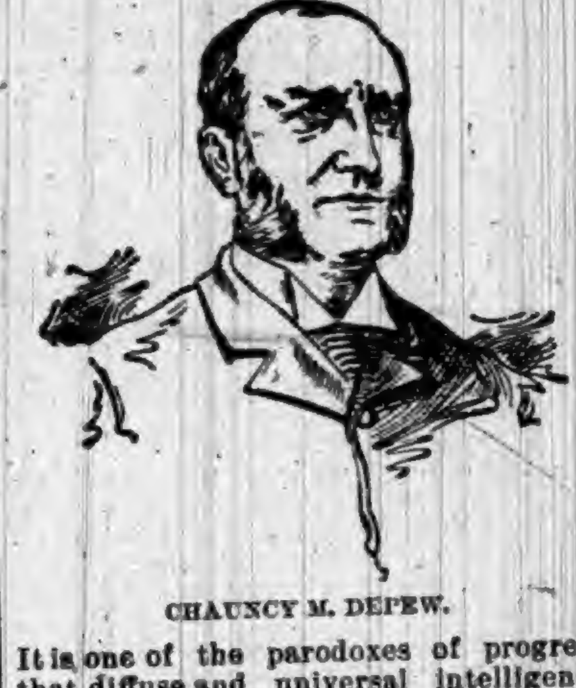
The New York Orator Talks to a Large and Brilliant Assemblage on Questions Connected with the Great Exposition—His Address Enthusiastically Received.

Chicago dispatch: Chauncey M. Depew's speech at the Auditorium, under the auspices of the Chicago Press Club was the event of the week. The vast building was crowded and many of the distinguished men of the city and State were in the audience. The subject of the popular orator was "The World's Fair," and he did ample justice to it.

When the prolonged applause with which the distinguished guest of the Press Club was greeted had ceased that gentleman advanced a step or two nearer the footlights, as if to be in closer communion with his auditors, and began his "talk" with no further preliminaries than to explain that he was ill and hardly equal to the occasion. Indeed he evidently was not expecting to face such an audience as he saw before him. Possibly he had just a tinge of "stage fright," for his first few sentences were uttered in a voice which hardly penetrated to the depths of the great hall. But his voice seemed to strengthen as he progressed, and he soon had everybody en rapport with him. It was soon evident that he was prepared to furnish an oratorical feast, and he did it. His remarks were frequently interrupted by applause, which at times was extremely enthusiastic.

Speaking of the benefits to be derived from the fair Mr. Depew said:

"Above and beyond the material results of this exhibition will be its stimulating influences upon the patriotism of the people and the unity of the nation



CHAUNCY M. DEPEW.

It is one of the paradoxes of progress that diffuse and universal intelligence tends to provincialism and local pride, and the refinement of the intellect to angles and points. There was a time when the Weekly Tribune reached every town in the West, and Horace Greeley's opinions were the bond of common sentiment and national union, but the press associations distribute with impartial hand the news of the world to the newspapers of every city in the land. The result is that the journals of every town go to the public only as far as the train can carry them during the morning hour or before the family clock strikes the note for retiring. Universal circulation all over the country is no longer possible to any newspaper, and the editorials of the local press mold the opinions of their people. Under these conditions the New York editor does not write for Chicago nor the Chicago editor for St. Louis. If the Eastern or Western, or the Southern or Pacific coast press treat at all the interests of other sections it is too often in an unfriendly and critical spirit. It is in a tone which depreciates or assails their distant countrymen, and makes them not only rivals, but enemies. From this cause multitudes in the east believe the West given up wholly to the pursuit of money, and deficient in the culture and refinement of long organized and intelligent communities. Multitudes in the West regard the people of the East as effete and weak—excrescences upon the body politic, or leeches in the form of gold bugs and coupon cutters. The press of the South inculcates a sectional pride and sensitiveness which suspect an enemy in the mildest critic and hostility in every other section. But the fierce light of universal publicity which will beat upon this exhibition and the commingling here of citizens from every part of the union will do much to demonstrate that we are one people, with common interests and a common destiny.

With the broad, generous, and catholic spirit which will inspire visitors to this exhibition, the West will discover that the East, with its conservatism, intellectuality, and prosperity, has not lost its vigor, and the East will find that the West, with its stalwart force and push and drive, is abreast with the East in intelligence, culture, and refinement. While the East and the West will meet the South here with fraternal greetings and reciprocal respect the representatives from every State will learn anew the lesson that peace, prosperity, and power can be strengthened and perpetuated only in the federal union.

Let this international fair be held; let the four hundredth anniversary of the discovery of America by Columbus be celebrated; let it be commemorated by an industrial exhibition grander in extent and volume than any ever seen before; let the old world know what their children have done in the new; let the stars and stripes float from every roof and turret and flagstaff; let the bands announce the opening and closing of the fair each day with the inspiring strains of our national anthem, and we will seperate from this grand communion impressed more deeply than ever before with the fact that the proudest title on earth is that of an American citizen."

THE SENATE IS SLOW.

Far Behind the House in Important Legislation.

Washington dispatch: Heretofore the Senate has been far in advance of the House in the necessary work of the session at this period. This year, however, the Senate has fallen to the rear, particularly with reference to the general appropriation bills, of which the Senate has passed on five only, and of these five two still remain in the hands of the conference committee. The Legislative, executive, and judicial bill, which is the most important of the money bills, was passed by the House six weeks ago. The consular and diplomatic bill was passed four weeks ago, and the fortifications bill was passed five weeks ago, yet neither of these measures has been acted upon by the Senate. In addition to those named, the river and harbor bill was given to the Senate last week, so that there are now in the possession of the committees of that body four general appropriation bills. Of the remaining bills of this character the postoffice, agricultural, Indian, sundry civil, and general deficiency are yet to be reported to the House.

The three measures first named are in charge of the postoffice, agricultural, and Indian committees respectively, and the sundry civil, and general deficiency bills are in charge of the committee on appropriations.

NERVOUS DISEASES.

As a cure for every class of Nervous Diseases, no remedy has been able to compare with the Nervine Tonic, which is very pleasant and harmless in all its effects upon the youngest child or the oldest and most delicate individual. Nine-tenths of all the ailments to which the human family is heir, are dependent on nervous exhaustion and impaired digestion. When there is an insufficient supply of nerve food in the blood, a general state of debility of the brain, spinal marrow and nerves is the result. Starved nerves, like starved muscles, become strong when the right kind of food is supplied, and a thousand weaknesses and ailments disappear as the nerves recover. As the nervous system must supply all the power by which the vital forces of the body are carried on, it is the first to suffer for want of perfect nutrition. Ordinary food does not contain a sufficient quantity of the kind of nutriment necessary to repair the wear our present mode of living and labor imposes upon the nerves. For this reason it becomes necessary that a nerve food be supplied. This recent production of the South American Continent has been found, by analysis, to contain the essential elements out of which nerve tissue is formed. This accounts for its magic power to cure all forms of nervous derangements.

CRAWFORDSVILLE, IND., Aug. 20, '86.
To the Great South American Medicine Co.:
DEAR GENTS:—I desire to say to you that I have suffered for many years with a very serious disease of the stomach and nerves. I tried every medicine I could hear of but nothing done me any appreciable good until I was advised to try your Great South American Nervine Tonic and Stomach and Liver Cure, and since using several bottles of it I must say that I am surprised at its wonderful powers to cure the stomach and general nervous system. If everyone knew the value of this remedy as I do, you would not be able to supply the demand.
J. A. HARDEE,
Ex-Treas. Montgomery Co.

Mr. Solomon Bond, a member of the Society of Friends, of Darlington, Ind., says: "I have used twelve bottles of The Great South American Nervine Tonic and Stomach and Liver Cure, and I consider that every bottle did for me one hundred dollars worth of good, because I have not had a good night's sleep for twenty years on account of irritation, pain, horrible dreams, and general nervous prostration, which has been caused by chronic indigestion and dyspepsia of the stomach and by a broken down condition of my nervous system. But now I can lie down and sleep all night as sweetly as a baby, and I feel like a sound man. I do not think there has ever been a medicine introduced into this country which will at all compare with this Nervine Tonic as a cure for the stomach."

A SWORN CURE FOR ST. VITUS'S DANCE OR CHOREA.

CRAWFORDSVILLE, IND., May 19, 1886.
My daughter, twelve years old, had been afflicted for several months with Chorea or St. Vitus's Dance. She was reduced to a skeleton, could not walk, could not talk, could not swallow anything but milk. I had to handle her like an infant. Doctor and neighbors gave her up. I commenced giving her the South American Nervine Tonic; the effects were very surprising. In three days she was rid of the nervousness, and rapidly improved. Four bottles cured her completely. I think the South American Nervine the grandest remedy ever discovered, and would recommend it to everyone.

My daughter, eleven years old, was severely afflicted with St. Vitus's Dance or Chorea. We gave her three and one-half bottles of South American Nervine and she is completely restored. I believe it will cure every case of St. Vitus's Dance. I have kept it in my family for two years, and am sure it is the greatest remedy in the world for Indigestion and Dyspepsia, all forms of Nervous Disorders and Failing Health from whatever cause.

INDIGESTION AND DYSPEPSIA.
The Great South American Nervine Tonic

Which we now offer you, is the only absolutely unfailing remedy ever discovered for the cure of Indigestion, Dyspepsia, and the vast train of symptoms and horrors which are the result of disease and debility of the human stomach. ☞ No person can afford to pass by this jewel of incalculable value who is affected by disease of the Stomach, because the experience and testimony of thousands go to prove that this is the ONE and ONLY ONE great cure in the world for this universal destroyer. There is no case of unmalignant disease of the stomach which can resist the wonderful curative powers of the South American Nervine Tonic.

Harriet E. Hall, of Waynetown, Ind., says: "I owe my life to The Great South American Nervine. I had been in bed for five months from the effects of an exhausted Stomach, Indigestion, Nervous Prostration and a general shattered condition of my whole system. Had given up all hopes of getting well. Had tried three doctors with no relief. The first bottle of the Nervine Tonic improved me so much that I was able to walk about, and a few bottles cured me entirely. I believe it the best medicine in the world. I can not recommend it too highly."

Mrs. M. Russell, Sugar Creek Valley, Ind., writes: "I have used several bottles of The South American Nervine Tonic, and will say I consider it the best medicine in the world. I believe it saved the lives of two of my children. They were down and nothing appeared to do them any good until I procured this remedy. It was very surprising how rapidly they both improved on its use. I recommend the medicine to all my neighbors.

Mrs. Ella A. Bratton, of New Ross, Indiana, says: "I can not express how much I owe to the Nervine Tonic. My system was completely shattered, appetite gone, was coughing and spitting up blood; am sure I was in the first stages of consumption, an inheritance handed down through several generations. I began taking the Nervine Tonic and continued its use for about six months, and am entirely cured. It is the grandest remedy for nerves, stomach and lungs I have ever seen.

Ed. J. Brown, Druggist, of Edina, Mo., writes: "My health had been very poor for years, was coughing severely. I only weighed 110 pounds when I commenced using South American Nervine. I have used two bottles and now weigh 130 pounds, and am much stronger and better than have been for five years. Am sure would not have lived through the Winter had I not secured this remedy. My customers see what it has done for me and buy it eagerly. It gives great satisfaction."

ILLINOIS DEMOCRATS.

GEN. JOHN M. PALMER NOMINATED FOR UNITED STATES SENATOR.

The Largest and Most Enthusiastic Convention in the History of the State—A Winning Ticket Placed in the Field—A Ringing Platform—Speech of General Palmer.

The Illinois Democratic Convention, which met at Springfield on Wednesday, the 4th inst., was the largest, most enthusiastic, and most harmonious the party ever held in the State. The Democracy of Illinois, represented by its ablest leaders from all sections of the State, met in this convention and enunciated a declaration of principles and nominated candidates which will bring success to the party in the Prairie State at the coming election. Led by that fearless old campaigner, General John M. Palmer, whose every utterance alike inspires the Democracy with confidence and strikes fear to the heart of the Republican leaders, the party of Illinois needs only that unity which seems already assured to redeem the State from Republican misrule.

Joseph B. Manner, of Danville, who was made temporary Chairman of the convention, delivered an eloquent speech.

A letter was read from Grover Cleveland, declining with regrets an invitation to be present and address the convention, but expressing a hope of success for the ticket to be chosen. It was received with loud cheers.

Judge E. S. Wilson, of Olney, was nominated on the first ballot for State Treasurer, and Henry Raab, of Belleville, was nominated by acclamation for Superintendent of Public Instruction. Richard T. Morgan of Livingston, John H. Bryant of Bureau County, and N. W. Graham of Jackson County were nominated for Trustees of the State University. A resolution indorsing Gen. Palmer for United States Senator was passed amid great applause, and Gen. Palmer was cheered to the echo on his appearance. He spoke as follows:

GENTLEMEN OF THE CONVENTION: In 1888 the Democracy of Illinois paid me in full for all the services I had ever rendered, for they gave me every vote they could command. No party ever did better or can do better than that. The Democracy of Illinois have to-day paid me in full in advance for all that I can hereafter do for them. They have nominated me as their candidate for United States Senator. They have not promised to elect me. They have given me a commission to get out and make battle for the Democracy, and have promised to do all they can to help me. That is all any of us can do.

But it must not be understood that the Democracy of Illinois intend that I shall go out and fight everybody; my mission is a very peculiar one. The Democracy of Illinois have commissioned me in their name to make an attempt to popularize the Senate of the United States. I am not, as has been said by some of my friends who write for the newspapers—I am not bound as an expositor or definer of Democratic faith. There are thousands of Democrats in the State who attend to that job whenever required. It does not need any special champion. The fact is, there is a growing feeling throughout the country, not confined to Illinois, that the national Senate is becoming an element of danger instead of good. It is the only body of officials that is not responsible to anybody. The President, when nominated by the national convention, although he takes but a small part in the canvass that precedes the election, is made the subject of criticism, his whole life is examined, his business relations are discussed, and at last the people pass upon the man whose name is presented to them. Not so with a Senator. Sometimes, as is found in this State when the Governor uses his patronage while occupying the position of Chief Magistrate of the State, and later on secures a majority of the Legislature; when the Legislature assembles the party caucus actually nominates him; he ceases to be Governor and becomes Senator, and from that time forth he is responsible to nobody. He travels through the State during State elections and criticises the State, but is responsible to nobody. It is the purpose of the Democracy of Illinois that hereafter when the Senator comes into the State somebody shall take care of him.

It is intended hereafter that the Senators from Illinois shall give an account of themselves. Heretofore, as I have said, they have traveled through the State, responsible to nobody. National expenditures are increasing at a fearful rate; the new State of Montana is organized and two Senators stolen, and we are threatened now with an election law which is to make our Representatives just what the party in power may choose it shall be. Our Senators will take part in this, but when they come into Illinois it is the purpose of the Democracy that they shall answer for these acts at the bar of public opinion. They shall be asked, "Why is it the people of the State of Montana are not to be allowed to have Senators that represent them?" They will be required to respond to these questions. They will be asked: "What have the people of the State of Illinois done that the power and control over their own elections shall be taken from them and placed in the hands of irresponsible Federal officials?" They will not escape by wrapping their senatorial toga—don't they call it that—around them.

It is the intention of the Democracy that these men shall be compelled to answer. Here they will be surrounded by the representatives of 400,000 Democratic votes, and an answer will be demanded. That is the intention of your action to-day—not to provide a champion for Democratic principles, not the sending forth of knight errants to encounter wind-mills. The purpose is that hereafter these Senatorial men shall be made responsible, their acts shall be inquired into, and they shall be called to respond for them just as other people are required to do. That is the purpose of the movement. It is to popularize the Senate of the United States.

In other States gentlemen have found an evidence that satisfies many people, and in some of those States the request of a senatorial candidate for votes is expressed in the form of a check. It will be the purpose of the Democratic party that such checks shall not pass current in senatorial elections hereafter, but that the official conduct of those officials shall be investigated. They shall, for the first time in our history, be made responsible for their conduct. We know that in the earlier history of the republic the senator was regarded as so much of a servant of the State that legislatures instructed them as to their duty and the common law of politics of the party required that the senator should obey the instructions given by the legislature or resign, and the legislature would elect some one else who would repeat the wishes of the people who sent him. But all that has passed by, and now those gentlemen are responsible to nobody. The party caucus actually makes the nomination, the majority elects him for the time being senator, and the senator is under no obligation to answer for his conduct to anybody, and in this case I say this action on the part of the Democratic party of the State is a warning to Mr. Cullom, a monition to Mr. Farwell and to those men generally of the Republican party that when they think proper to nominate a senator they will do it.

Well, this commission may be a charge to me, and you know you must take care that your principles are enforced. There are thousands of Democrats all over the State, while this work on this charge is being performed, who will take care of the followers behind. That is the mission upon which you have sent me.

Gentlemen of the convention, I trust during the canvass I may be able to render an additional service to the Democratic party—that is, to assure them of my belief that Illinois is to-day a Democratic State. It is to assure the Democracy of the State that the time has come when they may be Democrats without forfeiting their social standing or injuring their character as members of churches. That now public opinion has so far changed that not only is that true, but the intellect and intelligence of the country is now with the Democratic party and that the work of the party from this time forward requires but this, that the old men should remember they still owe duties to their country which will last as long as they live; that the men in middle life will feel that good government must be maintained for the welfare of their children, that it is upon the young men we must depend in this struggle, and I, for one, will say in this campaign I want to be regarded as a captain for one purpose.

I want to say to every young Democrat in this State that you have the right to go forth and fight this battle for good government, and if you fight it earnestly you will win it. Most of the Republican party believe they should stand by the men in power, and their patriotism requires that the older they get the more money they should receive. They have succeeded to all the patriotism of the old soldiers in the army, and still require that you should provide for them for their noble services to the country. That is not true with the young man, and you now will have to fight for the principles of the Democratic party.

Gentlemen of the convention, it is not necessary that I should say I thank you most profoundly for this additional evidence of your confidence. I thank you with my whole heart for your kindness. I have read with the greatest interest the proceedings in your county conventions and the kind words spoken of me, and I have felt grateful to all of you, and I shall enter into this canvass and upon this contest with all the energy I can employ in that direction. I believe sometimes I read a newspaper published by my young friend Mr. Medill, who designates me as a decrepit old man. I have only to say that if he does not quit that I will treat him as the prophet did the boys—I will set the bears on him. I will set the bears after these juveniles who follow me.

I shall endeavor to make a good fight for the good cause, and I shall call one and all of you to do your full share in this work. There is to be no off year in politics in Illinois any longer. The Democracy of Illinois does not require the incentive of a Presidential election to bring them out to work. This should be no off year. It should be one of labor for the cause of right and justice, and that the people may be delivered from the terrible oppression under which they now labor. Gentlemen, I repeat my thanks, and with that I am done.

The convention then adjourned amid enthusiastic cheering.

The Platform.

The following resolutions were unanimously adopted by the convention:

The Democracy of Illinois, in convention assembled, reaffirm the principles of the party as laid down in the platform adopted by the national convention in St. Louis in 1888.

Realizing that a tariff is a tax, we insist now, as heretofore, that such a revenue as is required to honestly and economically administer the Government should be raised from internal revenue taxes and duties upon articles of luxury, thus exempting and making cheaper all articles needed by the masses of the people.

The admission of the fraudulent Senators from Montana and the unseating of Representatives duly elected, in order to add greater strength to the Republican majority, are precedents alike dangerous to the safety and perpetuity of the Government.

For over a quarter of a century the finances of the State of Illinois have been in the hands of the Republican party. Every year more taxes are levied than are called for by the laws passed by the Legislature. It is time for a change in order that there may be an overhauling of the books.

We denounce the Republican party of Illinois for its broken promises and pledges made to the farmers and laborers of the State; not so equalizing the taxes as to compel the large corporations and trusts to pay their equal proportion of our State, county, and municipal taxes is a crime against the farmer and laborer that loudly calls for redress. We demand of the State Board of Equalization an honest enforcement of the law as interpreted by the Supreme Court, in order that various corporations of the State shall no longer escape the payment of their just proportion of taxes. The imposition of over 75 per cent. of the taxes upon the lands of the State is a wrong which calls loudly for redress, and is a just cause for complaint by the already overburdened farmers of the State.

Knowing that there is no calling in the State so hazardous as that of the coal miner, we demand the enactment of a law abolishing forever the system of truck stores, the enactment of a law for the examination of mine bosses, the enactment of a law providing for the examination of stationary engineers, the enactment of a law providing for the weighing of coal before screening, and the amendment of mining laws so as to provide for the inspectors of the respective inspection districts or some other competent person to act as sealer of weights and measures for the adjustment of scales upon which coal is weighed at the mines.

We are in favor of the eight-hour work day.

We cannot find language strong enough to condemn the McKinley tariff tax bill, considering it a crime and conspiracy against the toilers of America which is intended to impoverish the masses and benefit a small class that are already millionaires. We recognize in it the consummation of an unjust agreement between the Republican party and manufacturers and others profiting by the protective tariff, which agreement we suspected at the time of the last Republican national convention and charged in the last campaign.

We demand absolute economy in all the various departments of the State and National Governments, and the discharge of all unnecessary employes who are kept upon the pay-roll merely because they are partisan favorites.

We favor the adoption of the Australian ballot system, so as to provide a fair and secret ballot.

Ever since the Republican party have had control of the office of State Treasurer, public moneys of Illinois have been deposited in banks outside this State, without profit to this State or its people. The Democratic party pledges itself that all deposits of State funds shall be in Illinois banks, and that the interest thereon shall be paid into the State Treasury, and that such legislation as is necessary shall be enacted to carry this resolution into effect.

We favor the election of United States Senator by direct vote of the people.

We demand that all unnecessary restrictions be removed from the coinage of silver.

We are in favor of the election of the Railroad and Warehouse Commissioners by direct vote of the people.

We are opposed to class legislation in every particular.

We denounce the bill now pending in Congress known as the ship subsidy bill as a species of vicious and unjust class legislation, and we deny the right of Congress to tax the whole people to raise money to pay a subsidy or bounty to this or any other private enterprise.

WHEREAS, There has long been a combination between publishers of school books to avoid competition, and extort exorbitant prices, therefore we favor the preparation and publication of a series of school books and furnishing the same to the school children of this State at actual cost.

Resolved, That the Democratic party in convention assembled heartily indorse the public school system of the State of Illinois, and it declares that the parental right to direct and control the education of the child should forever remain inviolate, and that the provision of the law of 1889, commonly known as the compulsory education statute, impairing that inalienable right, should be at once repealed. Respecting this subject we adopt the following propositions and hold them to be self-evident truths:

1. To determine and direct the education of the child is a natural right of the parent.
2. There arises out of this parental right the duty to provide education.
3. When one who by natural or humane law owes a duty to another fails to perform that duty the State can (a) enjoin or compel performance, (b) punish for non-performance, (c) supply the lack where the injury of society by non-performance is wrongfully persisted in.
4. Wise statesmanship encourages general popular education, but does not mean or require unjust or unnecessary interference with those who are educating their children according to the best of their ability and conformably to the condition in life of parent and child.
5. Compulsory education, in the sense that parents who violate or neglect their parental duty may be compelled to its performance or punished for non-performance, is licit.
6. Compulsory education, in the sense of controlling or seeking to control or dislodging from their rightful place those parents who are discharging their parental duties commensurately with the state of life of parent or child, is not allowable even to the state.
7. For the education of his children one parent may select the public school, another may select the private or denominational school, still another may furnish proper education without the aid of any school, and each of the three in so doing exercises a right protected by the law of the land as well as by the law of nature, and for doing which he need offer neither excuse nor apology.
8. The public and private or denominational schools are in law neither related nor are they subordinate one to the other, nor need they be antagonistic.

"We favor and pledge ourselves to the enactment of statutes, first, to require parents who are not performing their duty in respect to educating their children to do so; second, to correct incorrigible truants by providing means for their amendment and to minimize the evils of truancy by sending truant children to such schools as the parents may designate; third, to prohibit child labor, with all its debasing consequences.

TIRED OF TARIFF ROBBERY.

Ex-Senator Morris, a Life-Long Republican, Repudiates the Grand Old Party.

[Springfield (Ill.) special.]

Ex-Senator William S. Morris, Golconda, Pope County, is one of the best-known Republicans in Illinois. He is a man of ability, honesty and influence, particularly in his own district. He has refused to dance when the protection whip was cracked, and in 1888, when the Republican national platform was printed, he denounced it, but was induced to give in, under promise that the party would favor a bill reducing the taxes when Congress met. He has been a low-tariff man for a good many years, and in a published letter to the Republican Congressional Convention of the Twentieth District practically renounces his allegiance to that party forever. He will be found with the Democracy this year, and will take the stump for the Democratic candidates, if, indeed, he is not elected to the Legislature as a Democrat from his district. Mr. Morris has served three terms in the lower house and at least one in the Senate (1883-5), being elected each time as a straight Republican, and has allied himself with that party since he became a voter. At 18 years of age—in 1861—he enlisted in the Thirty-first Regiment of Illinois Volunteers—Logan's regiment—as a private, served through the war and was mustered out as a First Lieutenant. His name added to the tariff reform host in Southern Illinois will bring many tariff reform Republicans with him. Like Gen. Elliott, of Princeton, ex-Adjutant General, Mr. Morris believes in tariff reform, and will make his views known when the campaign opens. Here is his letter to the Twentieth District Republicans. It was given by Mr. Morris to the Golconda Democratic press:

Messrs. R. J. McIlvain, John M. Herbert, and A. Wells, Murphysboro, Ill.:

GENTLEMEN—Your favor inviting me to attend the Republican Congressional Convention for this district, to be held in your city on the 3d day of June next, is at hand. After some reflection I have concluded that it would be improper for me to accept the invitation and that it would be unfair to you, and the delegates to the convention for me to do so.

Two years ago I briefly defined my position upon the protective tariff system, so called. It happened that my opinions were not in accord with the platform-makers of the Republican party. It further happened that a policy in regard to this question was avowed by the managers of the party at that time such as had never been before advocated by any political party in America. It may be styled, emphatically, the "restrictive policy."

I gave my support to Republican candidates in the hope of seeing that policy abandoned before the expiration of the Congressional term, but it has not only not been abandoned, but we still hear of a determination to perpetuate this policy, by the erection of Chinese walls in the shape of prohibitive duties, and of carrying it to its extremest conclusion by the dispensing of bounties to favored industries from the public treasury at the expense of the general public. If adhered to, foreign commerce will be inhibited and Americans will be prevented from reaping the benefits of free exchanges and some of their products practically shut out from the markets of the world.

Furthermore, I am not in sympathy with the prevailing order of things in Illinois. While school boards in my native State are converted into police headquarters, whose officials usurp the rights of the parent in the control of his children, while useless offices are maintained at public expense, while our public roads are pretended to be maintained by an odious and unjust poll tax, while the farming classes are oppressed by these aggregations of iniquity, I must respectfully decline further attendance upon conventions that do not openly and fearlessly advocate an unremitting opposition to the continuation of this order of things—an order of things that justice demands should be abolished in toto.

For these reasons I must respectfully decline your very cordial invitation to attend the convention. Yours truly, W. S. MORRIS.

THE PROTECTION CAPITAL REBELS AGAINST TARIFF ROBBERY.

Business Men and Employes Denounce the McKinley Tariff Bill at Immense Meetings in Philadelphia—Ringing Letter from Ex-President Cleveland.

[Philadelphia special.]

An enormous business men's meeting to protest against the McKinley tariff bill was held at the Walnut Street Theater Tuesday afternoon, at which Alexander K. McClure presided. The tobacco, tin plate, and wooden industries were largely represented. Among the speakers were Congressmen McAdoo, Springer, Bynum, and Breckinridge (Kentucky). In the evening a mass meeting of workingmen in textile goods was held at Kensington and was addressed by the same gentlemen. There were 7,000 to 10,000 people at the Kensington meeting and three overflow meetings were necessary. A big parade of workingmen preceded the meetings. Resolutions were adopted declaring that both parties had promised to amend the tariff so as to remove unnecessary burdens and enlarge our markets; that the party now in power had, on the contrary, proposed to add to the burden and restrict the market by the McKinley bill; and the meeting would be satisfied with nothing short of free raw materials and such general reduction of tariffs as to cheapen the necessaries of life and open foreign markets, thus securing steadier work and more comfortable living for the workingmen.

The announcement of a letter from ex-President Cleveland was greeted with great applause. The letter was as follows:

F. A. Herwig, Esq., Secretary:

MY DEAR SIR—I desire through you to thank the Kensington Reform Club, formerly known as the Workingmen's Tariff Reform Association, for the courteous invitation I have received to attend a mass meeting on the evening of the 3d of June. The terms in which the invitation is expressed convince me that the question of tariff reform is receiving the attention it deserves from those most vitally interested in its just and fair solution. I know that the feeling now abroad in our land, and with the intense existence and activity of such clubs as yours, the claim presumptuously made that the people at the last election finally passed upon the subject of tariff adjustment will be emphatically denied, and that our workingmen and our farmers will continue to agitate this and all other questions involving their welfare with increased zeal, and in the light of increased knowledge and experience, until they are determined finally in accordance with the American sentiment of fair play.

I use no idle form of words when I say that I regret my engagements and professional occupations will not permit me to meet the members of your club on the occasion of their mass meeting. Hoping that those who are fortunate enough to participate will find it to their profit and that the meeting will, in all respects, be a great success, I am, yours very truly,

GROVER CLEVELAND.

Resolutions were adopted as follows:

We, workingmen in mass meeting assembled, do resolve that we cannot too strongly denounce the McKinley bill as a dangerous measure, or too earnestly protest against its passage by the United States Senate, and that we hereby give notice that we will not be satisfied with anything short of free raw materials and such a corresponding reduction of general tariff rates that will give us a chance to enter foreign markets with our products and to keep and control our own, knowing full well that only by these means can the toilers secure steady work at good wages.

"M'KINLEY PRICES."

They Will Be Very High for Everything but Labor.

The "McKinley prices" will be higher, because in this Republican tariff bill the duties on cotton and woolen materials are raised heavily along the whole line, but those on goods used by the laboring masses are made to pay higher duties than are put on the more costly goods used by the rich. The duty on wool, unreasonably high at present, is heavily increased: the duty on woolen yarns is doubled, and the duty on blankets and woolen stuffs is doubled, and on some of the cheaper qualities, those most used by the poor, is nearly trebled. On some of these goods in universal use the duty is run up to 150 per cent. So, too, the cheaper kinds of carpets have their duty heavily raised. All that means, of course, that the "McKinley prices" will be very much higher.

The "McKinley prices" on houses will be increased by the increased duty on lime and cement—double the present rates—and by increased duties on brick and tiles, and by higher duties on glass. The "McKinley prices" on the poor man's kitchen will be higher by the increased duty on pottery and on glassware, that on common glassware being increased in some cases more than 100 per cent.; the "McKinley prices" on the poor man's clothing and bedding will be made higher by heavily increased duties on blankets, coatings—in fact, on all that he and his wife and family wear or need to keep them warm in the winter or cool in summer.

All this in face of a surplus taxation of nearly $100,000,000.—New York Herald.

Took the Next.

"Ah, ha!" he called as he stood waiting for a car, "didn't I tell you last winter that we'd have to pay for the warm——"

"No, sir—no, sir," interrupted the other. "I met you almost every day last winter, and you never said a word about the weather."

"Didn't I predict in February that we should have an unusually late——"

"No, sir! I don't remember that you said any such thing."

"You don't! Didn't I say that we should——?"

"No, sir!"

"Very well. Are you going down on this car?"

"I am."

"Then I will take the next."—Detroit Free Press.

What They Do With Them.

"Get out of my way! What are you good for?" said a cross old man to a bright-eyed urchin who was standing in the way.

The little fellow, as he stepped one side, said very gently: "They make men of such things as we are."—National Weekly.

Many Times Killed.

The blow of a bullet will ordinarily paralyze so many nerves and muscles of a white man as to knock him down, even though no vital part be hit. The Indian gives little heed to such wounds, and to "drop him in his tracks" the bullet must reach the brain, the heart or the spine. "I have seen an Indian go off with two bullets through his body," writes Col. Dodge, "within an inch or two of the spine, the only effect of which was to cause him to change his gait from a run to a dignified walk."

A cavalry force of some twenty-five men surprised a small party of Indians in a thick chaparral, through which, however, there were numerous glades and openings. The Indians scattered at once, and the soldiers separated in pursuit.

After some time, when the cessation of firing indicated that the affair was over, the commander had the recall sounded.

Soon one and then another came in, until the whole command was assembled, when, to the gratification of the officer, almost every man claimed to have killed an Indian. They went to collect the bodies.

On reaching the first one it was found that nearly every soldier claimed to have killed him.

A sergeant dismounted and approached the body. The prostrate Indian rose up and dealt a vicious blow with his knife, which the sergeant barely escaped. When the Indian was finally killed, it was discovered that he had not less than twenty wounds.

One bullet, probably the first one, had broken his hip and thrown him from his horse. After that he had shot at every soldier that passed near him, attracting attention and being "killed" again and again, only to rise up and fight the next soldier who came along.

Instead of twenty Indians, the soldiers found one.

Wherever Malaria Exists

The bilious are its certain prey. In intermittent and remittent fever, dumb ague, and ague cake the liver is always seriously affected, and the blood contaminated with bile. One of the chief reasons why Hostetter's Stomach Bitters is such a sure defense against chills and fever and every form of malarial disease is that it does away with liability to the disease, by reforming irregularity of the biliary organ in advance of the arrival of the season when the disease is prevalent. There is no finer fortifying preparative for those about visiting or emigrating to a locality where the miasma-taint exists. There is no certain immunity from disease in an endemic or epidemic form to be secured by the use of the average tonics and anti-spasmodics. But where quinine fails the Bitters succeeds both in preventing and curing. Moreover, it removes every vestige of dyspepsia, and overcomes constipation, rheumatism, inactivity of the kidneys and bladder, and tranquillizes and strengthens the nervous system.

Facilities of Travel.

"How did you get here from Chicago?" asked an actor of a shabby brother actor, whom he had not seen in some time.

"I came to New York on a limited ticket," replied the shabby one, with a knowing wink over the left shoulder in the direction of a sour mash bazar.

"What is a limited ticket?" inquired the other party, accepting the hint and moving in the direction of the saloon indicated.

"Well, it's a ticket limited to an outside passage."

"Outside passage! I fail to comprehend. I still grope. Perhaps I am obtuse."

"Why, an outside passage is the right to perambulate the cross-ties and count the exact number of them in a mile."—Texas Siftings.

The Too Fluent Converser.

Few things are more vulgar or disagreeable to others than the habit of endeavoring to monopolize the talk of a mixed company. Now, as no well-bred man will ever make himself the subject of conversation, so neither will he seek to engross the whole. As every man had rather please others by what he says, than be himself pleased by what they say—or, in other words, as every man is best pleased with the consciousness of pleasing, so should all have an equal opportunity of aiming at it. A polite man, therefore, will not take more of a general discussion than falls to his share. The information of the company is his apparent aim, not the indulgence of his own pride, or an ambitious desire for victory.—Texas Siftings.

FREE-TRADE VERSUS PROTECTION.

Uncle Zeb, an ardent free-trader and cross-roads statesman, was denouncing protection with all the arguments he could muster.

"I'll bet, Uncle Zeb," interrupted one of the crowd, "that you are a protectionist, after all."

"I'll bet, I ain't," shouted the old man warmly. "Come now. How am I a protectionist?"

"Why you protect your system from spring and summer complaints by taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla."

When the laugh subsided, Uncle Zeb replied, with a grin, "Well, yes; I'll allow, that to that extent I am a protectionist, because I believe Ayer's Sarsaparilla is the best blood-medicine ever made, not only for spring, but for all seasons."

A New Name for Them.

"Mr. Pastern," said old Mr. Bosser, looking over the ledger index, "what is the meaning of this title, 'Bitters that you have here?'"

"Why, sir," replied the book-keeper, "that stands for bad debts."

"Well, what has bitters got to do with it?"

"Don't you see," said Pastern, "the dictionary tells us that aloes, and if all-owes are"—but he never finished the remark, for old Mr. Bosser died of apoplexy right there before his eyes.—Texas Siftings.

A Great Surprise

Opposed to Ground Floors.

Broker (persuasively)—It's a splendid opportunity, and remember you get it on the ground floor.

Capitalist—Don't want it. Last time I was let in on the ground floor I dropped right through into a sub-cellar, and I've been there ever since. No, you'll have to let me off.—Texas Siftings.

An Unlucky Man.

A certain Western murderer, who had killed his partner during the progress of a heated discussion on business affairs, was convicted and sentenced to twelve years' imprisonment.

"What, can't I go out at all?" he inquired anxiously of the Judge.

"No."

"Then it would have been better all around if my partner had killed me. He always attended to inside affairs, while I worked on the outside. He was a man of sedentary pursuits, and would have stood such kind of office work much better than I shall. Yes, it is very unfortunate that I am not in his place. I really regret the serious turn affairs seem to have taken."—Texas Siftings.

Mabel—The man who marries me must have a good big bank account.

Ethel—You don't mean to say you will marry solely for money?

"No, not exactly; but if any one swears he loves me I shall require a deposit merely as an evidence of good faith."—Judge.

Our Hannah Jane.

Our Hannah Jane was thin and weak,
And ashy white her lip and cheek.
We often thought—and thought with pain,
"We soon must lose our Hannah Jane."
With change of doctors, change of air,
She sought for healing everywhere.
And, when our hopes were almost past,
"Favorite Prescription" tried at last.
It gave us joy, it gave us hope,
She ceased to pine, she ceased to mope,
[Pierce's remedies are sure and true]
Now Hannah Jane is good as new.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is the only medicine for women, sold by druggists under a positive guarantee from the manufacturers, that it will give satisfaction in every case, or money will be refunded. This guarantee has been printed on the bottle-wrapper, and faithfully carried out for many years.

ON THE WING.

Items and Ideas Found by the Courier Reporter in His Journey.

A. H. Smith, of Auburn Junction, is another of DeKalb county's citizens who have added their names to the long list of honor. He is a gentlemen of good qualities and we believe he will enjoy the full value of his investment of a year's subscription to the COURIER.

John W. Earegood, of this place, will give attention to the columns of the COURIER for the next year to come. Good friends and a good paper go hand in hand and the relationship between them can be very pleasant and profitable.

Mrs. Diadem Keeler, of Concord, has added her name to the long list of friends who read the COURIER for what it is worth. She is a lady who ignores the idea of borrowing a paper and getting the news second hand, but prefers to read a paper of her own just as it comes from the press. That's a good idea. Who'll be the next one to dance to this music?

The wheat which looked so bad in the spring, is now looking better, and we presume that those farmers who got so badly scared and plowed their wheat fields under now wish they had not done so. There is an old adage, which says: "You cannot tell how far a toad can jump, by his looks while sitting on the ground." It is equally true, "that you don't know how much of a crop you'll have until you harvest it."

Shall we Drain Cedar Creek.

A few years ago, we made a serious attempt to drain Cedar Creek from a point near Waterloo, to a point near Auburn. A survey was made for the purpose of ascertaining the probable cost and utility of the work, but for some reason, objections were made by interested parties, and the work was abandoned. Now, however, it is again being agitated. Cedar Creek has been "acting bad" as Artemus Ward, would say. It has been washing out its bridges and causing great expense to the county. It has been leaving nasty ponds breeding sickness in many places, and people begin to consider how some of these things may be remedied. If the stream could be straightened, the channel would cut deeper; it would not overflow so often and much waste land would be reclaimed; less damage would be done to bridges, and as the channel sinks deeper and the overflow is less, much money will be saved in work on embankments and similar improvements. This work may not be accomplished at once, but we believe it will come in time, and we would like to see those most interested, begin to discuss the matter.

What the Dispatch Says.

"Should the democrats come into power, the people would be left to the mercy of the distillers, brewers, saloon keepers, and whisky would be almost free." But it does not seem to know that the republican platform and teachings, advocate free whisky, but taxed necessaries. Democrats are trying to get the tax taken off necessaries, while republicans are fighting to tax needed articles higher and take the taxes off of whisky, beer, etc. Strange that the Dispatch does not realize this.

It says: "It is a tax on the consumers for the benefit of a privileged class." So is every tariff tax if laid merely for "protection." What need have we for a tariff on wool, except to "benefit a privileged class," a very small class of men who raise fine wool? All the extra cost comes out of the consumer of course. And what better will it be if a tax is taken from the people in order to pay the sugar men a bounty? Can't the Dispatch see that this, also, takes money from the people and puts it into the hands of a favored class? There is no defense for a protective tariff, nor for a bounty. Both are alike, steals from the people, to enrich a class. The Dispatch seems to be unfortunate in its selection of tariff articles.

The Butler Normal.

The summer term of the Butler Normal will begin Tuesday, July 1, 1890.

SPECIAL TEACHERS' CLASS

This class has been formed for the benefit of teachers and those desiring to prepare themselves for teaching. All the branches in which examinations are held for teachers' license, will receive careful attention. Special instruction will be given on the latest approved methods of teaching, on the organization, management and government of schools. It is the aim to educate and train teachers for their educational work. Other classes will be organized to accommodate those not intending to teach, but who intend to follow other avocations of life. Drill classes in reading, writing, spelling and other practical branches, will receive proper attention.

EXPENSES.

Tuition per term, $5.00, in advance. Board with furnished room in private family per week, from $2.50 to $3.00. Board in clubs, per week, from $1.25 to $1.75. Rooms without board, per week, from 25 to 50 cents. Arrangements also, have been made with parties to cook for students who may desire to furnish their provisions from home, and thus permitting them to attend with very little expense. On information of those desiring to come but cannot on account of limited means, every possible effort will be made to assist them in such ways as will enable them to attend.

BOOKS.

Students coming to the normal will bring the books they wish to study. And those not having books can purchase them at nominal cost. We call special attention to the following fact: That we employ none but the most thoroughly qualified and efficient teachers; that our teachers use no cramming processes, but require the most thorough work of their students; that every student will be called upon for a recitation every day. Many institutions permit students to go three or four weeks at a time without obliging them to make a recitation. We work upon the theory of letting the students recite and not the teacher. If you desire any further information on any particular point, address.

Wabash Extension.

Last week, Mr. Dills received a letter from Hon. E. B. Gerber, of Ligonier, in regard to this matter. He had just returned from Detroit where he had gone to see Mr. Joy, and other high officials of the road. Mr. Joy plainly told him that this extension would be built soon, but whether on the Auburn line, the Montpelier line or the Butler line, had not been settled. He said they would investigate carefully, and would then ask how much assistance could be given by the people on each line. It is to this last item we wish to call attention. Whoever gets the road will have to help pay for it. No doubt a considerable sum of money will have to be raised. If we get it, our people will have to contribute. We will have to vote a tax on ourselves, or raise the money by subscription, or perhaps both. The other lines will have to do the same. This is the thing in a nutshell. We feel sure our line is the best one. It is four miles longer than by Montpelier, but there will be over 20 miles less of new road to build, and as line goes through better towns, we e the company will see the advan- e offer. Ligonier is trying to get matter which way it goes, re taking steps to organize a mpany, and vote a tax, and hever line gets it, they can ney over to it. This is a d is the suggestion made by P. V. Hoffman, when the re the other day. When as far west as New Paris, e same from that on, no it goes along here. Now, talk this up from a business view, and get ready for the hen it comes.

Rheumatism,

BEING due to the presence of uric acid in the blood, is most effectually cured by the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Be sure you get Ayer's and no other, and take it till the poisonous acid is thoroughly expelled from the system. We challenge attention to this testimony:—

"About two years ago, after suffering for nearly two years from rheumatic gout, being able to walk only with great discomfort, and having tried various remedies, including mineral waters, without relief, I saw by an advertisement in a Chicago paper that a man had been relieved of this distressing complaint, after long suffering, by taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla I then decided to make a trial of this medicine, and took it regularly for eight months, and am pleased to state that it has effected a complete cure. I have since had no return of the disease."—Mrs. R. Irving Dodge, 110 West 125th st., New York.

"One year ago I was taken ill with inflammatory rheumatism, being confined to my house six months. I came out of the sickness very much debilitated, with no appetite, and my system disordered in every way. I commenced using Ayer's Sarsaparilla and began to improve at once, gaining in strength and soon recovering my usual health. I cannot say too much in praise of this well-known medicine."—Mrs. L. A. Stark, Nashua, N. H.

Foolscap is a corruption of the Italian folio-capo, a folio-sized sheet. The error must have been very ancient, as the water mark of this sort of paper from the thirteenth to the seventeenth century was a fool's head with cap and bells.

Marvelous Endurance.

The vast amount of labor performed by the heart in keeping all portions of the body supplied with blood is not generally known. It beats 100,000 times, and forces the blood at the rate of 168 miles a day, which is 3,000,000,000 times and 5,150,880 miles in a life time. No wonder there are so many heart failures. The first symptoms are shortness of breath when exercising, pain in the side or stomach, fluttering choking in in the throat, oppression, then follow weak, hungry or smothering spells, swollen ankles, etc. Dr. Franklin Miles' New Heart Cure is the only reliable remedy. Missouri Letter.

LAMAR, BARTON CO., MO. June 7, 1890.

EDITOR AUBURN COURIER.

Dear Sir: Before leaving DeKalb Co. I promised a great many friends, that I would write what I thought of southwest Missouri. I have not the time to write personal letters, so trust you will find space for this in your columns. I want to say to my friends in old DeKalb, that I have seen in this, Barton county, the finest country I ever saw. The land is gently rolling prairie, and the streams of which there are many, are bordered with timber of the best quality. The soil is rich, sandy loam, very productive, and a splendid fruit country. I have been reveling in new vegetables. Potatoes as large as my fist, peas, beans, beets, turnips, etc. I have seen strawberries as big as hen eggs. Wheat and oats are looking fine, corn is knee high. This county is underlaid with a four foot vein of coal. Have seen many farmers hauling it to town, from their farms. Every foot of the county is under fence, most of the farms have fine orchards. I saw one farm of 320 acres in bearing trees and full of fruit. This county has no bonded indebtedness and three railroads built. Taxes are very low. They have just finished a court house that cost $50,000 and paid for. Also a large school fund, which is lent out at good interest. Good school houses and churches of all denominations throughout the county. Political parties are nearly equally divided and I find no prejudice against northern men. The old settlers tell me they need northern farmers amongst them to teach them how to farm. I find the climate splendid, and like the people and country so well, that I expect to trade or sell my farm near Newville, and invest in land in this county and will make it my permanent home. I have met several Indianians here, among whom is C. B. Rhodes, a former DeKalb boy, he is doing a good business. His mother is also here and says she likes it very much. C. J. Schlatter, of Leo, Allen county, traded his store to C. B. Rhodes for land in this county. He came here last week to see his property, and was well pleased with it. He returned home last Tuesday to close up his affairs and move his family here. Now to all my old friends, and those contemplating moving, I will say, that if you want cheap and fertile lands, mild climate, and want to live among kind and hospitable people, this is the place. I intend making a trip to Kansas next week and will write you what I think of it. Yours truly,

LAWRENCE GIBSON.

Franklin College, Ind.

Franklin College, located at Franklin, Ind., graduated 12 young men and women at its commencement June 12, inst. There were 259 students in attendance this last year. The exercises were all of a high order intellectually and morally. No degrees of D. D. were bestowed. Miss Edith Craft, of Franklin, received the prize for best declamation, and Jay C. Smith, of Auburn, received as a prize a full set of "Chamber's Cyclopedia" for the best essay on "Money, Its Accumulation and Uses," given by the Citizens' National Bank, of Franklin. A very able alumni address was delivered by Rev. P. O. Duncan, of Louisville, and one to the graduates by Dr. Galusha Anderson, of Chicago. The new Astronomical Observatory will soon be erected and two new recitation rooms will be added to the present number. It has been a very successful year for the college. Its motto is "Christianity and Culture," and the faculty make it such indeed. Young men and women desiring a liberal education, shielded from the immoralities of our times cannot do better than to attend at Franklin College.

A Severe Case.

Amos Clark a prominent man of Clarinda, Iowa, says: Through the recommendation of J. P. Burrows of our city, I gave your Dr. Marshall's Lung Syrup a trial in case of severe cough, after using it a short time my cough was cured, which fact gives me such great confidence in its merits that upon every occasion I recommend it to my neighbors.

Yours,
AMOS CLARK.

DEADLY FIRE DAMP.

Thirty-One Miners Sent Into Eternity Through Its Agency.

A Pittsburgh special, dated the 17th inst., says: About 11:30 in the morning a sudden roar shook the miners' houses for a mile around the little hamlet of Dunbar on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, about four miles from Connellsville. The Farm Hill mine, owned by Philadelphia parties had exploded. A rush was made to the mouth of the mine, but it was impossible to get near as the smoke issued out in great volumes. Fifty-two miners went to work in the morning in the mine and were there when the explosion occurred. Eighteen were in the left grading and thirty-four in the right. The eighteen in the left got out all right, but the unfortunate men in the right could not escape. The mine, it seems, has been troubled with water of late, an air-shaft had been drilled from the surface to the junction of the right and left shaft. The miners knew that an air-hole had been drilled, but did not know that the shaft was to be broken into. A miner named Kirwin had been left in the right shaft and, in the course of his labor, broke into the other shaft. When this was broken into a flood of water rushed out and they feared they would drown. The flow of water had changed to a deadly flow of fire-damp, and, as a man by the name of Hays passed by the shaft, a flash of fire shot through the air, from one end to the other. He carried a miner's open lamp, and as soon as he stepped into the other shaft the fire-damp caught, and he dropped dead on the spot. In an instant the fire sprang up in the nine foot vein just between the entrance and the right, shutting in the thirty-two men. Old David Hays, the father of young Hays, was driven mad by the fate of his son, rushed into the smoke and deadly fire damp only to fall dead at the side of his son. Willing hands were not wanting. A man named Keagley headed a gang of 100 men and entered the right shaft and after groping their way for half a mile were driven back again and again by the gas. A gang of men worked from noon until late at night with but little result, and up to this hour but two bodies have been taken out. At midnight the smoke and gas from the right shaft poured up the main exit in volume after volume, almost beyond human endurance. The party gave up all hopes of saving their comrades, and believe that they were killed outright. S. A. Hill, of Dunbar, is superintendent, and has been there only three months. No reason can be given for the disaster until the coroner's jury holds an inquest. It is the worst ever known in the Connellsville region. The rescuers are still at work and will continue to do so until they reach the men beyond the fire. The damage to the mine cannot be estimated. The Farm Hill mine was one of the best in that part of the coal region and the loss will reach far into the thousands. It is now known that the total number of dead is thirty-two.

Beat a Postmaster.

John Love and Thomas Duckworth, of Peculiar, Mo., have been arrested, charged with conspiracy to deprive the postmaster at that place of the receipts and emoluments of his office, interfering with the discharge of his duties and setting up unauthorized receptacles for United States mail. The trouble grew out of the unpopularity of A. S. Gilson, recently appointed postmaster. Love and Duckworth purchased stamps at other towns and gave them away, or sold them to people in Peculiar so as to prevent Gilson from getting his commission on such stamps and also arranged to collect mail matter from the people of the town and took it directly to the railroad trains, thus depriving the postmaster of his legitimate fees.

Brave Steamboat Officers.

The steamer B. F. Ferris left Saginaw, Mich., for Winona Beach, a summer resort on Saginaw Bay, two miles from the mouth of the Saginaw River, with 400 passengers. When about a mile from the beach the steamer struck a snag and sprung a leak, but succeeded in reaching the pier, where she settled with two feet of water in her hold. The officers of the boat kept the fact of the disaster from the passengers, thus averting a panic. The people came home by railroads.

Skull Crushed.

James Jones and Walter Walker, two married men, employed in a cement quarry at Cementville, five miles from Jeffersonville, quarreled. Walker, becoming frenzied, picked up a large bar of iron and struck Jones on the back of the head with terrific force, shattering the skull like an egg-shell. Horrified companions interfered and overpowered Walker just as he was about to strike another blow. Jones never regained consciousness.

Another Fatal Freight Wreck.

A freight train on the Newport News and Mississippi Valley road were derailed by striking a cow at Kerrville, Tenn. The engine and ten cars were badly wrecked. Engineer Gwinn Perkins and an unknown negro tramp were crushed to death. Rush Marshall, of Memphis, fireman, was fatally injured.

Switchmen Strike at Cleveland.

The switchmen on all the railroads entering Cleveland are on a strike. They demand the Chicago rate of wages, which is an advance of about 20 cents a day. About 500 men are out.

Indiana Man Appointed.

A COW-BOY METHOD.

A Duel Fought Between Two Mexicans Near Moore Station, Texas.

Moore Station (Tex.) special: A duel was fought near here between two Mexican cow-boys, Jose Carrasco and Manuel Bosco, over a stolen speckled cow. The two met in the roadway on horseback, lariats in hand. Bosco hailed Carrasco, and demanded the return of his cow. Carrasco became furious, Bosco called Carrasco a liar, and quick as a flash, Carrasco sent his lasso with a swish toward Bosco's neck. Bosco ducked and seized his own lariat. Then up and down the road the two dashed, lassoes circling in the air, but not a word was spoken. The horses were flecked with foam, each horse seeming to realize that it was a fight to death between the riders. Bosco finally turned his eyes from Carrasco for an instant; and Carrasco dropped his lariat over his adversary's neck, swung the pony around, put the spur. Bosco was jerked from his horse and his neck was broken. Then he was dragged over the ground at full speed for more than a mile. Carrasco disengaged the lariat and coolly rode into town, leaving Bosco dead by the roadside.

A MAD MINISTER.

Negro Preacher Crazed by Religion, Terrorizes Ohio People with a Butcher-Knife.

Akron (Ohio) special: Rev. Richmond Collins, colored, for many months pastor of the Akron M. E. Zion Church, suddenly became insane, and leaving his home at 150 North Summit street, created consternation in the southwestern portion of the city by his movements. He was dressed peculiarly, and wore a heavy overcoat, and scared people by pursuing them with a butcher-knife. The mad man cornered a man in a barn on Wooster avenue, but the latter defended himself with a pitchfork, and the visitor soon left and took refuge in a wood on Parkin's Hill. The police authorities were notified and commenced to search for Collins, but without success. In the afternoon as a farmer was driving to town he heard cries in the wood near Glendale Cemetery, and stepping to investigate, found the insane preacher entangled in a barb-wire fence. His clothing was torn and his body was lacerated by the wire, and he had evidently had a terrible experience. It was found necessary to cut away portions of the clothing with a knife before he could be freed. As soon as this was done and Collins was "liberated from the devil and all his angels," as he expressed it, he ran away, leaving the farmer thunderstruck. Collins then went to the elegant residence of Hon. Lewis C. Miller, at Oak Place, and undressing, spread his clothing upon the lawn. Before the police arrived on the scene he had again donned trousers and overcoat and disappeared. The police patrol was called out and a squad of policemen drove after the fugitive as fast as possible. He was followed through the northern portion of the city and over North Hill, where he was seen to enter a wood late in the afternoon. He has not been heard from since, and so far as known is still at large. Collins came here from Pennsylvania. He is about forty-five years of age, and is married, having a wife and a family living here. The cause of his lunacy is attributed to overstudy of religious matters. He has been acting peculiarly at times for some time past, and lately has not been filling the pulpit of his church regularly, another minister succeeding him in the pastorate. Collins is well known among the colored people throughout the State, as he has taken part in religious matters at various points in Ohio for several years.

A BAD CRASH.

Two Trains Come Together at Cleveland, Ohio, and a Bad Wreck Results.

Cleveland special: A train load of passengers on the Cleveland, Canton & Southern Railroad had a miraculous escape from death in an accident at the crossing of that road and the Cleveland and Pittsburgh line near Jones avenue, this city. As it was several persons were more or less injured and the other passengers were badly frightened. A Cleveland, Canton and Southern passenger train, consisting of two coaches and a locomotive, and the Cleveland and Pittsburgh locomotive, drawing the way freight, both being bound toward the city, approached the crossing of the roads. The target man at the crossing, it is alleged, set the signal giving the passenger train the right of way. The passenger train approached the crossing, but the Cleveland and Pittsburgh locomotive did not slacken speed. The express engine and half of the forward car were over the crossing when the freight locomotive struck the coach and crashed into its side. The heavy car was lifted into the air and then thrown upon its side on top of the target-house, which was split into kindling wood. The target-post was thrown to the ground, but the signal remained set for the Cleveland, Canton & Southern track. The coupling of the engine was broken and the locomotive of the train remained upon the track. The coupling of the rear coach was also broken, and that car was thrown from the rails. The Cleveland and Pittsburgh locomotive, which is said to have caused the accident, left the track. The pilot had lifted the car and turned it upon the side after breaking through the heavy frame. Had the engine remained upon the rails it might have cut the coach in two. As it was the damage wrought was heavy. The starled passengers were terribly frightened at the entrance of the locomotive into their car, and a rush was made for the doorway, which by this time was at right angles to its usual position. One by one the uninjured climbed through the opening and were assisted to the earth by Patrolman Kelly. The injured were taken to the Jones' Avenue Depot of the Cleveland, Canton and Southern road, where their wounds were dressed before their further removal.

RULED BY A MOB.

Strikers and Their Sympathizers Reign in the Streets of Columbus.

A special from Columbus, Ohio, dated the 13th inst., says: The Columbus consolidated street railway made another effort to start cars this morning at 10 o'clock, and the results and scenes enacted were similar to those on Monday. The cars had proceeded but a few squares, where thousands had gathered and the tracks were blocked with stone and rubbish. One of the new employes was driven off by threats of arrest for receiving money under false pretenses. He had been bought off by the strikers. The women took a big hand in stopping the cars. The Mayor was present and ordered the arrest of two citizens who were blocking the tracks. The situation was threatening, but no one was injured. The employes at some of the leading manufactories closed down and turned out as soon as they learned that cars were to be started. Their object was to aid the strikers. The Mayor is preparing a list and getting ready to call a meeting of leading citizens to consider the threatening situation. The Mayor claims the police force is inadequate to the task. If a compromise is not reached the Mayor states that he will ask for the militia. The demand is made by the street railroad company. The effort to start the cars was a complete failure, and it is claimed by the stikers as another of their series of victories. The cars were returned to the barn, and it is intimated that another attempt to get cars out will be made this afternoon. The company and police are keeping their own counsel and not publishing their movements in advance. There is no change in the street railway strike which has been on one week today. In that time the company has been unable to move their cars because of the opposition of strikers, aided by the strong support and sympathy of the citizens and organized labor. This afternoon another trial was made to move cars, which proved unsuccessful. The Mayor states the worst feature of the strike is the fact that the City Council has endorsed the course of the strikers and denounced the company and extended other official encouragement which renders a settlement almost impossible.

Narrow Escape from Apaches.

Advices from Jarez, near Casas Grande and Sonora, Mexico, say that six American prospectors ran into a band of eighteen Apaches in the west slope of the Sierra Madras, and had a running fight for fifteen miles, and only escaped on account of the fleetness of their horses.

A WASHOUT.

Nineteen Cars Mashed Into Kindling Wood by Going Over an Embankment.

Maysville (Ky.) special: Nineteen cars down in a washout are mashed into kindling wood. The train was the first section of freight No. 33, drawn by engine No. 154. The engine is now out of sight in the quicksand. The train was running at over thirty miles an hour. Two wrecking trains have been busy all day removing the debris. The workmen have just found two mangled bodies. James Irwin had a portable saw-mill located several hundred yards up Bull Creek, above the railroad. The clouds suddenly bursting, caused a rapid rise in the creek, already badly swollen by the storm. The farmers say the creek rose two feet per minute and the water looked like a wall twenty-five feet high when it got to the railroad fill. The saw mill was lifted from its fastenings with over a hundred big logs hurled violently against the railroad stone culvert. This probably was what caused it to give away. Huge stones weighing several tons were carried by the creek for long distances. The creek rose two feet higher than it has been in forty years. The fury of the storm caused many persons on Bull Creek to abandon their homes and take to the hills. A barn on the farm of Dick Dawson (colored) was struck by lightning and burned. Tom Williams' dwelling was struck by lightning and burned to the ground, his family barely escaping. Some half dozen persons on Bull Creek are yet missing, but it is believed that they will turn up all right.

Fatal Feast.

Homer E. Newton, a most prominent farmer of Summit County, Ohio, died at his home in West Richfield recently. Three weeks ago, while on an excursion with a party of friends, a discussion arose concerning overeating, which ended in a wager, and Newton ate twenty-six hard-boiled eggs. He became ill almost immediately, and was taken home, where he suffered terribly until his death. The stomach and bowels refused to perform their functions, and seemed to be paralyzed by the impact mass of eggs. The patient lived practically without food for three weeks. Newton was aged 45 and was a perfect specimen of physical manhood, six feet tall, and weighing 180 pounds, and was never sick a day in his life until his fatal feast. He owned the finest farm in that section, was worth $100,000, and was a heavy shipper and importer of fine cattle. He was well known to cattle dealers at Chicago and New York, and was a frequent exhibitor at State fairs.

An Electrical Ball of Fire.

Indianapolis special: During an electrical storm, Louis Davis, a boy living south of the city, was killed by lightning. Attorney General Michener and his family had an exciting experience. Michener and Mrs. Michener and four children were sitting in a room in which there is a telephone, and all within eight feet of each other, when Mrs. Michener saw a globe of fire about the size of a goose egg come from the telephone. It just grazed Mr. Michener's ear and exploded in front of him. The noise was like a cannon shot and brought people from their homes for squares around. Sparks of fire flew out in every direction. Mrs. Michener thought her husband had been killed, and the escape of so many persons from injury seems almost miraculous. The telephone connections were destroyed, but there is no other trace left of the stroke of electricity. The ball of fire seems to have exploded before reaching the floor.

On the Warpath.

Helena (Mont.) special: The Cheyenne Indians are on the war path. They have left their regular camps and are gathering in small camps of from fifteen to twenty-five in the tepees, and are firing at settlers' houses and making the most threatening demonstrations. Ranchmen have been bringing their families into the settlement. Cattle are being shot down by the Indians through pure malice, as no parts of the animals are used for beef. Eighteen cattle were shot in one bunch on Otter Creek. Gov. Toole received a dispatch signed by ten prominent citizens of Miles City, requesting that he send 1,000 stands of arms and ammunition. In reply the arms and ammunition were sent, forwarded in charge of Col. C. O. Curtis. One troop of cavalry and two of infantry have been sent from Fort Keogh to the Cheyenne agency.

Strange Fatalism.

London special: A strange story of fatalism was revealed on the arrival of the Umbria. When the vessel started from New York Dr. Joseph Howe, of New York, and his daughter, were among the passengers. Before sailing the doctor had a presentiment that he would die on the voyage, and made arrangements with Cunard agents to embalm his body and send it back. Scarcely twenty-four hours after the vessel left the wharf the doctor was seized by apoplexy and died suddenly. The body was embalmed aboard the vessel and will be returned on the first steamer. He had written friends in London that he was coming across, and intimated that while there was no doubt about his sailing he had grave apprehensions that he would never reach England alive.

Kimmler Will Die by Electricity.

Syracuse (N. Y.) special: Judge Wallace, on motion of Attorney General Tabor, has vacated and dismissed the writ of habeas corpus in William Kimmler's case. The Attorney General appeared for the agent and warden of Auburn prison. In the Judge's orders he recites the facts of the issuing of the writ, and now, since the Supreme Court of the United States has decided that the sentence under which Kimmler is held is the due process of the law and that he is not held and detained contrary to the Constitution of the United States, the writ is recalled and dismissed and Kimmler remanded to the agent and Warden Danston's custody in order that the judgment of the court of oyer and terminer may be duly executed.

Burglars Get Considerable Booty.

Burglars entered the general store of Davis & Friend at Forest, Ind., and robbed them of about one hundred dollars in money and a large quantity of cutlery and jewelry. The money was locked in the safe, but the thieves were successful in working the combination.

A Shocking Accident.

Allen, the 2-year-old child of Mr. and Mrs. Henry H. Harmeyer, of Fort Wayne, was crushed to death by a street car. The youngster was playing in the street as the car approached the corner. The driver, Frank Cairl, saw the child, but it was sitting out of the way of the car and he paid no more attention than usual to the matter, as the children are in the street daily. When the car neared the child, however, it jumped up and darted across the street under the very heels of the horse. The driver applied the brakes, but before he could stop the child was driven under the car wheels and crushed and mangled so badly that it died in the driver's arms.

Vandals Captured.

John Betts and Frank Cummins have been arrested for committing vandalism in the Masonic cemetery at Columbia City, Ind. They are held under bonds of $500 each. Betts was arrested in the city. Cummins tried to escape, but, after a chase of three hours' duration, was finally caught by policeman Barnes in a tamarack swamp, three miles south of the city. It was an exciting race, in which over twenty-five people took part. Some were on horseback and some twenty on foot. When the prisoner was taken into the Mayor's office great crowds of people gathered in the street in front of the city building. Great excitement prevails.

A Home for Printers.

At the session of the Typographical Union at Atlanta, Ga., the special committee appointed to consider matters pertaining to the proposed home at Colorado Springs, reported favoring the use of the Childs-Drexel fund for that purpose. Under the committee's plan there would be fifteen trustees, the present Childs-Drexel trustees hold the long term, the others to be elected. A per capita tax of $1 yearly is to be levied for the support of the home. The matter was considered in committee of the whole and the convention was unanimous concerning the general plan. A $415,000 home will undoubtedly be built at Colorado Springs.

Death from a Fly's Bite.

Several days ago, while James Baker, colored, employed in a poultry house at Indianapolis, was picking chickens, he was bitten on the upper lip by a blue fly. Within a few hours the lip had swollen frightfully, and the young man rapidly grew worse and died. Immediately after death the face presented a horrible sight, the lips being partially decomposed from blood poisoning. There is always more or less decomposing material lying about the poultry house, and the Coroner reports that Mr. Baker was stung by a fly, which likely injected septic matter.

Dynamite Explosion.

The nitro-glycerine factory of Casterline & Co., situated four miles east of Findlay, was blown up by the explosion of a large quantity of the dangerous element. The shock of the explosion broke a number of windows in that city and was distinctly felt at Toledo, forty-three miles away, citizens of that place believing an earthquake shock had passed over the city. No one was injured, and all the owners have to show for $4,000 worth of combustible material is an immense hole in the ground.

Earthquakes in France.

Paris special: Seven shocks of earthquake have occurred in the department of Jura, inflicting great damage in the vicinity of the Jura mountains. The people are panic-stricken, and since the first of the shocks have refused to reenter their houses. Thousands of men, women and children are camped out in the open fields. No loss of life is reported, but a large amount of property has been destroyed.

English After Tobacco.

Louisville special: There is a report that an English syndicate is trying to buy all the tobacco warehouses of this city. Ex-Congressman Albert Willis and Julius Barkhouse, the distiller, are said to be representatives of the syndicate, but they are now absent from the city, it is alleged on this business. The price talked of is $2,000,000. If the deal is made here, the Cincinnati houses are also to be bought.

A German Victory.

The bitter strife engendered by the School Commissioners abolishing the teaching of German in certain branches of public schools at Indianapolis was appealed to the polls in an election to fill vacancies on the Board, and it resulted in a drawn battle, the political complexion remaining as before. The Commissioners favoring German, however, were re-elected by increased majorities.

New United States Steamer.

The United States steamship, Enterprise, now at New York, will go into commission on July first, under command of Commander G. A. Converse. Her sailing orders are not yet completed, but it is probable she will first make a trip to Europe for the purpose of carrying the body of the inventor, Ericsson, to Sweden, and then proceed to the South Atlantic Station.

Killed to Save Himself.

The Governor has pardoned John Nixon, a life man in the Northern Penitentiary, from Boone County, who has served ten years, on the recommendation of the presiding judge at the trial, the prosecutor, and the jury. The latter stated in its recommendation that in the jury-room when the members agreed upon a verdict, it was also agreed to recommend his pardon after he had served seven years. Nixon was sent up for killing a man named Mulligan, who enticed him to a secluded spot and attempted to murder him, and in defending himself Nixon plunged a knife into Mulligan's body. At the trial the Court told him if he would plead guilty he would give him ten years, but Nixon refused, saying he had committed the deed only to save his own life, and when the jury returned a verdict with a life sentence Judge Terhune set it aside and ordered a new trial, over which Judge Suit presided, and which resulted in a similar verdict with the result as above related. During his imprisonment Nixon lost his right arm in the machinery of the institution, and now starts life anew at a disadvantage.

Ground to Death.

Albert G. Hoffman, switchman in the yards of the Chicago and Atlantic Railroad at Huntington, was killed by cars. He was employed at night, and went to the coal dock to run down two cars that had been unloaded there. The track was very much inclined leading from the dock, and it requires that the brakes be set very tight. When the cars started down the track Hoffman ran from the rear end to the front of the head car to set the brake, but in doing so stubbed his toe and fell from the car to the middle of the track beneath. The car was running rapidly, and no sooner did he strike the track than a brake beam of the car struck his right leg near the hip, fracturing the bones and bruising it otherwise. That threw him over, and the flange of a wheel struck the lower part of his back, tearing the flesh all off clear to his backbone, exposing it to sight. It was a sickening looking wound, and he lived but a short time.

—Caleb Perkins, a citizen of Putnam County for over fifty years, died at his home in Clinton Township, where he had lived ever since his removal to the county. He was in the eightieth year of his age. Deceased was a prominent member of the M. E. Church. He died of heart disease.

—The Northern Indiana Editorial Convention, which was to have met at Maxinkuckee, June 12 to 16, has been postponed on account of other editorial meetings of same date, the resort not being open at that time, and other causes. The convention will be held about the 1st of September.

—The house of Lucian Alexander at Gwynneville, in the Northern part of Shelby County, was struck by lightning, completely destroying a portion of the house and tore the roof off of the entire building. Mrs. Alexander, who was standing in a door, was knocked senseless, but soon recovered. The storm raged terrifically, doing a great deal of damage.

—Deputy Revenue Collector Butler has registered out of use the still of Jacob Brunaman at Berne, in which he had just manufactured nine barrels of whisky, 102 proof, from common Irish potatoes. One bushel of potatoes mades six quarts of whisky worth $3.10 per gallon in bond. The experiment was a success and this, Butler says, is the only distillery of the kind in the United States.

—Complaints come from all points of Crawford County and surrounding ones, as well as from Meade County, Ky., that oats are totally destroyed by green bugs, or flies, such as infest rose bushes, and that they are now attacking the wheat. Prospects for a grain crop are very bad. The grass crop was never better, and in this and in the root crops yet to be planted remains the farmers' only hope. Corn which was planted during the last week of May is in excellent condition, but there is much corn ground yet unbroken.

—William Turner's barn at Pleasant Ridge, eight miles northeast of Madison, was struck and totally destroyed by lightning. All the contents, horses, cows and farm implements and Mr. Turner, who was feeding stock at the time, were burned.

—H. S. Donica committed suicide at Tunnelton, by taking twenty-five grains of morphine. Poverty and sickness are supposed to be the cause of the rash act. Donica was forty years old. He leaves a wife who is very sick, and it is expected that she will soon follow her husband to the grave.

—Charles Harrison Harmeyer, 18-months-old, the child of Henry Harmeyer, an employe of the Pittsburgh, Fort Wayne and Chicago car shops, at Fort Wayne, while playing in the street was run over by a street-car and instantly killed. Driver L. D. Cairll gave himself up to the authorities, but was later released as he was proven blameless.

—William Montz, wife and child, hailing from Big Cave, 120 miles above Cincinnati, arrived at Madison in a skiff. They stopped opposite the city to eat dinner, and Montz started out to take a swim, when he was seized with cramps and drowned. The wife and child are being cared for and a search is being made for the body. They were en route to Louisville.

—The community living around Sim Coy's Road House, east of Indianapolis, objecting to Sunday base-ball, are preparing to file twenty-five cases against Coy in the Criminal Court, on information, for failure to take out a city retail liquor license under the law which gives the city jurisdiction over liquor establishments within two miles of its corporate limits. At the same time information will be lodged against the street car company, of which Mr. Shaffer, President of the Y. M. C. A., is the controlling force, in an equal number of cases, for alleged overloading of cars in conveying passengers to and fro between the city and Coy's Park.

—Several months ago Ed Baker, a young business man of Martinsville, began paying court to a young lady there and under promise of marriage accomplished her ruin. When the young lady's condition betrayed her Baker left for parts unknown. A private detective arrested him a few days later in Indianapolis, when he procured a license and married the girl. He left on the first train the following morning and was again overhauled in Indianapolis. He has just been released on $1,000 bail to answer to the charge of criminal betrayal at the September term of court. This is the first case that has ever taken such a phase and considerable attention is attracted.

—Miss Lulu O'Keefe, of the College of Liberal Arts, Greencastle, had a remarkable experience with a needle, which she ran in her foot nine years ago. The young lady had endured no little pain in walking, the point of the needle having lodged against the periosteum, near the sole of the foot; but she could not summon courage enough to have it removed until the other day, when the operation was performed by Dr. G. C. Smythe in less time than it takes to tell it. The needle was three-fourths of an inch in length. It having lodged against the bone, was prevented from working its way through and out of the foot. The patient, when she recovered from the effects of the chloroform, was rejoiced beyond expression, nor did she experience the slightest pain.

—Elizabeth Coward, of Martin County, and Kate Young, of Vigo, both serving terms in the Female Reformatory for grand larceny, made a daring escape form the institution the other morning, and are still at large. They worked in the laundry department, and secured two sheets each, which they wrapped about their persons, and thus concealed themselves from the Superintendent. They also secured a couple of case knives, and with these sawed out two of the iron bars that form a part of the grating at the windows. They then let themselves down with the sheets, and succeeded in scaling the wall which surrounds the prison. They are armed with the knives, and it is not believed that they can be retaken without a struggle.

—The case of Hosea against the White Caps has ended. April 11, 1890, David Hosea was taken out of his house in Barr Township, Daviess County, by eight masked men and flogged with hickory switches. April 7, John McGath was arrested for attempting to buy the vote of David Hosea, jr., and on the night of April 10, William Seals' barn was burned. Now, when the White Caps took Mr. Hosea from his bed, they charged him with burning the barn and also threatened to whip the old man because his son had McGrath arrested. In the face of these facts Mr. Hosea believed William Seals, John McGrath, Patrick McGrath, Samuel Brewer, and Charles Gough to be his persecutors and accordingly filed an affidavit against them. At the trial, held recently, each defendant proved an alibi, and the jury returned a verdict of not guilty.

—The Bee Line and Midland roads have renewed their quarrel with reference to a switch landing to one of the principal factories in Anderson. Several weeks ago the Bee Line tore up 400 feet of a switch that had been built by the Midland. The other day Henry Crawford obtained a restraining order, and proceeded at once to replace the switch. A force of Bee Line workmen rallied and attempted to thwart his efforts. Harry Crawford, Jr., was struck by a tie thrown by a Bee Line workman. He thought that he was injured maliciously, and proceeded to pound the laborer. The opposing laborers threw down their shovels and picks and a general fight was averted only by the timely arrival of Deputy Sheriff Campbell, who served on the works an injunction notice. The Midland holds the fort, but hostilities are liable to break out at any time.

—Prof. John C. Barrett, engaged during the past year in post-graduate work at Earlham, has been elected principal of the Muncie High school.

—Arthur Deming, of Terre Haute, carried $12,000 life insurance in the Ætna Company, and after his death the company resisted payment, alleging that alcoholism contributed to his demise. Suit was brought and transferred to Putnam County, and the case finally went to the Supreme Court, the company being held responsible. The claim was paid.

—The following, except the name, is a verbatim copy of a note sent by a very prominent citizen recently to a certain physician of Crawford County: "Doc, John Jones is very bad and if you think it worth while I believe he will die."

—Two women, Doan Nichols and Mrs. Shetterly, were arrested at Muncie on the charge of abducting Meda Waters, aged 17, to Indianapolis for immoral purposes. Miss Waters' father brought her back, but filled with remorse, the young girl took strychnine and died. Mr. Waters is determined to punish the women.

DOINGS OF CONGRESS.

IMPORTANT MEASURES CONSIDERED AND ACTED UPON.

At the Nation's Capitol—What Is Being Done by the Senate and House—Old Matters Disposed Of and New Ones Considered.

In the course of the debate in the Senate on the 10th inst., on the silver bill, Mr. Teller became very much excited on the subject of free coinage, which he said was imperatively demanded by the people. Mr. Morrill presented the conference report of the two houses upon the bill providing for the erection of a suitable postoffice building in the city of Washington, and requested that the Senate agree to the conference report, which, after some little discussion was done. After the conference report had been agreed to, on motion of Senator Edmunds the Senate had a brief executive session and adjourned. The appropriation bill for the expenses of the postoffice department for the coming fiscal year was passed by the House. An act to amend an act for the relief of settlers on railroad lands was then taken up and passed; also an act for the relief of settlers on public lands to protect them in actions brought by land-grant companies, etc.; also a bill granting the right of way through the Fort Clarke Reservation, Tex., to the Fort Clarke and Rio Grande Railroad Company. Petitions were received and referred to the irrigation committee, asking for appropriations for irrigation purposes. An act to reorganize the customs collection district at Puget Sound and appropriating amounts for the salaries of collectors was then passed, and the House adjourned.

In the Senate, on the 11th inst., Mr. Vest's bill to prohibit monopoly in the transportation of cattle to foreign countries was passed, Mr. Vest having consented to the amendment offered by Mr. Hale, inserting the words: "Not already contracted for, in good faith, by persons or parties having cattle for transportation at the date of such contract sufficient to occupy such storage room." The Senate joint resolution in regard to the export trade in cattle was then taken up and adopted. It requires the President of the United States to cause correspondence and negotiations to be had with the authorities of Great Britain for the purpose of securing the abrogation or modification of the regulations now enforced which require cattle imported into Great Britain from the United States to be slaughtered at the port of entry, and prohibiting the same from being carried alive to other places in said kingdom. The Senate bill to provide for the inspection of live cattle and beef products intended for export to foreign countries was then taken up and passed. It requires the Secretary of Agriculture to cause to be made a careful inspection of all live cattle and beef products intended for export to foreign countries from the United States, with a view to ascertain whether such cattle and beef products are free from disease. The Senate bill for the establishment of a port of delivery at Rock Island, Ill., was passed. The following bills were also passed: Senate bill for a public building at Racine, Wis., cost not to exceed $100,000; House bill increasing from $150,000 to $275,000 the limit of cost for the public building at Duluth, Minn.; extending the criminal jurisdiction of the Circuit and District courts to the great lakes and their connecting waters. Adverse reports were made from the Finance Committee on Mr. Stanford's bill for Government loans on liens of real estate and on the bill to abolish metal money, and the bills were indefinitely postponed. In the House the conference report on the Senate dependent pension bill was presented by Mr. Morrill, of Kansas. Mr. Morrill explained that the committee had struck out the dependent feature of the Senate bill and the service feature of the House bill. The measure as determined upon was not exactly what he would desire, but it was the best that he could obtain. It would distribute $35,000,000 among the poor soldiers of the nation. Mr. Springer protested against the manner in which the bill was brought before the House, and he asked that it go over in order that it might be printed in The Record. Mr. Morrill objected and the previous question was then ordered, the vote being yeas, 115; nays, 27. The conference committee on the Sherman trust bill then reported, and after a debate extending over two hours it was laid over. At 4:40 o'clock the House adjourned.

In the Senate, on the 12th inst., Senator Allison reported the legislative, executive and judicial appropriation bill, which, as it passed the House, carried a total of $20,842,447. The Senate committee added $313,470, making a total of $21,115,917. The bill for the year 1889-'90 appropriated $20,853,725, and the estimates for the ensuing year were $21,627,250. The bill was placed on the calendar. The silver bill then came, and speeches on the subject were made by Senators Evarts, Vance and Morgan. Mr. Evarts had a most attentive audience of a majority of the Senators throughout his speech, notwithstanding the fact that he spoke for over two hours, and the silver question had claimed the attention of the Senate for so long. Among the bills reported from committee and placed on the calendar were two Senate bills to amend the polygamy laws, and the House legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill. The House bill for the establishment of new harbor lines in Portage Lake, Mich., was reported and passed. In the House, the conference report on the Sherman trust bill came up and after some discussion, on motion of Mr. Stewart, of Vermont, a new conference was ordered with instructions to the conferees to strike out the bill and report the measure as it came from the Senate. Mr. Spooner, of Rhode Island, presented and the House agreed to the conference report on the military academy appropriation bill. Mr. Henderson of Iowa, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported an urgent deficiency bill, appropriating $3,708,000 for the payment of pensions and $3,075,000 for expenses of the eleventh census. Passed. Mr. Morrow, of California, presented the conference report on the pension appropriation bill. The report, which is a disagreeing one, was adopted, and a further conference was ordered. The House then went into committee of the whole for the consideration of the agricultural appropriation bill. The committee soon rose and the bill was passed. The House then took a recess, and the evening session was devoted to the consideration of bills reported from the Committee on Commerce.

In the Senate, on the 13th inst., the resolution offered the previous day by Mr. Edmunds appointing Edward K. Valentine Sergeant-at-arms of the Senate, was taken up and agreed to—an amendment offered by Mr. Harris, substituting the name of Henry W. Wall, of Tennessee, having been first voted down. The Senate silver bill was then taken up and finally it was agreed, by unanimous consent, that the Senate bill should be laid on the table; the House bill, as amended by the Finance Committee, substituted for it; the general debate to extend till 3 o'clock on Monday. Mr. Daniel next addressed the Senate. Without concluding his speech, Mr. Daniel yielded for a motion to go into executive session and after a brief secret session the Senate adjourned. The House went into committee of the whole on the sundry civil appropriation bill. Mr. Cannon said that the amount of appropriation carried by the measure was, in round numbers, $28,000,000. The fourteen regular appropriation bills, as reported to the House, aggregated an expenditure of $306,000,000, an excess of $35,000,000 over the appropriations for the current year. The excess was nearly all accounted for in three bills—pension, $18,000,000; postoffice, $12,000,000 and naval, $2,160,000. The other $3,000,000 resulted from the expansion incident to the growth of the country. Mr. Cannon then gave a statement of the attitude of the appropriation bills. The following amendments were adopted: Appropriating $10,000 for a public building at Cedar Rapids, Iowa; appropriating $10,000 for an elevator in the public building at Peoria, Ill.; appropriating $30,000 for a public building at Martinsburg, W. Va.; increasing from $35,000 to $40,000 the appropriation for the public building at Winona, Minn.

We Welcome June Because

Her roses never fail.

She ushers summer in.

She brings the native berry.

She is the queen of months.

This is earth's blooming-time.

She is so friendly, generous, and fair.

New bobolinks sing their rollicking songs.

With her come visions of rest and vacation.

The odor of new-mown hay pervades the air.

Her days are longest and her birds are happiest.

She brings the gentlest, balmiest breezes of the year.

She brings suggestions of the restless sea and flapping sail.

The sweet girl graduate in her muslin gown is with us again.

Her days and nights are worth living and worth being remembered.

The sweetness of all the apple blossoms seems to be lingering in her lap.

"Puck"-erings.

The thermometer is not only a measure of heat, but of the price of ice.

The beggar cannot reach the luxuries of life, because he is short in his alms.

Dahomey is not the only nation which has women warriors. All the world's men-of-war are dubbed "she."

Uncle Sam's custom-house has gobbled up the clothes of some ballet girls. The astonishing thing about this is a big haul was made.

There is no particular difference between the shop girl and the saleslady; but the difference between them and the floor walker is often something awful to behold.

IN SEARCH OF ARCADIE.

BY FLAVEL SCOTT MINES.

Fickle seem the poet's dreams.
  I have often vainly sought
For their bright, resplendent gleams—
  For their paths with beauty wrought.
Idyls such as poets sing
  Sweetly to my soul appeal.
Do they fly on fancy's wing?
  Are their songs not real?

Arcadie! Where is the place?
  Forest of enchanted shade—
Is it for a favored race?—
  For the poet's born, not made?—
Poets whom the Muses taught
  In the early blush of youth,
And whose sweetest, highest thought
  Is the song of truth?

Did they in some boat embark,
  With divine Love at the helm,
And to mystic teachings hark,
  In that distant fairy realm?
Arcadie I can not find,
  And the thought which comes is hard:
I, alas, am but a blind,
  Manufactured bard.

BETRAYED;

—OR—

A DARK MARRIAGE MORN.

A Romance of Love, Intrigue and Crime.

BY MRS. ALICE P. CARRISTON.

CHAPTER V.

IN PURSUIT.

The muffled figure that had disappeared in the darkness slowly returned and once more stood, with an air of irresolution, in front of the house.

A light in the basement attracted her attention.

After an instant's hesitation and a hasty glance about her she entered the gate and knocked on the window.

The servant girl came forward, and pressing her face against the glass, peered out at her curiously.

The woman made an eager gesture, indicating that she desired to speak with her.

Grumblingly the girl left the window, and a moment later opened the door.

The stranger stepped into the entry, and quietly removed the shawl in which she had been muffled. The servant gazed upon the face now fully revealed, with a look of unequalified astonishment.

The stranger's hand quickly sought her pocket and then was extended toward the guileless daughter of Erin.

"I am making you some little trouble," she said; "please oblige me by taking this."

"Bless ye for a perfect lady, as ye air," burst out Bridget. "Sure, thin, I can't find it in me heart to take—well, well, if you will have it so—an' phat can I do for ye now, darlint?"

"Do you know the gentleman who left this house only a moment ago? Please tell me that?"

"Know him, is it? I do, thin, an' phat's more, it's no good av him I know."

"There is a young lady here, whom he calls to see, is there not?"

"There is."

"Is—is she very pretty?"

"She's purty enough, sure." Then seeing an indescribable look of pain, or annoyance on the other's face, she hastened to add, in a soothing tone: "But, darlint, not half so purty as yer own swate self."

"Has he been coming here often to see her?" asked the stranger, hesitatingly.

"Often, is it? Sure, thin, it's wearin' out the carpets, he is, wid his comin's an' his goin's. Why, till widin a wake or so, he's been comin' almost ivery night, to say nothin' about Sundays."

"But the lady's brother is his friend. Might he not come to see him?"

"Och! I say frind to ye. Phat was he here to-night for, thin, wid niver a solitary soul in the house, barrin' the girl herself up there, an' me down here? It wasn't the brother he wanted to see, I'm thinkin'."

"And so she is all alone?"

"She is, an' she's hardly been out of her rooms these three days, but has kept by herself up there a-cryin' av her eyes out, so she has. But sure, miss, it's sick ye air. Och, hone, an' phat's the matter? God send the spalpeen av a man is nothin' to ye."

"No, no," gasped the poor creature, "he's nothing to me. He was my husband—for an hour, but—oh, God! that I might die."

"Yer husband! Luk at that now!" exclaimed Bridget, with an expression of blank amazement on her face. Then a feeling of pity seizing her, she quickly added:

"Sit down here, darlint, sit down, I say. Here, take this glass of wather. Phat in the wurruld can I do for ye, say?"

"If I might trouble you to get me a carriage," poor Mildred murmured.

"Throuble, is it? I'll have a carriage here for ye in less than no time," and snatching up a cheap but gaudy shawl, which she threw over her head, the girl hurried from the house, conscience-smitten not a little, yet not well seeing how she could retract any of the absurd statements she had made.

She was nearly as good as her word in the matter of time, however, for three minutes had scarcely elapsed when a carriage was in waiting before the door, and, after refusing a further offer from poor Mildred, the contrite girl helped her in, and saw it roll swiftly away.

"Luk at that now," she muttered to herself. "What divilment there is in the wurruld. Who cud belave that wid so swate a face she carried so sad a heart? Sure, I wish I hadn't thold her all I did; but the mane spalpeen av a man, he niver gave me ther worth av a cint, an' I as good as axin' him, too."

Thus quieting her conscience, Bridget returned to her kitchen, while the carriage containing the broken-hearted Mildred sped onward toward Forty-second street.

Meanwhile, Eugene Cleveland had returned to the Vernon house, and, after letting himself in by the same way he had made his exit, hastened upstairs, hoping to gain his wife's room unobserved.

But he was not to be so fortunate. As he was passing through the main hall, Mrs. Vernon herself suddenly darted from the back parlor, and, seizing him eagerly by the arm, exclaimed, in a voice quite loud enough to attract the attention of all in the adjoining rooms:

"Where in the world have you been for the last half-hour or more, Mr. Cleveland, and, in mercy's name, what has taken your wife away?"

"My wife?"

"Yes, indeed. It seems to me you both left us very unceremoniously."

"Mildred is not here then? You mean to tell me that she is gone?"

"Certainly; that is exactly what I say. I missed her suddenly, and, having something I wished very much to speak to her about, I hunted for her high and low. But it was all of no use; she was gone; and at last I noticed that her hat and shawl were gone, too."

A feeling of unutterable dread—of terror—entered the bridegroom's heart, and he looked around him almost helplessly.

At this moment one of the gentlemen who had helped to form the group that had gathered about Eugene and his wife at the moment the forged note had been handed to him stepped forward, and said:

"It so happened, Mr. Cleveland, that I particularly noticed your wife after your own somewhat abrupt withdrawal, and I am able to tell you this much: She remained with her guests for about twenty minutes after you received the note which called you away, appearing all the time as though she were ill at ease. At length she stepped into the hall, and seemed to hesitate whether to go up-stairs or to return to the parlors. Just then the bell rang, and another note was handed in.

"It was for her. She took it, and almost immediately retired to her own chamber. A few moments later she hastily descended the stairs, with hat and shawl on, and quietly left the house."

"Why did you not tell me all this before, Mr. Henley?" asked Mrs. Vernon, somewhat severely.

"It was my impression that her husband had privately sent for her," answered the guest; "and I thought, therefore, under the circumstances, it was best to keep quiet. I see now I was in error."

"A persistent enemy is working against us," exclaimed Eugene, bitterly. "Not a moment is to be lost. She must be found at once, or it will be too late!"

He had a singular premonition that some one, he knew not who, was conspiring against his happiness; and he recalled for a second a strange scene of a few days ago.

"What mean you?" demanded Mildred's aunt, in a terrified voice.

"I mean," answered the unhappy bridegroom, "that the note which took me away from here half an hour since was a base and cruel forgery, and it was done in order to get me out of the way, so that my wife might be enticed from this house. Let me go to her room for a moment." And, taking three steps at a time, he bounded up the staircase.

On reaching Mildred's room, he looked eagerly about the floor. No note was there. Mildred had found it—he was satisfied of that now—and he shuddered to think what the result might be.

He sank heavily into a chair. He was almost discouraged. He could hardly control his thoughts for a moment.

At length the image of his young and broken-hearted wife, wandering about the almost deserted streets in the darkness of the night, rose up before him, and he started to his feet with the fixed purpose of finding her.

Where could she have gone?

He had hardly framed the question in his mind when the answer was suggested to him:

"Why, to Meta's, to be sure." And once more he rushed down the stairway.

The guests had been gradually dropping off. They had seen that their presence was becoming embarrassing, and so had the good sense to retire.

Now a few only remained.

"I think I know where she has gone, Mrs. Vernon," Eugene said, eagerly, "and I will go there at once and see if I am right. I shall be back very soon; so, if she should return in my absence, please keep her here. Tell her not to leave the house again on any account."

"You may be sure I shall do so," said the lady, emphatically.

"Have you a carriage, Mr. Cleveland?" asked Mr. Henley, who was one of the few remaining, now stepping forward.

"I have not," answered Eugene. "I dismissed the one I had at the door."

"Then take mine, by all means. It is waiting without."

"A thousand thanks. I will gladly avail myself of your kind permission."

"Do so; and if I can be of the slightest service——"

"No, no; I think not; and yet, my mind is in such a whirl, I ought to have some one with me; and you, being cooler, might be able to give me a word of advice when I most need it. Yes, if you are willing, I shall be glad to have your company."

"Then come;" and the two left the house together.

CHAPTER VI.

IN THE SHADOW OF DEATH.

As the carriage containing the unhappy bride whirled swiftly onward toward Forty-second street, Mildred sat bolt upright on the back seat, her hands clasped in her lap, her lips tightly compressed, and her eyes fixed and staring before her, but seeing nothing.

She had merely said, in answer to the hackman's careless "Where to, miss?" "The Grand Central Depot," and then had sunk into a state of apathy, from which she was at length aroused by the stopping of the carriage, the opening of the door, and the waiting driver's business-like "Here you are, miss."

She accepted his proffered assistance, and, as she stood upon the sidewalk, hastily took out her portmonnaie and dismissed him with a liberal fee. Then, after a hasty glance around, she went into the waiting-room by the ladies' entrance.

The window of the ticket office was open. She hurried toward it.

"When does the next train that stops at Riverside leave here, if you please, sir?" she asked, in a low and trembling voice.

"Eleven thirty-five," answered the ticket agent, glibly.

"Oh! so late? Is there none before that?"

The distress and bitter disappointment, made plainly manifest by the tone in which the words were uttered, fixed the agent's attention, and, being human, he was affected.

"No, miss," he said, not unkindly, "the train you should have taken has been gone some little time.

"There is no other that stops at Riverside until eleven thirty-five, but the nine-thirty train, which will leave very soon now, stops at Cos Cob, and that, you know, is only just across the river."

"Oh, thank you, sir; I will take a ticket to Cos Cob," and having secured it she seated herself in an obscure corner to wait until the door should be opened and she should be permitted to take her seat in the cars.

From the very moment she had descended from the carriage, by that mysterious intuitive feeling which, in a greater or less degree we all possess, she had been made painfully aware, without seeing any one, that she was being closely watched.

Now, for the first time, she mustered courage and looked about her.

All at once her eyes rested upon a man at no great distance from her.

He was leaning, in a studied attitude, against one of the huge fluted columns, and his gaze—indeed, his whole attention—seemed fixed upon herself.

Mildred shuddered, why, she knew not. She had never seen this man before, and there was nothing about him to suggest that he was in any marked degree different from other men; and yet her pure womanly instincts made her shrink from his gaze.

Minute after minute passed, and still he stood there, with eyes, apparently, for nothing but her face.

At length the gong sounded, the door was thrown open, and a loud voice called out:

"Nine-thirty! New Haven way," and with a feeling of intense relief Mildred rose and hurried forward.

For one instant she was stopped at the door while she showed her ticket, and then, after being directed to her train, she hastened onward.

At last she had found the right car and secured a seat.

The one directly in front of her was not occupied.

In that next forward was a middle-aged lady and a beautiful young girl.

"About my own age," thought Mildred, "and, indeed looks very much like me.

"I wonder who she can be? Oh! I hope hers will be a far happier lot than mine."

Then, as she sank back into a corner by the window:

"She has her mother with her! Oh! if I can only reach my home and throw myself into my mother's arms, before Eugene finds me, I shall be so——"

And then she stopped short, and a thrill of terror shot through her being, and almost made her heart stand still.

There, directly opposite, sat the very man who had watched her persistently in the waiting-room, and now, as then, his eyes were fixed steadfastly upon her.

On and on flew the train. Faster and faster it sped away in the darkness.

Station after station was passed so quickly that they seemed almost close together, rather than miles apart. At length Port Chester was passed. The next station would be Greenwich, and then Cos Cob.

Mildred was thinking what she would do in case the obtrusive stranger should leave the train at the same time with herself, when all at once a shrill whistle broke on her ear, then came an appalling cry from far ahead, and the next moment the car she was in seemed to shrink up into nothingness.

For one moment she retained her faculties, and in that moment she saw a timber fall and crush in the head of the beautiful girl in front of her, she saw the mother sink prostrate by her dead daughter's side, she saw a horrible look of abject terror settle on the face of the stranger, and then she saw no more.

When she once more woke to consciousness she was lying on the ground, surrounded on every hand by the dead and dying.

On the track above was a waiting train, evidently but just arrived.

At the foot of the embankment, down which they had plunged, was the wreck of the doomed cars, now burning fiercely.

Mildred raised herself on her left elbow and looked about her.

By the light of the burning cars she could readily distinguish objects, and at no great distance she saw a form which she at once knew to be that of the mother of the young girl who had sat in front of her.

A little further away, horribly burned, was what she felt rather than knew to be all that was left of the girl herself.

Something moist trickling down her face and a terrible pain in her head, made her essay to raise her right hand.

The attempt was a failure, and then she knew that her right arm was broken.

At that moment she saw coming toward her, with conciliatory look and fawning manners, the detested stranger. He had something in his hand. It looked like her own hat, and, involuntarily, she attempted to put out her hand to take it.

The effort caused a spasm of pain; a faintness seized her, her head whirled, and she fell back unconscious.

"Good!" exclaimed the stranger, in a tone of satisfaction, and hastened to where the dead girl lay, after crushing the hat he carried a little more—it was pretty well crushed already.

In a few minutes he returned, accompanied by a strong-limbed man, evidently a farmer.

"This is my poor darling," he said, pointing to Mildred. "Take her up gently, I fear she is badly injured. Carry her to your house, and have the carriage ready as speedily as possible. I will join you presently. I wish to do what I can for one or two of these poor sufferers. Ah! how thankful I ought to be that God's great mercy spared me while so many were hurried into eternity."

The young farmer muttered something not overcomplimentary to the management of the railway, and raising Mildred as tenderly in his arms as a woman might, bore her away.

The fearful scene was alive with men, and even women, hastening from one group to another, and doing all in their power to alleviate the sufferings of the wounded. Being thus occupied, these good Samaritans had little time for anything else, and so the scheming stranger passed unnoticed.

"Now, then," he muttered, as his late companion disappeared with his unconscious burden, "what I have to do must be done quickly," and once approaching the body of the young girl, he bent over it and scrutinized it closely.

"No, she could never be recognized in the world," he muttered half aloud. "Her hair, what little there is left, is the same color as the other's. Her dress and outer garments are all burned. Her hat I have disposed of, and this one shall take its place. Now, then, if, as I suspect, Mr. Eugene Cleveland was on that train that just came up, I'm ready for him," and raising himself, he was about to walk away, when he saw a group of three or four men, one of them carrying a lantern, coming toward him.

"Luck favors me!" he exclaimed in high glee. "Here comes the young husband, sure enough, and the conductor is with him."

"If she was aboard the train after our last stop, she must be off here somewhere," the conductor was saying. "We have looked everywhere else."

"Ah, here are a few," he suddenly added. "This poor woman, I remember her distinctly. She was seated near the young lady you described, she and——"

"Great God! can this be she—can this be Mildred?" suddenly broke in Eugene, as he stood before the remains of the unfortunate young girl, who, in life, had so closely resembled his bride.

"I think not—I hope not," hastily exclaimed his friend, at the same time endeavoring to turn him away.

But an object lying close by had caught Eugene's attention.

"That's her hat," he cried out. "I know it. Yes, this poor, disfigured body must be all that is left of my once beautiful Mildred. God help me; how can I ever bear it?"

"Ah!" suddenly exclaimed the conductor, turning upon the stranger; "you were in the same car, and near these people. Do you know who this was?"

"Don't know her name," responded the man, glibly. "She was a young lady traveling by herself. Sat in the seat directly opposite the one I occupied. I noticed her in the waiting-room of the Grand Central Depot. She seemed to be in trouble; wanted to take a ticket to Riverside, had to take one to Cos Cob."

"Alas! all hope is now gone. It is, indeed, my poor Mildred," and Eugene bent over the form of his supposed wife.

The stranger having accomplished his object, hastened away. Soon he arrived at a farm house, and to his great relief saw a carriage waiting before the door.

He hurried in.

"We'll start at once," he said, addressing the farmer, whom he met in the hall. And then he entered the room where Mildred was lying upon the lounge.

"Mister," said a woman, coming in just as he was raising the unconscious girl in his arms, "I tell you a doctor ought to see that poor child at once; her head is badly injured, and her right arm broken."

"A surgeon, and as good a one as there is in this country, will see her in less than half an hour, of that you may be sure," said the man, warmly, and as the somewhat mollified housewife stepped out of the way, he carried Mildred to the carriage.

He had taken his seat by the side of his unconscious companion, and the horses had just started, when two men slowly approached bearing a body between them, while two more followed after.

One of these last looked up for an instant, and his eyes rested on the form of the unconscious young woman.

The next moment the carriage had passed and was gone, and Eugene Cleveland knew not how very near he had been to thwarting the black scheme of those whose purpose it was to wreck his life's happiness.

CHAPTER VII.

THE PRIVATE SECRETARY.

The night of the horrible accident had passed. The new day had come, with its heavy burden of cares and sorrows and pains.

The day, too, wore away, the shadows of another night fell, and deepened more and more the gloom that pervaded the rich but spirit-depressing library of the Hon. Sherwood Elliston.

Presently the door opened, and a woman stood upon the threshold of the room.

She took a step forward and touched the bell. A foot-man appeared with surprising celerity.

"A light," she said, pointing to the argand burner, and then sank wearily into the great easy chair that some time before had been occupied by her husband's nephew.

The lamp was lighted, the porcelain shade properly adjusted, and the servant retired. Then Cora Elliston turned eagerly to the evening paper she held in her hand.

It did not take her long to find the heading she was in search of.

"ANOTHER HORRIBLE RAILWAY ACCIDENT!

"A REGULAR TRAIN RUNS INTO A SPECIAL, IS TELESCOPED, THROWN DOWN AN EMBANKMENT AND TAKES FIRE!

"Twenty-three Passengers Killed and Burned! As Many More Wounded!

"A Complete List of the Victims."

It was this list that fixed the lady's attention, and eagerly she scanned the names.

Yes, it was there!

"Mildred L. Cleveland, wife of Eugene Cleveland."

Dead! Ah! that was more than she had hoped for. That was almost too good to be true. Where was Oscar Slyme? How dare he stay away so long, when he must know she was dying to learn exactly what had happened?

Once more she looked at the heading, and then slowly and carefully read the article through from beginning to end.

"If there is no mistake—if the girl is really dead, nothing could have happened better," she murmured. "Luck will have played into my hands wonderfully; but——"

A discreet knock at the door attracted attention.

"Come in," she called eagerly, and the stranger of the Grand Central depot, of the train, and of the scene of the accident, slid, rather than walked, into the room.

Oscar Slyme was the private secretary of the Hon. Sherwood Elliston. He was a man of, it may be, thirty-five years of age. He had been called handsome, and by some even distinguished-looking, and, perhaps, in a certain degree, he was so.

He, at least, believed in his own good looks, and secretly flattered himself on a certain resemblance to the august personage whose secretary he was. Partly from nature, and partly from the constant imitation to which he submitted himself, this idea had some foundation, for he resembled the stately Mr. Elliston as much as a vulgar man can resemble one of high polish.

He was the son of a small manufacturer in Connecticut; had received from his father an honestly acquired fortune, and had dissipated it in the various enterprises of his adventurous life.

The influence of his college, however, obtained for him a place in the Department of State at Washington. He left it to come to New York and study law; placed himself with an attorney; attempted literature without success; gambled at one of the most fashionable dens, and lost there.

He had successfully knocked with feverish hand at all the doors of fortune, and none had opened to him, because, though his ambition was great, his capacity was limited.

The subordinate positions, for which alone he was fit, he did not want. He would have made a very good schoolmaster. He sighed to be a poet.

He would have been a respectable village rector. He pined to be a bishop.

Fitted for an excellent private secretary, he aspired to be a member of the President's Cabinet. In fine, he wished to be a great man, and consequently was a failure as a little one.

But he made himself a hypocrite; and that he found much easier. He fortified himself on the one hand by fraternizing with the free-thinkers of the Ingersoll school; on the other, by joining the orthodox people of a certain very religious community.

By these influences he contrived to secure the secretaryship to the Hon. Sherwood Elliston, who, in his efforts to bring about his election to the United States Senate, needed the services of a person possessing certain qualifications, and in his general contempt of the human species he judged Slyme would answer his purpose quite as well as another.

Now, as doubtless the reader understands, Sherwood Elliston was anything but what is called a really good man; hence, familiarity with him was morally, fearfully prejudicial to the secretary. It had, it is true, the effect of stripping off his devout mask, which he seldom put on before his employer, but it terribly increased in venom the depravity which disappointment and wounded pride had secreted in his ulcerated heart.

Of course Mr. Elliston never took the trouble to demoralize his secretary; but contact, intimacy and example sufficed to do this.

A secretary is always more or less a confidant. He divines that which is not revealed to him, and Slyme could not be long in discovering that his employer's success in life did not arise, in morals, from too much principle—in politics, from excess of conviction—in business, from a mania for scruples!

Mormon Money.

If you go into the principal office of the tithing house, you will see a young man handling what looks like money. He is behind a counter, and the counter is protected by a high railing. The man glances through the window, then looks down at the bills, and then goes on thumbing them like a bank teller. He goes to and from a big safe, carrying bundles done up just as bills are, with little bands of brown paper pinned about them.

Sometimes the young man doesn't stop to count, but takes the amount on the brown slip as correct and passes out the money. It is the tithing scrip. It is used to facilitate the handling of the grain and hay and live stock and produce which come in. If you pick up one of these you will find it very much like a bank note in appearance. In one upper corner is the number of the bill. In the lower left hand corner is the hoc signo of Mormonism, a beehive.

The face of the bill reads: "General tithing store house. Good only for merchandise and produce at the general tithing store house, Salt Lake City, Utah." Each note bears the signature of the presiding Bishop. On the back is the denomination again, and a vignette of the new temple at Salt Lake City. The back also bears the wording: "This note is not current except in the merchandise and produce departments of the general tithing store house." The engraving is well executed, and the printing is well done. The bills vary in color.

There are greenbacks for one department of the tithing house, brownbacks for another, and so on. By using this scrip the church is able to create a market for considerable quantities of the tithing. This scrip is given out in dispensing charity. It is used for paying for work on the temple so far as the workmen can make use of it. Employes of the tithing house receive their salaries or allowances partly in scrip. In numerous ways the Mormon money gets into circulation.—St Louis Globe-Democrat.

TARIFF reform is taking hold even in rock-ribbed Philadelphia. Monster meetings of business men have been held three lately, all opposing the McKinley tariff increase.

ABOUT one-third of Harrison's administration is now gone and not a single law of importance to the people has been passed though every department is fully in republican hands.

GIFT-GIVING has begun at Washington under Harrison's administration. Since the days of Grant, this has been mostly a lost art, but now we find Wanamaker giving Harrison a $20,000 cottage by the sea, and another set of friends have given a fine set of furniture for it. The Harrisons take all that comes handy.

To SHOW how absurd is the talk of "protecting American labor," by keeping up a tariff on coal or iron, just look at the census taken in the Pennsylvania mining regions. The laborers are nearly all foreigners, and so low in the scale that few know their own names. They are merely numbered by the bosses, and the census men are having a hard time finding what name goes with the number.

The Republican Convention.

The faithful gathered slowly, though a few of the bosses had reached the ground the day before. By ten o'clock the public square looked animated, and lively. Soon the Garrett band came up the street, and added music to the other attractions. The meeting had been called for 10 a. m. but it was 11 before they went to the Opera House. There they were rapped to order by Chairman Chiesman, and the call read by Editor Campbell, who was at once sat on by the noisy crowd, because his voice was not sufficiently thunderous to force them to hear, while all were talking. This happened many times before the meeting closed. Each time, he would patiently pitch his pipe a little higher, but the people had been accustomed to a higher grade of lung power, and were not very well satisfied to the close. On motion of Mr. Forkner, Chas. Emanuel was made chairman. He thanked them briefly, but managed to get in a few old jokes about the "grand old party," and then Editor Campbell was made permanent secretary, with the other republican editors as assistants. None of them however, put in an appearance except Bro. Smith of the Record. We presume Bro. Willis was out in the grove somewhere, studying over the Dispatch's list of delegates, especially the line at the bottom, which reads "The leading republican paper in DeKalb county." The meeting here adjourned till 1 p. m. on motion of J. A. Provines who said "we could meet at that hour and finish the job." This rather complimentary remark did not prevent them from hurrying from the hall after a session of less than ten minutes.

AFTERNOON.

At 1:30 the nominations having been settled by the leaders, the delegates were kindly permitted to come to order, so they might ratify what had been done. There was a painful pause, when the chairman shouted "What next?" Finally Pinchin moved we now proceed to name candidates, carried. R. M. Lockhart got up and spoke for Charles Burkhart, the blind boy, from Waterloo, who had been a candidate for representative up till dinner time. As it had been decided that Burkhart should not this be paid for the little high tax speeches he had made two years ago, Mr. L. proceeded to withdraw his name and named John Buchanan, of Fairfield. Sullivan, of Garrett, and Mike Long, of Butler, moved to give it to Buchanan by acclamation. Carried. For Clerk, J. D. Leighty named Hugh Culbertson and Forkner seconded. Bicknell, of Garrett, named George W. Lackey, of that place. Dr. Darby, of Waterloo, named J. G. Johnson, of that place, making quite a speech. Doc. evidently did not know that Jesse was not on the slate, for he made quite a speech intimating that democrats had snubbed Waterloo. Dr. Broughton seconded. Then Dr. Carpender, of Butler, named H. J. Crooks for Auditor. Jackman, of Franklin, named Milton Jones, and some one we could not see named James Provines, of Jackson. L. A. Henning, of Smithfield, was named for Sheriff. Sheldon Hines, of Grant, was named for Treasurer, and Mr. Penfield arose and said they had made a mistake four years ago in not nominating all by acclamation instead of a part, and moved that Henning go in by acclamation. Carried. Robert Arford, of Stafford, named Stewart Wartenbe, of that township, for Treasurer. For Recorder, O. H. Taylor named Ezra Lotzenheiser, of Franklin. Penfield said that "by request" he would name Geo. M. Crane, of Grant. F. J. Yesbera named Sol. Shearer, of Union For Surveyor, Byron Cosper named Philip Carper. Robert Arford, of Stafford, named I. M. Diehl, of same township. Forkner named C. P. Houser, of Jackson. For Coronor, Dr. A. N. Coates and Dr. Watson were named. Here Ambrose Kennedy, chairman of the Smithfield delegation, called to know "how many" had been named for this place. Assured that only two had offered themselves as living sacrifices to sit on the dead, he subsided, and the confusion started up again. Mr. Penfield wanted Lyman Lockwood for commissioner of the southwest district, and he went on by acclamation. Hanes, of Wilmington, named J. W. Platter for renomination in the southeast district. Levi Denison, of Grant, was also named. Here McDougal, of Auburn, by permission, named B. L. Williams for surveyor. H. C. Shull was also named for surveyor, way along later, after Shearer had been nominated, Lockhart saying he had been requested to do so. Lockhart also named J. H. Elson, of Fairfield, for recorder. Here Penfield arose and said he had been requested to withdraw the name of Geo. M. Crane as a candidate for recorder. The voting now began amid considerable confusion, mingled with cries of "Louder," "We can't hear a thing," etc.

THE BALLOTING.

The interest in the work at once increased when the balloting began, for there were several who wanted the empty honors.

CLERK.—First Ballot.

Culbertson	112
Lackey	87
Johnson	91
Total	290
Necessary to a choice	146

Second Ballot.

Culbertson	123
Lackey	85
Johnson	82

Third Ballot.

Culbertson	125
Lackey	108

(Here Johnson withdrew.)

Fourth Ballot.

Culbertson	142
Lackey	148

Culbertson in a nice speech moved to make Lackey's nomination unanimous. This was seconded by Johnson in an equally fine little talk, and Lackey was declared nominated. He got up and thanked them.

AUDITOR.

Crooks	164⅔
Jones	51⅓
Provines	74

Provines moved to make it unanimous, and Crooks came forward and thanked the convention, saying he would do his best to get there.

TREASURER.

Hines	212
Wartenbe	78

Wartenbe said he had done well for starting at the 11th hour, and moved to make it unanimous. Hines spoke his thanks.

RECORDER.—First Ballot.

Lotzenheiser	47
Shearer	130
Elson	113

(This vote was called over to let the secretary correct some mistakes he had made. Lotzenheiser withdrew.)

Second Ballot.

Shearer	157
Elson	133

Shearer thanked the delegates, briefly saying he was no speaker.

SURVEYOR.

Several names were added to the list, without any apparent reason, making five in all.

First Ballot.

Carper	67
Diehl	117
Houser	14
Williams	55
Shull	37

(Here Carper, though next to the highest, withdrew. Houser also withdrew.)

Second Ballot.

Diehl	206
Williams	47
Shull	37

Diehl was called, and thanking them, said he would work to get the office. He was about to be declared nominated, when Henning suddenly broke into the delegate enclosure and demanded recognition. He got it, and proceeded to make quite a flowery speech, telling how well he had done for a canvass of but one week, and what a great honor it was. He closed by saying he would do his best to be called Eli.

CORONER.—First Ballot.

Coates	149
Watson	141

Coates was urged to the front, and made a brief speech to the effect that he felt honored and would try to work himself into votes enough so he could sit on DeKalb's "accidentally killed" for the next two years.

The only remaining office to be balloted for was commissioner of the southeast district. Levi Denison had been urged to make the race, with the understanding that Mr. Platter would not again be a candidate. Now, however, as he saw Mr. Platter had been announced, he arose and withdrew his name, and asked to have Platter's claims made unanimous. This was done, and Platter thanked the convention in a brief speech.

On motion, the convention was adjourned.

NOTES.

The Opera House contained a great many democrats, who came, as they said, "to see how the cat jumped."

On the stage were several prominent democrats, including chairman Ab. Kelley and Will Francis, of Waterloo. Dell. Locke, the popular proprietor of the Locke Hotel, was also helping his republican brethren to keep tally, and saved them from a number of mistakes.

It was laughable to see men entering on a hopeless race for office, tickled half to pieces at their good luck in getting a nomination. But as far as we are acquainted with them, they are a fair sort of fellows, and mostly honest men. Their greatest fault is that they are found in bad company.

The convention lasted just ten minutes at the forenoon session, and many asked:

"If this so soon is done for,
"Pray what was it begun for?"

Well, the fact is, the nominations had not all been settled by the bosses. They finish this work usually at the dinner hour So the slate was changed at noon.

Doc. Coates is probably the only man on the ticket who will be elected. Everybody can see how handy it will be to have a coroner who can tickle a corpse with an electric vibrator and find out what killed him. And thus will Doc. be paid for all the campaign songs he has sung. But then, where will those who had to listen to 'em get their revenge? We give it up.

"Now, by my halidome," murmured a delegate in hearing of a COURIER reporter, "Aint this a Diehl of a ticket? Here we have put on our Coates to help our Shearer to fleece the Crooks, till we can make a Diehl with our Lackey to clear the Platter for the coming campaign." Here he fainted and had to be brought to by a vigorous use of the Rickel & Sprott fans, so generously furnished for the occasion.

It was a risky, but characteristically cheeky thing to do, do nominate I. M. Diehl for an office after the prominent part he has taken in the Arford vote buying business. It was especially suggestive too, that he was announced by Arford, senior, himself. Is it a plan to tickle Diehl and so keep his mouth shut, or is it a plan to pay him for services done the "great moral party" in the Arford trouble? But the thoughtful will be apt to ask: "If Diehl assisted in the Arford business, as many believe, will the more moral of our voters sustain him?"

They were a wonderfully windy set, and talked themselves nearly to death, in spite of chairman Emanuel's frequent and vigorous use of the gavel. Many of the delegates were so impressed with the importance of their position that they resented any interference by the chairman that tended to lower their dignity or lessen the pleasures of their animated conversation. They hurled back at the secretary everything in his reports of ballotings that did not happen to suit them. In short, the chairman and secretary lost caste with the delegates in the first hour of the convention.

Several harvesting machines were exhibited at the public square, while the regular machine was exhibited in the Opera House. Great is the machine business. Those delegates who were not allowed to help work the machine, put in the time admiring Lockwood's stallions. They decided that a man with ten imported stallions would be a better commissioner than Patterson, who is utterly without this valuable qualification. So they nominated Lockwood unanimously for commissioner of the southwest district. Then each went home with a big horse photo in his right hand pocket, nearest his heart.

Jim Sherlock came early onto the stage and quietly announced to chairman Emanuel that, since he had concluded to be a republican, he wanted to present the oldest republican in the convention a cane made out of the old jail, and left the cane with Emanuel. The latter forgot all about it till the convention had adjourned. Several persons remaining, supposing the cane was a present to the convention and recognizing the chair as about all there was left of that body, the editor of the COURIER made a motion that it be presented to Emanuel. This was seconded. The presentation speech was made by Mr. Smith, our popular marble man, and Mr. Emanuel walked off with the cane.

Those who got left feel somewhat sore, and swear a little. They say the bosses did it. Recorder Crane was especially bitter on the way he was treated. It had been expected that John Buchanan would run for treasurer, and then Grant would be an open field for Crane, giving him a chance with Lotzenheiser. But at dinner time, the bosses pulled Buchanan off and made him run for representative. This nominated Hine in Grant and forced Crane to withdraw his name. It did look a little shabby. If Davis and his friends had any gratitude they would remember the man who went down and converted Platter and brought him to town, and got his vote for Davis after it had been promised to McIntosh. But there seems to be no honesty in politics.

The funniest thing happened in the big, unwieldy Wilmington delegation. Dr. Carpender, Dan. Diehl and J. H. Rose would take up the hatful of votes, and then come to the front of the stage and count them. Once, they found three votes lacking—52 instead of 55. They were puzzled. While Doc. staid in front and scratched his head, Rose and Diehl went back among the delegates and counted them over. Still three were missing. Then a bright idea struck Diehl. His face lighted up. He pushed Rose's head over till he could whisper into his ear. Rose's face lighted up. He whispered to Diehl. They formed a dramatic tableau. Came up and joined Doc. It was now a tableau of three. They had found the missing three votes. It was themselves, Diehl, Rose and Carpender, the tellers, who had forgotten to vote and had been hunting all over for themselves. The curtain fell.

He is a Fraud.

The Editor of the "Freeman," a paper for colored people, published at Indianapolis writes to advise us of a fraud that may interest our people. He says: "There is a young colored man in your part of the state taking subscriptions for "The Freeman," and claiming to represent this paper. He has a very dark skin, and goes by the name of L. A. Simpson. We wish to state that he is a fraud, and that he is getting money and subscriptions under false pretense, and you will oblige us by giving notice of the same.

Yours very truly,
E. S. Cooper.

FOURTH OF JULY.

Auburn will celebrate the Day in Her Usual Glorious Style.

It is Auburn's turn this year. It has been four years since we celebrated the Fourth, and we believe all the other towns concede that now is our proper time. With this fact in view, the COURIER has mentioned the matter in a brief way, several times this season, and now we come to the front with a formal announcement. The first steps have been taken. Last Friday evening a number of our business men met at the Hollister House to talk the thing up. J. C. Henry was made president and W. B. Campbell, vice-president. After discussing the matter fully, the celebration was fully settled. C. C. Shaffer and Howard McCord were made a committee to canvass for funds, and W. B. Campbell of the Dispatch, and J. F. Kline of the COURIER, were made a committee to get out some dodgers to circulate in town the next day, while the republican convention was present. J. C. Henry gave free use of the Opera House for a meeting Monday evening to further perfect arrangements. The meeting then adjourned to meet at that time and place. At the meeting at the Opera House Monday evening it was fully decided to go on and celebrate. Committees were appointed to complete all necessary arrangements. Master Alphie Carpenter is news agent in Waterloo for the Toledo Bee. All orders will be promptly attended to. Alphie is as regular as the sun, an excellent business qualification.

J. G. Johnson, notwithstanding the fact that the bosses sold him out at the convention, goes right on cheerfully giving good bargains in beautiful goods. Let all his friends step in and see.

Children's day was observed in the M. E. church last Sunday evening. Next Sunday Children's day will be observed in the Presbyterian church. In the evening Rev. Sawyers will preach to the children.

In Waterloo the regret is universal that Rev. Sawyers is expected to sever his connection with the Presbyterian church here. This feeling is not alone in the church but quite general throughout the town. Mr. Swayers has accomplished much good here, indeed, done a great work, and his place will not easily be filled.

John Leas has sold to the town board of councilmen, three acres of gravel, that all of our streets may be graveled. This will give us fine streets, which is desirable, certainly. It is to be hoped the cinder walks may be covered with sand also, for although sand walks would not seem to satisfy the tastes and wants of such an aspiring people as this, yet they are a notch above cinder walks.

Every year there seems to be some new pest in the way of insects, bugs etc. For a year or two snails or slugs have put in an appearance this year are so numerous as to do much mischief, eating lettuce, the leaves of beans, young seedlings, and burrowing into the largest and finest strawberries. Sometimes one is found completely honeycombed, and others are occupied by large families of slugs. Moles also, are becoming a great annoyance.

Burglars are about. Last Thursday night two or more men attempted breaking into the residence of P. Fisher, and J. Ingersol. They had nearly effected an entrance into the house of Mr. F. when the family were aroused and gave the alarm, the neighbors came, and the theives vanished. The following night, they made a similar attempt on S. Beck's house, and F. E. Farr's, but were driven from both. At John Haines, they carried off a coat, and pair of pants, with several dollars in the pockets, and no one in the house knew of the visit until the owner of the pants looked for them the next morning.

Reunion.

Jacob Kandel and his estimable wife could have had no better time for a family reunion than last Saturday. It was a bright and sunny day and nice to congregate under the shady trees of which their yard has a good supply. But the greatest pleasure for them was found in the presence of all their children who were once more assembled under the old parental roof which has not occurred for many years. In the order of their ages they were: Katherine Grogg, J. P. Kandel, P. G. Kandel, of Butler, E. S. Kandel and Anna Shull of Osnaburg, Ohio, and their husbands and wives were John Grogg, Mrs. Maggie S. Kandel, Mrs. Addie Kandel, Mrs. Cora Kandel and David Shull. Of grandchildren present were two daughters of John Grogg and a son of E. S Kandel. Mr. and Mrs. Henry Shull. were also among the guests. It was a most enjoyable gathering and was supplemented by a grand dinner which Mrs. Kandel knows how to prepare, and can be better enjoyed than described and to which they all did justice. After which they spent a few hours in friendly converse and wandering over the old home grounds, which is a great pleasure to every child and which they all greatly enjoyed. At about half past three they all betook themselves to Rice's gallery and had a negative taken of the family group, when they separated and went to their respective homes. It was a day that will be long remembered by every one present, and it may be that they will never meet again as they were then. But we hope that Mr. and Mrs. Kandel may have many more such reunions in their advancing age when it is the greatest joy for them to have all at home.

These remedies have won their great popularity purely on their merits. Robbins & McCord, Druggists. 1

The Western Union is running a new line of poles from the Junction up town to the public square, and putting up the wires. They will have an uptown office in the small room south of the square, which will be used for commercial purposes, leaving the office at the Wabash station at the foot of Main street, and the offices at the Junction, with nothing to do but railroad work proper. This will be better all around, for our people have often found it inconvenient to go so far to send a message, and the Postal, the only uptown office we have had, is not able to reach all the points we need. Auburn is fast becoming a city.

It don't cost much to get an armful. There are hundreds of household articles needed in every family, that can be had for a trifle. Go and see.

J. H. Hoffman, was last week appointed postmaster at Ligonier, and this has made a majority of the faithful fighting mad. Not but Hoffman is a good man, but because he was appointed by the Harrison-Michener machine at Indianapolis. Then, too, the republicans at Ligonier had held an election and Dr. Eli Schlotterback had got a majority, leaving several competitors in the soup. His claims, were however, ignored and the faithful are now aching for Ben. Harrison's scalp.

The business men of the "south end" have a novel way of settling the dust, cleaning floors and innumerable other things in which water is the prime factor. They have gone together bodily, and secured a hundred and fifty feet of hose which if fastened to one of the many force pumps located there will carry the water about two hundred feet. Though this novel scheme for sprinkling the street will dispense somewhat with the "water wagon," yet it is a thing to be encouraged.

Many of Auburn's young people will read with interest this announcement of the marriage of Miss Carrie Smith, a niece of the editor of this paper. She was married June 12, to R. W. Wright, a well-to-do business young man of South Chicago. They will make that city their home. Miss Smith has been a teacher, beginning in this county some years ago, and has been very successful. For some years she has had a position in the schools of South Chicago, where her year recently closed. She was a young lady who made many friends wherever she came, and all will join with the COURIER in congratulations and good wishes for the young people.

Spring Fountain Park near Warsaw will be the center of attraction for excursions, meetings, etc, this year. Besides the usual attractions of a beautiful summer resort, and being the place of the finest stock fair in the state, they will this year start an "Assembly" similar to that at Rome City. They have arranged a full program of addresses, speeches, classes, sermons, music, training schools, etc., etc. Among the attractions for students, we note a "school of Pedagogy," and a "School of Philosophy," both in charge of Prof. T. J. Sanders; a "School of Stenography and Typewriting," by McDermut & Whiteleather of Ft. Wayne; "Wit and Wisdom of the Crayon," by Prof. W. M. R. French, well known to our teachers. Then there is the great panorama "Siege of Chattanooga," which occupies a large building and belongs to the grounds. They have steamboats, row boats, beautiful flower gardens, living fountains, a splendid hotel and every thing to make visits there pleasant and profitable. The regular session of the Assembly begins July 28. For information and catalogues write to the secretary, J. E. Beyer, Warsaw, Ind.

Friday is not such a very unlucky day after all, for it was last Friday that G. S. McCord brought us such a fine mess of Sharpless strawberries. They were the nicest and largest we have seen this year.

Ex-Commissioner Edward Kelham, of Keyser, was in town Saturday. It is a pleasure to find a farmer as well posted on the tariff question as he is. There is no use trying to talk "protection of farmers" to him.

Will Fisher and Capt. Edge, of Waterloo, were here Saturday, not as delegates however. They say they prefer fast horses just now, each having a nag that will show the boys something when the time comes.

The Royal base ball club of this place, formerly the Maroons, have reorganized and are getting new suits. J. C. Day, has been somewhat annoyed by the report that he had been caught up for being drunk. Mr. Day is not that kind of a man, as his life in Auburn for many years will prove. The facts are, another painter, whose name we have not learned, was locked up. Hence the story.

Denison, the ice dealer is now getting his stock from parties in Chicago. The ice was cut in Wisconsin and is very nice His thin ice put up at home is all gone, and we suppose the foreign ice will come higher as he has to pay high for it. But he will put it at the lowest possible figure that will let him out without loss.

Miami county, where W. W. Robbins was lately renominated to the legislature, has put the new election law to practical use. The democratic candidates were selected by a primary election, held under the Australian plan. This was done, not only because it was fair, but they wanted to learn how it was done. They are eminently pleased with its workings.

We call your attention to the advertisement of Simmons Liver Regulator, which appears in the paper of to-day. This standard remedy, the only genuine of which is manufactured by J. H. Zeilin & Co., and of which they are the sole proprietors, does not deserve to be classed with the many "patent" nostrums so liberally advertised throughout the country. It is one of the very best preparations in use, and is recommended by the regular practitioners of medicine. It has a large sale in this city, and can be found in all our drug stores. A bottle or package should be found in every family, as its judicious use is almost sure to prevent a bilious attack if taken when the symptons first show themselves.

M. P. Barker, of Smithfield had a surprise perpetrated on him last week on Wednesday, June 11. He was fifty years old that day, and here they came, from every quarter, and took him by storm. Among the other rude things they did with the 'Squire was to seat him in a big chair which they forgot to take with them when they went away. But he took it all in good part. Among the relatives at Auburn, who attended were Mrs. W. H. Dirrim and her three daughters, Mrs. Edge, Mrs. Quince and Mrs. Long, as well as Morris Dirrim's wife. All say they had a good time. Rev. M. Rhetts of the M. E. Church was present and made the presentation speech. Then all sat down to a big supper which all enjoyed heartily.

W. W. Robbins, well known here as one of the old DeKalb boys, was last week honored by a re-nomination for representative from Miami county. He served his people satisfactorily during the important session of two years ago, and will doubtless be again sent down there this winter. We met him while he was there, when the work was pretty hot, and found him right at work in the foremost line, never shirking for a moment from his duty to his county and his party. His fellow members held him in high regard, and he counted as one above the average. The democracy of old Miami will do themselves and the state a good turn by sending him with an increased majority. The Peru Sentinel speaks highly of him, and we especially commend its last words when speaking of the heated canvass for nominations. "He resorted to no questionable methods to secure the nomination." That speaks for itself.

Mr. Davis president of the fair at this place says the race track on the ground is finished and in fine shape. Everybody is welcome to go out and drive on it unless when the ground is too wet. We look to see our horsemen put in a great many of these pleasant evenings over there.

The board of equalization has been in session this week. They are the three commissioners, Patterson, Platter and Heffelder, and the four men appointed by the Judge, namely, J. C. Henry, A. M. St. Clair Alex Provines, sr. and C. J. Coats. Mr. Henry is chairman, and they have been kept busy hearing and fixing up things.

Read the anti-fire cracker ordinance that we publish to day. It will be seen that we have an ordinance against this dangerous practice, or at least one that restricts the fire cracker business. The town board looked the matter up Monday evening and decided to enforce the ordinance. It will be seen we have had this rule on our books nearly sixteen years.

NEW MILLINERY: For fine goods and low prices go to the new millinery store at Corunna, where will be found a full line of goods, which will be sold very cheap, to close them out, as the season is nearly over. We still have a good supply of trimmed and untrimmed hats and bonnets. Ladies who have not yet purchased are kindly invited to call and examine our goods, and be convinced.

Miss F. A. Husselman.
Corunna, Ind.

Hank Little, editor of the Garrett Windjammer was on another prolonged "zing zang" last week. He objects to having us call it plain drunk. As he went through the court house calling out the officers to beg for a quarter, he was a perfect study in beer; as he explained his great "floo" to a candidate in the unoccupied clerk's room, and insisted that he "knew all how it was done 'er," he was a lovely poem in whisky; as he wiggled over town for three days, with a basket on his arm in the belief that he was sent to buy something, he was what might be called a lovely landscape—with no water in it.

A SUBSCRIPTION has been opened at Hamburg to purchase two estates bordering Friedricharuhe, as a present to Prince Bismarck.

A CINCINNATI woman, enraged at her husband, determined to ruin him financially. She shopped all day and piled up bills to his account to the amount of $3,000.

A FOOLISH individual is advertising for a batch of absolutely fresh and original jokes. He has not found out that there are no new jokes? The sprightliest flashes of current humor can all be traced back to Aristophanes, or some other good old Greek litterateur.

THE King of Dahomey had for years believed that one of his warriors could whip seven white men. When one Frenchman began to lick nine of his fighters the King slowly realized that he was "off," and he also "offed" the heads of several of his generals for consolation.

SOME missionaries in Africa are greatly troubled by the fact that the natives are not at all eager to adopt the dress of the white men. Not even the converts are willing to wear the amount of clothing which, according to missionary ideas, is essential to respectability.

IT is an interesting fact that in Colombia, where potatoes form the chief food of the people, and where potato diseases run riot very often, the greater the altitude at which the vegetable is grown the less is it liable to the disease, and at 9,000 feet above the sea it grows in a perfectly healthy state.

THIS is a fickle world. When Victor Hugo died thousands upon thousands of crowns were thrown upon his burial place. A subscription for a monument was started, which reached $22,000, and there it stopped. Victor Hugo's works are no longer in demand, and the monument, which it was supposed will cost $40,000, waits the turn of popular adoration for the great poet to reach completion.

THE canine sentinels now being trained in Northern France learn their duties quickly. Two soldiers start off leading a dog by his collar, and when a mile from the starting point one of the men turns back. In a short time the dog is let loose and he immediately tracks the other soldier back to the post, rarely failing. Dogs will scent an enemy at a distance of 100 yards, growling and sniffing to attract attention.

IN gratitude for their deliverance from the perils of the voyage in the Inman liner City of Paris, the passengers, before landing subscribed £600 as a thank offering and appointed a committee to decide upon its application. It is understood that the committee have decided to hand over £400 to the Seamen's Hospital, Liverpool, for its general purposes, and to endow with the balance a bed in the same institution for sick American sailors.

THE power of the snake to charm was demonstrated near Litchfield, Conn., the other day. Miss Perkins and her brother went out to gather arbutus and became separated. Miss Perkins says she was bending over to pick flowers and as she tried to rise she saw an adder gazing at her. She tried to run away, but could not, and she was not even able to turn her head. As her brother came up and shot the snake, she was growing dizzy. It was the flathead adder, three feet in length.

AN interesting discovery has been made in Manchester. While looking over some old manuscript music in the shop of Mr. Cornish, the bookseller, Dr. Henry Watson came upon several manuscript copies of works by Mozart, which further examination convinced him to be, for the most part, in the composer's own handwriting. Among the manuscripts found are two concertos written by Mozart when a child, and several numbers from the opera of "Mithridate," composed at Milan in 1770. The latter manuscript is, without doubt, in Mozart's own handwriting.

THERE is no doubt that fish, particularly many of these that inhabit fresh water, feel the cold, and this accounts for their moving in winter to deep water, when they have the opportunity of doing so. Some fish are much more affected than others by cold. Swainson mentions an instance of a number of fine perch having been found dead in a pond after the breaking up of a frost; and, as a proof of vitality in other fish, he states that in northern latitudes eels and perch have retained their vitality when frozen into solid blocks of ice, and that advantage has been taken of the fact to remove them from one locality to another.

THE result of the inquiries recently made as to the sanitary arrangements connected with the trade of baking in England is anything but reassuring. Bakeries are said to exist in Manchester, where the cleanliness which should obtain in the preparation of food is impossible. Some of the bakers complain that the machinery now used takes "the flavor out of the bread." They prefer the old method of "dancing on the dough." One of the commissioners of inquiry naturally expressed a hope that "the men washed their feet," and was cheerfully assured that they did after the bread was made, as otherwise they could not put their boots on again.

THAT country editors are sometimes very busy men is evidenced by the following editorial paragraph from a recent issue of the Waitsburg (Wash.) Times: "When we returned from dinner on Tuesday we found a piece of paper sticking into the keyhole of our office door, on which was written these words: 'Been here twice to subscribe for the Times, but failed to find you in. Send it to me and I will hand you $2 the next time I am in town.' We very much regret being absent when the writer called, but Great Scott! we can't take money all the time. We've got to take time to eat."

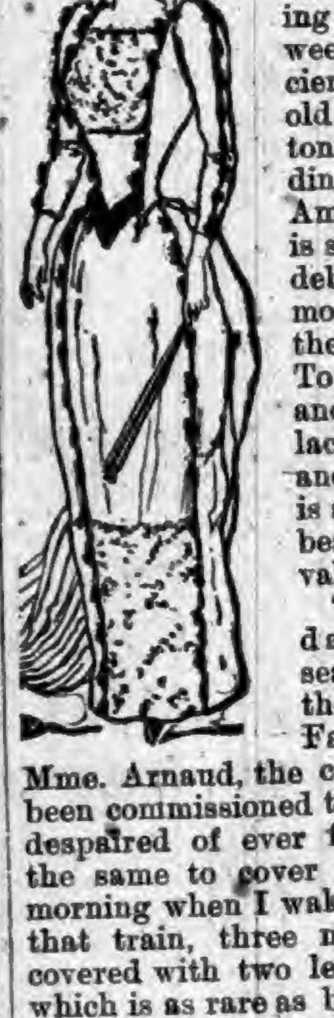
A GOOD story is told of a clever trick, by means of which some Russian Jews have cheated the custom house. Simultaneously at two frontiers a very large case came to each, but was not claimed. After the regulation time had elapsed they were opened and found to be gloves and ordered to be sold at auction according to law. A Jew, on looking at them, cried out they were all right-hand gloves and of no use to any one. Consequently they went for next to nothing and for far less than the tax would have amounted to. Needless to add that the case at the other frontier contained all left-hand gloves, and of course, they were bought by a confederate.

SEVERAL years ago the residence of Cora Pearl in Paris was entered by thieves and robbed of $120,000. One of the robbers was captured and condemned to five years' imprisonment, but the property was not then recovered. On his liberation from prison lately he endeavored to raise a sum from a banker with which he might go to Germany and redeem the stolen property. That had been deposited in a German bank. The banker's suspicions were excited and the man was arrested, and has revealed the name of his accomplice. The great sum may be recovered, but too late to be of any value to Cora Pearl, who died in destitution, after having vainly endeavored to make a little money by publishing her memoirs.

WE have long been accustomed to associate any new development of electric traction with America, but a scheme is on foot in St. Petersburg which, if carried out, will certainly leave America far in the rear. It is proposed to have a railway entirely worked by electricity, connecting St. Petersburg with Archangel and spanning a wide stretch of country between the Baltic and the White Sea. The project is said to be backed by Archangel interests, and the name of Siemens & Co. is connected with the enterprise. The plan is to furnish the current from a series of generating stations distributed along the line. The distance is something over 500 miles, and the estimated cost over £3,000 per mile, including rolling stock. The scheme is certainly a daring one, and while it may never reach accomplishment, its further progress will be awaited with interest by the advocates of electric traction in England.

A DREAM IN LACE AND SATIN.

Description of An American Bride's Wedding Dress.



CURIOSITY shops and collections of antique lace have been ransacked during the past few weeks to find sufficient quantity of rare old Alencon Argenton to adorn the wedding dress of an American bride who is soon to make her debut in the matrimonial world, says the Paris Herald. To match patterns and widths of ancient lace is no easy task, and the fait accompli is a robe of unique beauty and priceless value.

"It took fifteen days of constant searching to match the lace for Miss Fair's dress," said Mme. Arnaud, the couturiere who had been commissioned to the task, "and I despaired of ever finding enough of the same to cover the train. Every morning when I wakened I thought of that train, three metres long, to be covered with two lengths of Alencon, which is as rare as black pearls. The lace is fine, fine, fine!" she added, with French enthusiasm, "and if it goes to the bottom of the sea I can never replace it at any price, for there is no more to be found."

The famous robe is now approaching its destination, insured for nearly 20,000f., which is about half its value, and a duty of 7,500f. has been paid at the New York Custom House. The handkerchief of the Alencon lace alone cost 1,500f. The cream white satin was especially ordered from Lyons at an immense price. The satin hangs straight from the waist in the back, forming a long train covered with the costly lace. The front of the skirt is simply draped and around the bottom is a festooned flounce of lace in Louis XVI. drapery, held by bunches of orange blossoms. The high corsage is held to a point below the waist and has no trimming, but a high stiffened Medicis collar of lace, slightly opened in front to show the throat.

The sleeves are of white satin, large and full at the top, covered from shoulder to wrist with lace. Over all this wealth of satin and lace falls the cloud of white tulle fastened to the crown of the head by a bunch of orange blossoms, arranged and sent with the robes. The tulle veil "poetizes" the whole costume, and the robe is, perhaps, the handsomest and most costly bridal dress made in Paris for many years.

POVERTY PAYS THE TAX

INEVITABLE EFFECTS OF THE M'KINLEY BILL.

Heaviest Duties Laid on Cheapest Goods —A Prohibitory Tax on Some Lines—All Classes of Goods Will Be Higher—Chicago Jobbers Interviewed.

[From the Chicago News, Ind.]

It is the opinion of most of the Chicago wholesale men that the McKinley bill will not seriously reduce the volume of their business, but all agree that the higher tariff will make all classes of good, dearer for the consumer. Especially is this true of woolen and linen fabrics, cutlery, and tin goods. Other lines will feel the effects of the bill in a less degree. But as the chief items of domestic expense are concerned with these heavily taxed goods the evil results of the bill are expected to be sufficient to create no little distress in the humbler class of consumers. That the bill will pass seems to be conceded. More than that, it is anticipated that the bill will be put into effect at the earliest possible date to shut out large importations that may be attempted before the bill becomes a law.

MR. WALKER'S OPINION OF THE BILL.

"The effect of the bill will be to make enormously rich a few already rich manufacturers," said James H. Walker, the wholesale dry goods dealer. "While, doubtless, no discrimination against the poor man was intended, he will most feel the bad effects of the bill. It offers a larger protection to the manufacturers who make articles in imitation of foreign importations and these articles are consumed by the poor people. In every instance the cheaper grade of goods is compelled to pay a higher tariff and in the end the consumer pays it. We will sell as many goods as before, but we'll get more for them. The bill raises the tariff on cheap pearl buttons, none of which are made in this country, from 25 per cent. to 304 per cent. Isn't that robbery? Some manufacturer probably thinks he wants to make these buttons and the bill provides for him. Then there is the case of the linen tariff, familiar to the public in recent discussions. One rich manufacturer only makes linen goods in this country and he only makes $1,000,000 worth a year. He hasn't increased his plant since he began the business. We import $20,000,000 worth of linens and pay $7,000,000 in duties. The McKinley bill makes the duty $12,000,000 a year and makes it operative for fifteen years—$180,000,000 taxes to protect one man. Is anybody legislating to double your salary? I think not, yet that is the effect of this bill for the linen manufacturer.

THE PEOPLE WILL WIPE THE WRONG AWAY.

"No great wrong is ever righted until the burden becomes so oppressive that the people arise and wipe it away. It looks like Providence was driving these men to desperate measures to overwhelm them. Every Congressman who voted for this bill ought to be relegated to obscurity, especially the Western men, who know they do not represent their constituents. What shall we think of a man like Butterworth, who makes a speech pointing out the evils of the bill and then votes for it. The talk about protecting labor is a fallacy. Free labor is the best paid, and protected labor will not secure any increase of wages commensurate with the cost of the articles the laboring man consumes. Here is the instance of 'cut' hose. The imported article is much superior to the American manufacture, which has a heavy seam injurious to the feet of those who wear hose. The McKinley bill will keep the imported article out of the country, and the laboring classes will have to wear the American goods."

TIN-PLATE AND CUTLERY RATES.

Charles D. Seeberger, of A. F. Seeberger & Co., has made a study of the effects of the bill on hardware.

"The worst effects of the bill," said Mr. Seeberger, "will be felt by the consumers of tin goods, cutlery, and guns. The tariff on some classes of these goods is in effect prohibitory. Tin roofing will be increased 15 per cent. in cost. The bill will not make the wages of miners higher because pig tin is free of duty. Tin-plate can't be made satisfactorily in this country, but the imported article is to be kept out by the high rate of duty. It will increase the cost of tin goods and render still less profitable the already unprofitable trade of the tin dealers. The cost of the tin can is already too large a portion of the cost of can products, and this bill will make it larger.

"Only the cheaper grades of pocket cutlery are imported, and the McKinley bill prohibits the importation of these goods. Nobody is benefited except a few American manufacturers. Knives that cost now $36 a gross will cost under the new bill $48 a gross. Five patterns of knives made in this country alone can be manufactured here for $42.98 a gross. These knives, made at Sheffield, England, would cost $46.82, and landed in New York, duty paid, $64.30. The bill may cause some decrease in our sales, but we do not anticipate any serious falling off in our business. The people must have our goods, and they will have to pay more for them."

SENATOR FARWELL'S PARTNER TALKS.

Mr. J. K. Harmon is a member of the firm of J. V. Farwell & Co., of which Charles B. Farwell, one of the Illinois Senators, is a member. Mr. Harmon has made a study of the bill.

"The McKinley bill will raise the prices of all our goods," said Mr. Harmon. "It will raise the prices of woolens and linens more than cottons, but will make everything dearer. This bill lays more specific duties than any other tariff measure, and specific duties always increase the prices on lower grades of goods. The poorer people who buy them will feel the tariff more than the wealthier class."

"Will the laboring people get enough more in wages to compensate for these increased prices?"

"We can't tell what the result of passing the bill will be until we have tried it, but I think the laboring people will not be benefited as much as the manufacturers. The poor will have to buy a poorer grade of goods than they have been buying and pay just as much for them. The rich will have to pay more for what they buy, but proportionately less than the poor, for the tariff will not be as high on the better grade as the lower class goods. I think nearly as many goods will be sold as now are. The people have got to be clothed. In some instances, of course, the poorer people may wear their clothing longer and do with less, but these people are not numerous."

The Case Against Quay.

The New York Evening Post makes its charges against Chairman Quay very specific and seems to court an invitation.

"The Evening Post charges that Mathew S. Quay, United States Senator from Pennsylvania, stole $260,000 from the State Treasury of Pennsylvania, and lost it in gambling; that in his despair he contemplated suicide and made a confidant of 'Chris' Magee, now, as then, a prominent Republican politician of Pittsburg; that he was saved through the intervention of Don Cameron, United States Senator from Pennsylvania, and a Republican, who advanced the necessary money; and that was done through the medium of Wayne MacVeagh, a prominent lawyer of Philadelphia, and ex-Attorney General of the United States under a Republican President. These and other charges against Quay were published in the Evening Post on the 16th of April and have since been printed in pamphlet which is now on sale at our counting room, price 4 cents a copy. Since the foundation of the Federal Government there has never been a case where a public journal brought so serious and so explicit accusations of criminal conduct against a United States Senator—charges which, if false, could easily, immediately and conclusively, be shown to be false by three well known men of his own party—Senator Cameron, ex-Attorney General MacVeagh and 'Chris' Magee."

HOW WE ARE TAXED.

[From the Chicago Herald.]

No tinned plate is at present produced in this country, although block tin, the primary necessity for its production, is admitted free of duty. It is an article that is produced almost exclusively in Wales, where there are ninety-five works, embracing about four hundred mills, devoted to its production. Tinned plate, as now made under the late improved methods, consists of the very best quality Bessemer and Siemens Martin steel, the sheets being cold rolled, pickled and annealed and rolled to twenty-nine and thirty wire gauge, cut to exact size, coated with block tin, polished and packed in oak boxes and delivered free on board the steamer at English shipping ports and for this article the maker at present prices receives less than three cents per pound, boxes included. The same quality of steel sheets, without the cutting to size, coating with tin, packing or boxing, or delivering free on steamer, costs to-day from our American manufacturers, after their more than forty years' experience, four cents per pound or more.

In other words, with inexhaustible stores of every component of tinned plate, with unrivaled facilities for its manufacture, and consuming far more than all the rest of the world combined, we are forced to import all the tin plate used, because our protected manufacturers of iron and steel combine together and charge a cent more per pound for the steel sheets (making 95 per cent. of the bulk) than the finished tinned plate costs in New York duty free. Now they propose to have the Government raise the duty on foreign-made tinned plates, so as first to control the market themselves and then be subsidized $14,000,000 a year for supplying the demand.

As the tariff now stands, a dairyman pays 8 cents more for each "15-quart pail," 4 cents more for each "10-quart pan," and 45 cents more for each "40-quart can" than if there were no tariff, and the price of other articles is, of course, in proportion; while if the McKinley bill should become a law he would have to pay 17 cents more for each pail, 9 cents more for each pan and $1 more for each can than if he were not "protected." On these items each farmer can figure out for himself how much he is directly taxed on the average on the amount of tinware he uses annually in his dairy or for other uses in his house or on his farm. The amount will be more than he at first thinks, since purchases of these articles are frequent; and without carefully adding them up for some definite period, such as a year, or taking a complete inventory outside of the house as well as in it, few will realize how much tin plate they consume.

The tariff on tin thus consumed generally by the dairy farmer is, however, not the only oppressive burden levied upon him by the tinned plate tariff. The articles named are repeatedly used, and the cost of their wear cannot easily be traced to its exact effect upon the price of any one product. But with other articles this can be done. Take the instance of tinned pails used for packing butter for transport and for sale in twenty-five-pound and other packages. They are so much lighter, cheaper, and more convenient than the wooden firkins, tubs, and pails formerly used that they are an absolute necessity, and, whether or not their weight is included in that of the butter paid for, it is certain that the dairy farmer does not get more for his butter on account of the extra cost to him on each package caused by the tariff. Calculating as before, this extra cost is found to be 6 cents on a twenty-five-pound package. That is to say, the dairy farmer's butter would net him on the average 0.25 cents, or 1 per cent. more per pound if tinned plate were free.

Adolph Oehme, an intelligent farmer at Brainard, Neb., has figured up how much tariff taxes have cost him in a year. He has done more or less trading at the village stores, and, of course, has paid protection prices for everything he had to buy. The following is his account for the twelve months:

	Amount tariff on same.
780 pounds sugar	$ 18.72
10 gallons molasses	.49
22 pounds woolen goods	9.90
Dry goods (cost $80)	35.72
10 pounds chocolate, etc	.20
5 pounds mustard	.50
42 pounds rice	.95
8,000 feet lumber	16.00
Machinery (cost $57)	22.80
Salt, 460 pounds	.55
1 barrel lime	.31
2 boxes soap	1.20
Medicine (cost $10)	2.50
Binding twine (cost $8)	3.20
Saddleries, etc. (cost $68)	20.52
Boots and shoes (cost $28.50)	8.55
Total tariff on purchases	$142.02

In this way Mr. Oehme figures out that the tariff compels him to pay each year $142.02 more for goods which he requires than they would cost were the tariff removed. This he calls his "indirect" tax, and by comparing it with the direct tax which he pays his county, city and State he finds this to be the case:

Tariff tax—indirect	$142.02
City, county, and State—direct	76.82
Difference	$55.20

And thus Mr. Oehme figures that he is paying indirectly a tax which is almost twice as large as his direct tax, and his tax is filched from him little by little in the shape of living expenses that make it hard to make both ends meet. Were all the farmers as smart as Mr. Oehme, there would be a speedy end of the protection system.

An importer who has been figuring on crockery ware and the new tariff shows that McKinley asks the American workman to pay $21,600,000 for $8,000,000 worth of crockery. Mr. Butterworth says it will take $50,000,000 or more to put the wet-nursed tin-plate industry on its feet, and that the copper barons have declared sixty millions of dividends on an investment of a million and a quarter. Naturally this is an age of millionaires, but the people who deal in seven-figure fortunes must be further "encouraged."

"Give me free ore," said the President of the Pennsylvania Steel Company a short time since, "and I'll sell pig iron in Liverpool and send steel rails to London. What American industries most want is free opportunity, and not legislative protection nor restriction."

This positive assertion by the President of one of the largest and most successful steel plants in the United States, if not in the world, is much more convincing than are the opinions of high-tariff theorists who are protectionists for party politics only.

To show how badly some of the proposed beneficiaries of the McKinley bill need protection, read this extract from the last report of William Whitman, President of the National Association of Wool Manufacturers, to the stockholders of the Arlington Mills. It is dated March 29, 1889.

"I have been your Treasurer for a consecutive period of twenty years. During this period the average earnings have been 20 8-10 per centum upon the capital. * * * The earnings last year were nearly three and a half times those of the year previous, and there is every indication that the current year will be the most profitable one in the company's history."

Robbing the Agricultural Interests.

Farming and its directly dependent interests have hitherto employed the better half of our population. The incidence of the tariff upon that interest has been unqualifiedly destructive. Under the tariff of the last quarter of a century, the farmer has had to pay largely enhanced prices for all kinds of manufactures and higher wages for the labor he has employed, while protection has failed to compensate him for this oppressive taxation by putting up the price of his products. In the whole history of tariffs the world over, there has been no match for this inequity, either as to its degree or the extent of population it covers. For the quarter or a century during which this iniquitous discrimination has been in operation, it is no exaggeration to say that the tariff has most literally robbed the agricultural interest of thousands of millions of earnings which ought to have made that interest the most prosperous of the kind in the world; instead of which it now stands on the verge of bankruptcy, and principally owing to this cause. After long and patient endurance, the farmers are coming to understand what is the chief cause of the mortgaged condition of their farms, and of the starvation results of farming.—New York Commercial Bulletin.

Decline of Farming.

The farming interest is the great foundation interest of our country, and though it is that on which we most depend, and which of all others ought to have "protection," it is that which is being gradually taxed to death by our "tariff," not for the sake of raising the necessary expense of the government, but to put money into the pockets of those engaged in other interests and to roll up immense sums in the national treasury which are but a temptation to politicians and which lead to a thousand needless, if not injurious, expenditures.

During the ten years from 1850 to 1860 the increase of value of our farms was $3,373,000,000, or over 10 per cent. yearly; while for the twenty years from 1860 to 1880 it was only $3,374,000,000, or about 2½ per cent. yearly. In New England, farming, as a business, is well nigh a thing of the past; and even in Pennsylvania—Lancaster County, which used to be called the "Garden of the State"—farming does not pay, and farms are selling for less than half what they did thirty years ago. Illinois was formerly one of the profitable farming States; but only last month, when at the annual meeting of the Swedish Lutheran Church, at Rockford, a resolution was proposed thanking God for the general prosperity of the last year, it was defeated by the farmer delegates, who denied that there had been any prosperity to the farming interests of the State.

Prosperity there is in the country—prosperity to manufacturers, and mining, and railroads, and capitalists, but the crease of wealth is at the expense of the farming interests, which, under our tariffs, are taxed 40, 50 and 60 per cent. on the very articles needful for their families, or for conducting the business of farming, while many of the large moneyed interests of the land are taxed only some 10 or 12 per cent., thus widening the space between labor and capital, making the rich richer, and the poor poorer, and so gradually undermining the very foundation of our permanent prosperity as a nation.

If the farmers do not wake up to these facts and make themselves felt by their votes—if they do not sustain that party, whichever it may be, that will modify these tariff exactions, and equalize the taxes that are now so burdensome to themselves, they will suffer for their indifference to their own interests and can hardly expect the sympathy of those who would gladly rejoice in their prosperity.—Detroit Free Press.

Enormously Enhanced Duties on Cutlery.

Here is a protest from the St. Louis dealers in cutlery which shows how the price of various necessaries in that line are to go up under the influence of the McKinley tariff:

On pocket-knives, 100 per cent. ad valorem, instead of 50 per cent., as now.

On razors, 75 per cent. ad valorem, instead of 50 per cent. as now.

On carving and cooks' knives, 70 per cent. ad valorem, instead of 35 per cent. as now.

On table cutlery, 50 per cent. ad valorem, instead of 35 per cent. as now.

On butcher-knives, 55 per cent. ad valorem, instead of 35 per cent. as now.

On scissors and shears, 45 per cent. ad valorem, instead of 35 per cent. as now.

The heaviest burden in each case is put on the cheapest goods.

On pocket-knives the duty runs as high as 132 per cent.

On razors the duty runs as high as 100 per cent.

On carving-knives the duty runs as high as 99 per cent.

On table cutlery the duty runs as high as 70 per cent.

On butcher-knives the duty runs as high as 65 per cent.

These rates, say the dealers, are in nearly all cases prohibitory, and would, if enacted, shut out grades and patterns not made in this country, and which are largely bought by working people. They further say that "there is no good reason for the advance, and it is evidently made with the intention of benefiting a comparatively small class of the manufacturers, to the disadvantage of the toiling masses." As a matter of fact, the entire bill seems to have been shaped upon that policy. It is purely a class measure, and if made law will itself make the cost of living higher in the United States than in any other country on the face of the earth, although there is no other half so rich in natural wealth or in the variety of the necessaries of life.

The Greatest Curse.

The greatest curse that has ever afflicted this land, slavery not excepted, has been the "protective system." But for that, instead of having our industries confined to cities, driven by machinery attended by serfs, and owned by purse-proud monopolists, we should have had small industries scattered all over the land, with machinery used as an adjunct to hand labor and not its dominant power.—Ypsilanti Sentinel.

Great Railroad Corporations.

The Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railroad has a mileage of 7,530 miles; the Pennsylvania Company the same amount; the Missouri Pacific 7,115 miles; the Chicago and Northwestern, 7,082 miles; the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy, 6,490 miles; Southern Pacific, 5,930 miles; the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul, 5,680 miles; the Canadian Pacific, 4,960 miles. The tendency of railways is to consolidation, and within a few years half a dozen great corporations will control two-thirds of the railway mileage of the country. We believe the public are reaping the most substantial benefits from these consolidations. They are far better and more cheaply served than when hundreds of companies were trying to do the work done now by a few trunk lines. When, as in 1889, railroads can carry a ton of freight 1,100 miles for every man, woman and child of our population at considerably less than a cent per mile, it can readily be seen that we are having an enormous amount of work done for us at a cost which seems only nominal.

A CORRESPONDENT of the Engineering and Building Record thinks that rats gnaw lead water pipe to sharpen their teeth, and not for the purpose of making a hole through which to pass, or to get water. Hereafter plumbers may consider these rodents as valuable assistants, and possibly charge for their time.

NERVOUS DISEASES.

As a cure for every class of Nervous Diseases, no remedy has been able to compare with the Nervine Tonic, which is very pleasant and harmless in all its effects upon the youngest child or the oldest and most delicate individual. Nine-tenths of all the ailments to which the human family is heir, are dependent on nervous exhaustion and impaired digestion. When there is an insufficient supply of nerve food in the blood, a general state of debility of the brain, spinal marrow and nerves is the result. Starved nerves, like starved muscles, become strong when the right kind of food is supplied, and a thousand weaknesses and ailments disappear as the nerves recover. As the nervous system must supply all the power by which the vital forces of the body are carried on, it is the first to suffer for want of perfect nutrition. Ordinary food does not contain a sufficient quantity of the kind of nutriment necessary to repair the wear our present mode of living and labor imposes upon the nerves. For this reason it becomes necessary that a nerve food be supplied. This recent production of the South American Continent has been found, by analysis, to contain the essential elements out of which nerve tissue is formed. This accounts for its magic power to cure all forms of nervous derangements.

CRAWFORDSVILLE, IND., Aug. 20, '86.
To the Great South American Medicine Co.:
DEAR GENTS:—I desire to say to you that I have suffered for many years with a very serious disease of the stomach and nerves. I tried every medicine I could hear of but nothing done me any appreciable good until I was advised to try your Great South American Nervine Tonic and Stomach and Liver Cure, and since using several bottles of it I must say that I am surprised at its wonderful powers to cure the stomach and general nervous system. If every-one knew the value of this remedy as I do, you would not be able to supply the demand.
J. A. HARDEE,
Ex-Treas. Montgomery Co.

Mr. Solomon Bond, a member of the Society of Friends, of Darlington, Ind., says: "I have used twelve bottles of The Great South American Nervine Tonic and Stomach and Liver Cure, and I consider that every bottle did for me one hundred dollars worth of good, because I have not had a good night's sleep for twenty years on account of irritation, pain, horrible dreams, and general nervous prostration, which has been caused by chronic indigestion and dyspepsia of the stomach and by a broken down condition of my nervous system. But now I can lie down and sleep all night as sweetly as a baby, and I feel like a sound man. I do not think there has ever been a medicine introduced into this country which will at all compare with this Nervine Tonic as a cure for the stomach."

A SWORN CURE FOR ST. VITUS'S DANCE OR CHOREA.

CRAWFORDSVILLE, IND., May 19, 1886.
My daughter, twelve years old, had been afflicted for several months with Chorea or St. Vitus's Dance. She was reduced to a skeleton, could not walk, could not talk, could not swallow anything but milk. I had to handle her like an infant. Doctor and neighbors gave her up. I commenced giving her the South American Nervine Tonic; the effects were very surprising. In three days she was rid of the nervousness, and rapidly improved. Four bottles cured her completely. I think the South American Nervine the grandest remedy ever discovered, and would recommend it to every-one.

My daughter, eleven years old, was severely afflicted with St. Vitus's Dance or Chorea. We gave her three and one-half bottles of South American Nervine and she is completely restored. I believe it will cure every case of St. Vitus's Dance. INDIGESTION AND DYSPEPSIA.
The Great South American Nervine Tonic
Which we now offer you, is the only absolutely unfailing remedy ever discovered for the cure of Indigestion, Dyspepsia, and the vast train of symptoms and horrors which are the result of disease and debility of the human stomach. No person can afford to pass by this jewel of incalculable value who is affected by disease of the Stomach, because the experience and testimony of thousands go to prove that this is the ONE and ONLY ONE great cure in the world for this universal destroyer. There is no case of unmalignant disease of the stomach which can resist the wonderful curative powers of the South American Nervine Tonic.

Harriet E. Hall, of Waynetown, Ind., says: "I owe my life to The Great South American Nervine. I had been in bed for five months from the effects of an exhausted Stomach, Indigestion, Nervous Prostration and a general shattered condition of my whole system. Had given up all hopes of getting well. Had tried three doctors with no relief. The first bottle of the Nervine Tonic improved me so much that I was able to walk about, and a few bottles cured me entirely. I believe it the best medicine in the world. I can not recommend it too highly."

Mrs. M. Russell, Sugar Creek Valley, Ind., writes: "I have used several bottles of The South American Nervine Tonic, and will say I consider it the best medicine in the world. I believe it saved the lives of two of my children. They were down and nothing appeared to do them any good until I procured this remedy. It was very surprising how rapidly they both improved on its use. I recommend the medicine to all my neighbors.

Mrs. Ella A. Bratton, of New Ross, Indiana, says: "I can not express how much I owe to the Nervine Tonic. My system was completely shattered, appetite gone, was coughing and spitting up blood; am sure I was in the first stages of consumption, an inheritance handed down through several generations. I began taking the Nervine Tonic and continued its use for about six months, and am entirely cured. It is the grandest remedy for nerves, stomach and lungs I have ever seen.

Ed. J. Brown, Druggist, of Edina, Mo., writes: "My health had been very poor for years, was coughing severely. I only weighed 110 pounds when I commenced using South American Nervine. I have used two bottles and now weigh 130 pounds, and am much stronger and better than have been for five years. Am sure would not have lived through the Winter had I not secured this remedy. My customers see what it has done for me and buy it eagerly. It gives great satisfaction."

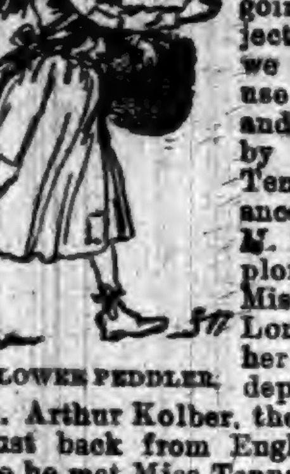
THE CHILDREN'S STYLES.

PICTURESQUE SUMMER COSTUMES FOR THE LITTLE ONES.

A Study of Juvenile Life—Sketches by Miss Dorothy Tennant—Street Arabs at Play—Their Free Unconventionality a Relief to the Eye—Headgear the Feature in Children's Toilets.

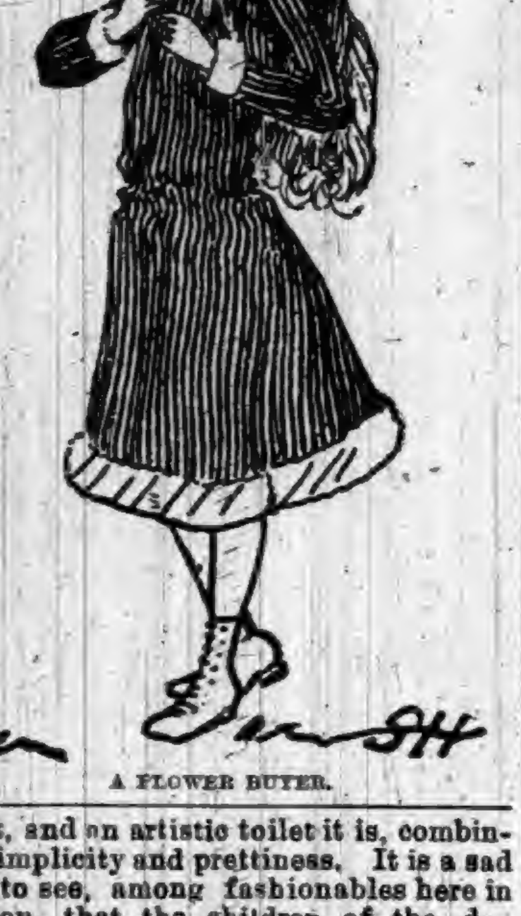


A FLOWER PEDDLER.

JUST for a column or two, let us pay attention to this summer's costumes for children; and, before going into the subject of their clothes, we may agreeably use some pictures and words provided by Miss Dorothy Tennant, the affianced bride of Henry M. Stanley, the explorer of Africa. Miss Tennant is a London artist, and her specialty is the depiction of children. Arthur Kolber, the portrait painter, just back from England, and while there he met Miss Tennant at a reception of artistic people. She talked with him about the technical difficulties of youthful portraiture, and during the conversation she drew three sketches.

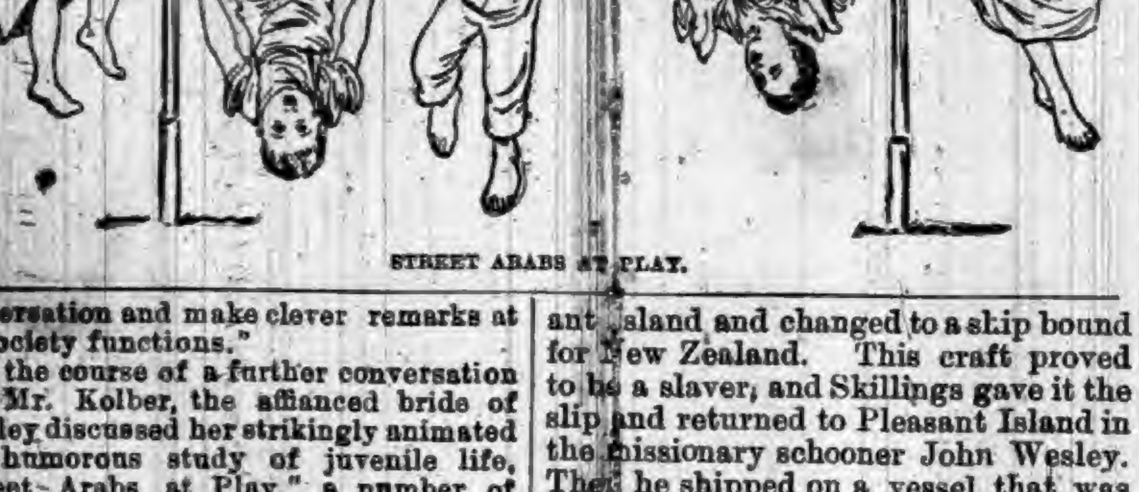
"I made notes in my mind, while in the streets to-day, of two figures that I shall some time introduce into a painting," she said. "They were a ragged flower peddler and a stylish purchaser. The peddler was like this," and she sketched the girl who appears in the initial of this article.

When that was done she rapidly and deftly penciled a representation of the girl whom she had observed buying the flowers. In preparing these original studies for publication the lines have merely been traced over with black ink, to render them fit for the process of engraving. The second one will serve excellently as a fashion plate, too, since Miss Tennant said of it:



A FLOWER BUYER.

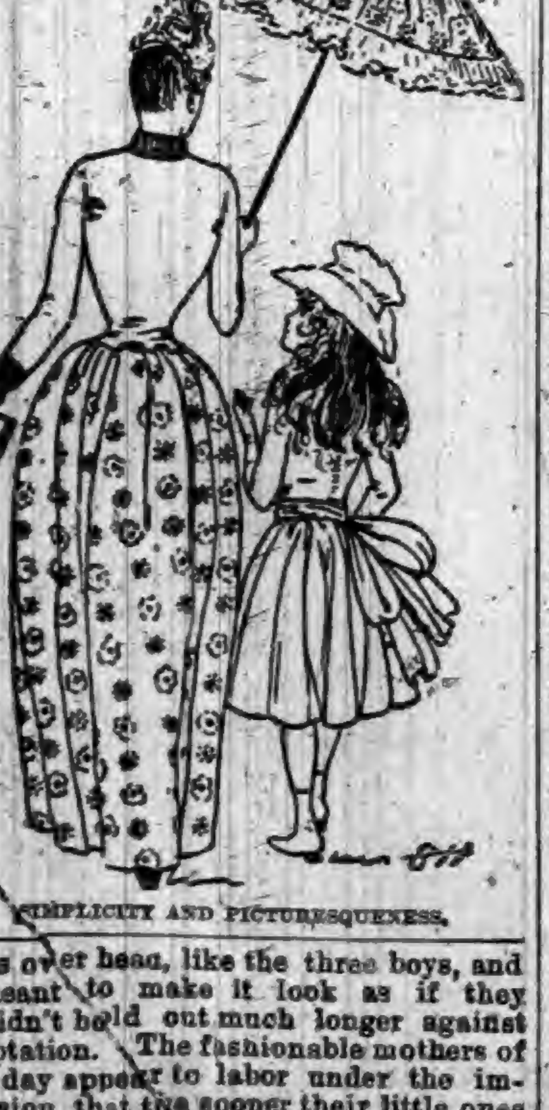
"The buyer, as you see, was clad in the very latest approved costume for the street, and an artistic toilet it is, combining simplicity and prettiness. It is a sad fact to see, among fashionables here in London, that the children of the d[illegible] pervade at homes, dinner parties, and even balls, have ceased to be as the child-like children of one's youth. No longer are they romping, merry, natural little creatures, satisfied with innocent pleasures and each other's society, but, like their elders, whose objectionable manners and conceit they are so quick to acquire, they have become the artificial, preternaturally shrewd and wizened little men and women, who monopolize conversation and make clever remarks at all society functions."



STREET ARABS AT PLAY.

In the course of a further conversation with Mr. Kolber, the affianced bride of Stanley discussed her strikingly animated and humorous study of juvenile life, "Street Arabs at Play," a number of tousled-headed, ragged, merry boys and girls, twisting themselves around an iron rail on the embankment. It is one of the most effective canvases in the current Academy exhibition. She drew the outline sketch of its five figures, leaving out the background, as reproduced in the double-column picture shown in this article. Resuming her consideration of latter-day children of fashionable parents, she said:

"The street youngsters are a positive relief to the eye in their free unconventionality. The two girls in my painting only let their skirts prevent them from turning heels over head, like the three boys, and I meant to make it look as if they wouldn't hold out much longer against temptation. The fashionable mothers of the day appear to labor under the impression that the sooner their little ones are trained in the artifices of social life the more charming do they become. One may well ask with Charles Lamb as one gazes upon the affected, deceitful, vain little prigs who now masquerade as chilren, 'Is all the world grown up? Is childhood dead?' I trust that we women of to-day, who pride ourselves on the possession of brains, may not hereafter have it imputed to us that, in advancing ourselves, we forgot how to bring up our children. The fact of the matter is that children nowadays are sacrificed to maternal vanity. Women never show to better advantage than when they are noticing children. The society woman, therefore, regards them as vehicles for effect, and trails her over-dressed infants about with her as the fashionable dame of a century or two ago did her black page. The finery of the children draws attention to the mother. The flatteries that are lavished upon them are really meant to gratify her vanity or advertise her name, and beyond calling her little one to her side now and then to show it off, or to make it a screen for a flirtation, the smart mother never attempts the slightest notice of it during a round of visits, or attempts to check its forwardness or its consumption of illimitable and indigestible refreshments."



SIMPLICITY AND PICTURESQUENESS.

Coming across the ocean to the subject of the costuming of American children for the summer season of 1890, investigation at the very sources of juvenile fashion indicates clearly a combination of simplicity and picturesqueness. This is well illustrated in the toilet of the little girl with the woman in the picture. The child's gown is plain in every respect, being merely a muslin frock with a looped ribbon at the waist. But the hat is a conformation with boldly striking outlines, and in white felt of the finest and lightest texture, and quite sufficient in itself to top the youngster in a manner to command attention without recourse to flamboyant colors or excessive oddity. The distinction of that whole costume lies in the hat alone. The same artistic device is shown in the last sketch, wherein three playful girls are frocked in all simplicity, but capped in a way to finish them off picturesquely. The most expert devisers and makers of juvenile clothing for the daughters of the rich are turning out, for the summer absences from cities, frocks in ginghams, calicoes, and other ordinary fabrics, sometimes with costly bits of embellishment here and there, but more frequently without any adornment at all. The best of fits and the newest of adaptation to the figures of the little ones are requisite in the manufacture of these garments, but in design and material they are apt to be about as plain and simple as though made by the hands of poor mothers for their offspring. But the dominant touch of style is imparted by means of a uniquely artistic hat or cap, and these articles are not only produced to order by the swell outfitters, but are very generally to be found on sale in the stores. An economical mother, therefore, may give a great deal of mode to her little girl by purchasing such a piece of headgear, and making it the feature in a toilet otherwise of home manufacture and moderate cost.—New York letter to Chicago Ledger.

STYLE IN CAPS AND FROCKS.

They Wanted to Eat Him.

Henry S. Skillings, of Fremont, Me., has returned home after wandering since 1866. He left Portland the day after the great fire, and shipped from Boston for San Francisco. From there he went to the South seas, and when near Manila was wrecked. Skillings and another man volunteered to swim ashore with a line. They succeeded, after being dashed about, in reaching shore and in saving the rest of the crew. He then served on board an English vessel, and was in several battles with Chinese pirates. He then shipped for Sidney, stopped at Pleasant Island and changed to a ship bound for New Zealand. This craft proved to be a slaver, and Skillings gave it the slip and returned to Pleasant Island in the missionary schooner John Wesley. Then he shipped on a vessel that was short of provisions, and all aboard nearly starved. Skillings at last made his home on Greenwich island, among the cannibals. They wanted to try the flavor of a white man, and Skillings was soon put to it to save his life. For two months he slept on his arms, expecting every moment to have to fight for his life. One day a fleet of thirty canoes hove in sight and a herd of the wild natives attempted to capture him. Skillings, who speaks seven languages, held a parley, and told them that if they made an attack he would kill all he could with his rifle. He would die fighting. The natives were afraid of the mysterious rifle. Skillings set them all to work and made each one contribute 300 cocoanuts a day. They buried spears in the grass as they worked in the field, and several times attempted to kill him by strategy, as they do missionaries. Skillings killed two or three and was afterward respected. He then went to Ponape, married, and made $10,000. July 1, 1887, the natives rose in rebellion, and the massacre of Ponape followed. He saved himself and sixteen others by putting to sea, but nearly starved. Skillings bought a schooner and went back to Ponape, but the Spanish government would not allow him to land. They drove him from another small island which he had leased for ten years. After many adventures Skillings went to San Francisco, where he had sent his daughter to be educated, but she was dead when he got there. Then he concluded to return to Maine, and was rather astonished to find that he was the owner of a considerable fortune there.

A Cruel Suggestion.

Miss Lastchance (smarting under the chagrin of a broken engagement)—Say to your friend that I propose to keep his presents as a reminder of his perfidy. Did he actually think I would return them?

Mr. Messenger—He did. But perhaps he was influenced in his thought by an old saying.

Miss Lastchance—What saying?

Mr. Messenger—Age is honorable.—New York Press.

THE PIMAS AND MARICOPAS.

New Tribes of Indians in Arizona—Interesting Facts Concerning Them.

SOUTHWESTern Arizona contains two tribes of Indians of whom the world at large knows little or nothing. Above Phœnix and below the mouth of the Verde in the Aztecan Valley of the Salt River is a settlement of some 500 Pimas and Maricopas Indians. Unlike the other tribes, they are as peaceful as grangers. Their arrows are even made without the usual flint head and are fit for killing only small game. Their reservation is irrigated from an old canal supposed to have been dug by the Aztecs and reopened by these Indians. Archæologists have established that the Salt River Valley is the Egypt of North America. Lieutenant Cushing, of the United States army, who lately conducted an exploring expedition into this region, made researches which show that this valley had at one time a population of not less than 300,000. Many of the old sites are traceable by the naked eye. Some lead out into the mesa for miles; others were crossed in cutting ditches of modern irrigation systems. Lieutenant Cushing says the Pimas and Maricopas have their land divided in small plats bounded by little ditches, which carry a stream of clear water. Here are raised crops of wheat, corn, barley, melons, and pumpkins. Wooden plows are used in the tillage, and the work is shared alike by the men and women, the former doing the heavy work. These Indians have always been self-supporting, selling enough to buy what few clothes are needed in that climate. They possess great skill in making decorated baskets, so woven that they will hold water. They also make a pretty pottery, which is invaluable in that climate. It is the big unglazed water jars in the shape of a pear. These are known in the West only by the Mexican name Olla. These vessels allow a slow percolation of water, and in that dry climate so great is the evaporation in their wet water service that it keeps the water at a temperature below seventy degrees. Most of the men speak English, and all talk Spanish. They are very peaceably inclined toward the whites. That there are "no good Indians but the dead" does not apply in the case of these tribes. Some years ago a company of squatters tried to steal some of the Indians' land. The Pimas told the white men to go away from the reservation. "We are for peace, but you must go away. The white man has plenty; we have but little," was the message sent by the chief. The squatters, knowing well the peaceful disposition of the redmen, refused to move. One night a powwow was held and the next morning the tribe seized the squatters and drove them beyond the limits of the reservation. They were as careful as a shepherd of his flock, and not one white man was injured in the least.

Kisses by Mail.

The young postmaster of an Eastern village was hard at work in his office when a gentle tap was heard upon the door and in stepped a blushing maiden of 16, with a money order which she desired cashed. She handed it, with a bashful smile, to the official, who, after closely examining it, gave her the money it called for. At the same time he asked her if she had read what was written on the margin of the order.

"No, I have not," she replied, "for I cannot make them out. Will you please read it for me?"

The young postmaster read as follows: "I send you $3 and a dozen kisses."

Glancing at the bashful girl, he said: "Now, I have paid you the money and I suppose you want the kisses."

"Yes," she said, "if he has sent me any kisses I want them, too."

It is hardly necessary to say that the balance of the order was promptly paid and in a scientific manner.

On reaching home, the delighted maiden remarked to her mother:

"Mother, this postoffice system of ours is a great thing, developing more and more every year, and each new feature seems to be the best. Jimmy sent me a dozen kisses along with the money order, and the postmaster gave me twenty. It beats the special delivery system all hollow."—Detroit Free Press.

The Largest Stone Ever Quarried.

No traveler to Egypt returns without words of praise and astonishment for the ancient Egyptians as builders. How they handled such enormous blocks of stone has always been a mystery, and probably always will be. But now it appears that we have surpassed the Egyptians.

At Vinalhaven, Maine, there now lies in a quarry the largest piece of stone ever quarried anywhere, and if erected it will be the highest, largest and heaviest single piece of stone standing, or that ever stood, so far as there is any record.

It considerably exceeds in height any of the Egyptian obelisks. The tallest of these, which was brought from Heliopolis to Alexandria by Emperor Constantine, and subsequently taken to Rome, where it now stands, is 105 feet 7 inches high. The Vinalhaven shaft is 115 feet long, 10 feet square at the base and weighs 850 tons.

This enormous monolith was quarried "just for fun," as the boys say, or perhaps to show what the granite company could do when they tried; at any rate, it was not quarried to order. What a splendid monument it will make to somebody.

A Parrot that Doesn't Like Chestnuts.

A friend tells this story about a parrot and vouches for its truth. It must have been a wonderful bird that, but belonged to one of those fellows who are always in hard luck. One day he found himself reduced to hard pan in the way of finances and left his green-hued exile from Afric's coral strand at his "uncle's." Every day after that when he passed the shop the parrot would be hanging over the door and would cry out in beseeching tones:

"Pete, Pete, when are you going to take me out?"

Another peculiarity of his was that whenever any one said "hullo" to him he would reply:

"Hullo, but for God's sake don't ask me if I want any crackers."—Providence Telegram.

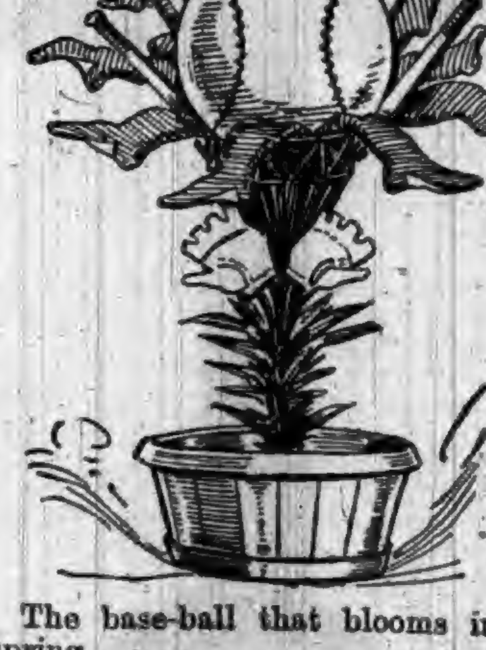
Enjoyment at Home.

Don't shut up your house, lest the sun should fade your carpets; and your hearts, lest a merry laugh should shake down some of the musty old cobwebs there. If you want to ruin your sons, let them think that all mirth and social enjoyment must be left on the threshold without when they come home at night. When once a home is regarded as only a place to eat, drink, and sleep in, the work is begun that ends in endless degradation. Young people must have fun and relaxation somewhere; if they don't have it at their own hearthstones it will be sought at other and perhaps less profitable places. Therefore, let the fire burn brightly at night, and make the homestead delightful with all those little arts that parents so perfectly understand.

Don't repress the buoyant spirit of your children; half an hour of merriment around the lamp and firelight of a home blots out many a care and annoyance during the day, and the best safeguard they can take with them into the world is the unseen influence of a bright little domestic circle. Put home first and foremost, for there will come a time when the home circle will be broken; when you will "long for the touch of a vanished hand and the sound of a voice that is still," and when your greatest pleasure will be in remembering that you did all in your power to put a song under every burden to make each other happy.—Albany Journal.

This Is Not a House-Plant.



The base-ball that blooms in the spring.

SUGAR-CANE, according to Mr. D. Morris, is nowhere found wild, and it has been supposed to have lost its power of producing seed. In specimens received at Kew Gardens, however, seeds have been found. This discovery is important, as it is anticipated that cross-fertilization and selections of seedlings may greatly improve the plant.

Why Envelopes are Redeemed and Stamps are Not.

Some people have an idea that the Government redeems postage stamps when from any cause they become unfit for use or are difficult to use. Frequently sheets of stamps are stuck together, or are torn or injured. The loss, if any, falls upon the owner, as the Government refuses to assume any responsibility of stamps when once sold. The agents of the Government, the Postmasters, can redeem stamps which they have for sale, if through any accident they become unfit for use. But when the citizen buys a stamp he either uses it in the legitimate way or else he is out the value of the stamp.

The Government, however, redeems stamped envelopes. If one should happen to be misdirected or should become blotted, or for any reason a person should wish to tear open a stamped envelope after he has sealed it for mailing, he can bring it to the Post Office and get a brand new envelope in its place. The reason for this difference in the treatment of the adhesive stamp and the stamped envelope is that the adhesive stamp can be used and then washed and passed as good, unless a careful scrutiny is made. If the Government should begin the practice of redeeming adhesive stamps, the opportunities for fraud would be increased. Then the adhesive stamps are manufactured at a cost to the Government, which the stamped envelope is not. The stamps are furnished to the public at the face value, and out of this has to come the cost of manufacture, but in the case of stamped envelopes they are sold at their face value, plus the cost of manufacture.—Washington Star.

No Wonder She Was Afraid.

A Galveston, Texas, man is in the habit of getting up early and going in swimming in the bay before breakfast. One morning his wife remarked at the breakfast table:

"George, I'm so anxious while you are away bathing in the morning that I can't sleep a wink until you get back."

George felt very much flattered that his wife cared so much for his safety, and being desirous of allaying her apprehensions, he said:

"Don't be alarmed. I know how to swim, and there is no danger of my getting drowned."

"I was not thinking about your getting drowned. That never entered my head; but I am afraid that some thief, knowing that you leave the house early in the morning, may sneak in while you are away and steal the silver."—Texas Siftings.

Deal Gently with the Stomach.

If it proves refractory, mild discipline is the thing to set it right. Not all the nauseous draughts and boluses ever invented can do half as much to remedy its disorders as a few wineglassfuls—say three a day—of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, which will afford it speedy relief, and eventually banish every dyspeptic and bilious symptom. Sick headache, nervousness, sallowness of the complexion, fur upon the tongue, vertigo, and those many indescribable and disagreeable sensations caused by indigestion, are too often perpetuated by injudicious dosing. An immediate abandonment of such random and ill-advised experiments should be the first step in the direction of a cure; the next step the use of this standard tonic alterative, which has received the highest medical sanction and won unprecedented popularity.

The Butler Normal.

The summer term of the Butler Normal will begin Tuesday, July 1, 1890.

SPECIAL TEACHERS' CLASS

This class has been formed for the benefit of teachers and those desiring to prepare themselves for teaching. All the branches in which examinations are held for teachers' license, will receive careful attention. Special instruction will be given on the latest approved methods of teaching, on the organization, management and government of schools. It is the aim to educate and train teachers for their educational work. Other classes will be orgnaized to accommodate those not intending to teach, but who intend to follow other avocations of life. Drill classes in reading, writing, spelling and other practical branches, will receive proper attention.

EXPENSES.

Tuition per term, $5.00, in advance. Board with furnished room in private family per week, from $2.50 to $3.00. Board in clubs, per week, from $1.25 to $1.75. Rooms without board, per week, from 25 to 50 cents. Arrangements also, have been made with parties to cook for students who may desire to furnish their provisions from home, and thus permitting them to attend with very little expense. On information of those desiring to come but cannot on account of limited means, every possible effort will be made to assist them in such ways as will enable them to attend.

BOOKS.

Students coming to the normal will bring the books they wish to study. And those not having books can purchase them at nominal cost. We call special attention to the following fact: That we employ none but the most thoroughly qualified and efficient teachers; that our teachers use no cramming processes, but require the most thorough work of their students; that every student will be called upon for a recitation every day. Many institutions permit students to go three or four weeks at a time without obliging them to make a recitation. We work upon the theory of letting the students recite and not the teacher. If you desire any further information on any particular point, address.

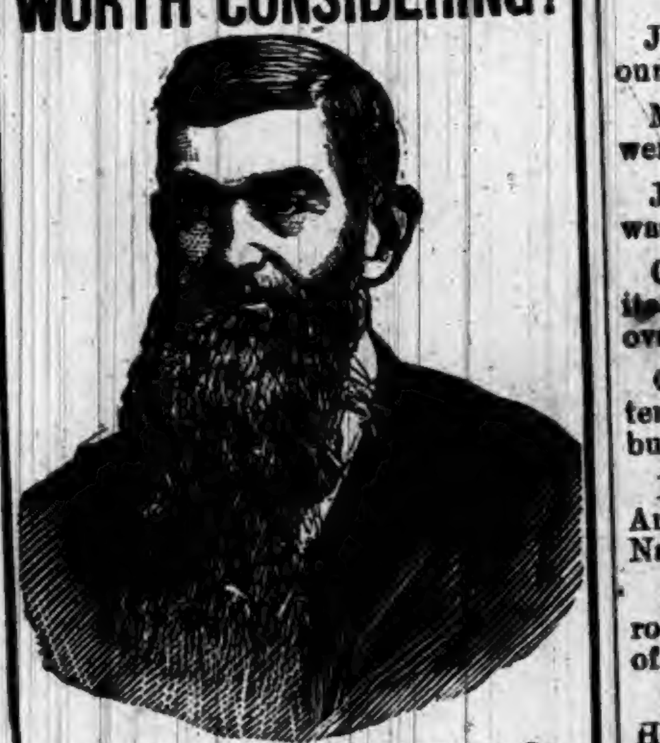
WORTH CONSIDERING!



DR. J. S. PEMBERTON, OF ATLANTA, GA. Is a celebrated dealer in Proprietary medicines of his own manufacture. He said: "I had a most severe attack of inflammatory rheumatism, which brought me down upon my bed and entirely incapacitated me for business. The disease appeared to have a lien on my system, and all I could do did not dislodge it. Hunnicutt's Rheumatic Cure was recommended to me, and I took it. In a day after beginning its use I began to improve, and in five or six days I was entirely free from pain and able to resume my business. I told Mr. Hunnicutt at that time, that his cure is the best medicine the world has ever offered for rheumatism." The Doctor refused $2500 to say as much for another remedy. This he said free and voluntary.

Mrs. J. A. Thompson, who moved from Butler to Nebraska a few years ago and where her husband recently died, is visiting her Butler friends, on her way to her native home in Canada.

George Hensler, of Baltimore, came home to see his father, but a delay on the road made him miss a few hours, resulting in his not getting home until after his father's death.

The society event of the past week was the marriage of Mell Wilkinson to an accomplished young lady of Delaware, O., a Miss Evans. A grand reception was given them upon their return last Friday evening at the Lutheran parsonage and church. The writer wishes them all happiness in their marriage venture.

Died at his residence in Butler, after a lingering illness of many days, George Hensler aged 72 yrs, 9 mos. and 19 days.

George Hensler was born in Wurtemburg, Germany, August 24, 1817 where he grew to manhood. He emigrated to this country in 1846 landing at Pittsburg, Penn., where he lived two years, and on the first of June 1848 he was united in marriage to Miss Mary Kostan. The union was blessed with seven children, one son and three daughters only are living, also his aged partner. He moved from Pittsburg to Winesburg, Ohio, where he followed his trade of tin and coppersmith for sixteen years, then he moved to Millersburg, Ind., where he lived four years, removing from there to Butler, Ind., in 1868, where he has since lived. He was at that time a wide awake business man and erected the second brick building in Butler which he owned at the time of his death, and in which for many years he carried on a successful hardware store. His funeral took place from the Lutheran church on last Sunday, Rev. Diffinbach officiating. Mr. H. was a member of the German Lutheran church having been confirmed in his native country. He led an upright honest christian life and he departed from our community loved and respected by all who knew him. His remains were interred in the new cemetery east of Butler.

SUMMIT.

John Smith, of Hudson, was through our town last Sunday.

Mrs. John Grambling and daughter went to Waterloo last Friday.

Quite a number from this place attended the republican convention at Auburn last Saturday.

Miss Ella Jackman, who has been visiting relatives in Grand Rapids, Mich., the past few weeks returned home one day last week.

On Wednesday of last week when returning home from a visit to a neighbor, Milton Barker was agreeably surprised on finding a large number of his friends and neighbors gathered at his house. It was his fiftieth birthday. An account of it will be found elsewhere in the paper.

SPENCERVILLE.

O. W. Rummell returned from Bryan, Ohio, Sunday afternoon.

The children's day service in the M. E. church Sunday evening did honor to the little folks, and was entertaining to the very large assembly present.

Miss Maggie Siberts has returned from a visit to Auburn. She says there was considerble rejoicing that she had so large a ditch tax to pay, which she thinks uncalled for; she says she does not blame some of the parties interesced so much, as they would be better satisfied with a saloon. The ditch would be a detriment, especially if their cane would get fast in the sidewalk, there might be a serious fall.

Teachers' Association.

The fourth session of the DeKalb Co. Teachers' Association convened in the high school building at Auburn, Saturday June 7, 1890. The forenoon was devoted to business. The afternoon session was opened by the reading of a paper by Mrs. Helen Baxter, of Butler, subject, "How shall our Society Progress." This presented some very fine ideas and caused each to feel that he had an individual part to perform in order that the Society progress. Next was a discussion; subject, Resolved: That we should have a Compulsory School Education; E. Beard, affirmative, and C. P. Hamman, negative. Mr. Beard being absent, Mr. Hamman consented to discuss each side alone, which he did in a manner that did credit to himself and all who heard him, proving that his line of thought on this subject is not limited to one side. We then listened to an ably prepared paper written and read by W. D. Smith, of Fairfield township, subject, "Advantage of Teachers' Association." This paper showed deep thought and awakened new interest within the members present as it proved what the subject indicates, that there are many advantages to be gained from the teachers' association. The meeting was a complete success and all enjoyed it and hope the next meeting may witness the presence of every enrolled member besides many educational friends.

CATARRH—CATARRHAL DEAFNESS—Hay Fever—A New Home Treatment

Sufferers are not generally aware that these diseases are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of living parasites in the lining membrane of the nose and eustachian tubes. Microscopic research, however, has proved this to be a fact, and the result of this discovery is, that a simple remedy has been formulated whereby catarrh, catarrhal deafness and hay fever are permanently cured in from one to three simple applications made at home by the patient once in two weeks.

N. B.—This treatment is not a snuff or an ointment; both have been discarded by reputable physicians as injurious. A pamphlet explaining this new treatment is sent free on application by A. H. DIXON & SON, 337 and 339 West King St., Toronto, Canada.—Christian Advocate.

Sufferers from Catarrhal troubles should carefully read the above. ly

Indian Base-Ball Players.

In the State of Virginia and in that part which is associated in history with the story of Captain John Smith and Pocahontas, there is a school known as "Hampton." Here there are one hundred and forty Indians studying books, learning trades and in their hours of recreation playing ball. There are four clubs now among these Indian school boys. The best club boasts the name of "Hampton Indian Nine" or "First Nine," while the poorest club modestly calls itself "Fourth Nine." During the Easter vacation the Yale Glee Club stopped at the Hampton School. The singing was very much enjoyed, but the presence of Mr. A. A. Stagg, the famous amateur base-ball man, roused the interest and enthusiasm of all the ball players. A desire was at once aroused to make his acquaintance. Those boys who had the pleasure of a hearty hand-shake and a few words with him now feel like old friends of Mr. Stagg. The words that gave a special delight to all the boys who heard them was the offer to give a few points on pitching. He then accompanied the Indian pitcher to the practice grounds. Here Mr. Stagg explained and put into practice the theory of his deceptive curves. He caught for his pupil and explained the cause of each failure and encouraged each success. This practice gave the club what it needed and aroused an interest that will last for some time. The "Hampton Indian Nine" has been organized for about two years. Games have been played with a club of white men from a neighboring town. In this club there are four men who have played with professional clubs while the Indian boys are new players. The best game they have won was from this club of white men by a score of 5 to 6. The greatest success they have gained is the friends they have made by their quiet gentlemanly conduct on the field. This has been so marked that newspapers publishing reports of their games have made special mention of it. Their uniform consists of a white flannel cap with a red band around it, blue shirt with the letters "H. I. N." in white upon the breast, blue pants and dark red stockings. Another success is their base running. This is not done to perfection, but when any are on the bases they do some good running. The next Indian club at this school is known as "Ten Little Indians." They play a good game. There are Indian clubs at the Educational Home in Philadelphia, at the Government Indian school at Genoa, Nebraska, at the Sesseton School Agency in Dakota, and among the Sioux Indians at Lower Brule Agency in Dakota. What's in a Name?

We believe Shakspeare asked something like this. Last week we noted how Commissioner J. W. Platter, had been "put up" in the Indianapolis News, as J. D. Flanner. Two days later, the Butler Record, reporting the convention, gave our friend Levi Denison, the startling title of "Levi L. Denoden." It is not very flattering to republicans that their party papers are usually in charge of men who are so much of strangers, that they hardly know the names of their own candidates. But it is all the same, anyway, for after election one name will do for all—the name of Dennis.

Constipation,

If not remedied in season, is liable to become habitual and chronic. Drastic purgatives, by weakening the bowels, confirm, rather than cure, the evil. Ayer's Pills, being mild, effective, and strengthening in their action, are generally recommended by the faculty as the best of aperients.

"Having been subject, for years, to constipation, without being able to find much relief, I at last tried Ayer's Pills. I deem it both a duty and a pleasure to testify that I have derived great benefit from their use. For over two years past I have taken one of these pills every night before retiring. I would not willingly be without them."—G. W. Bowman, 26 East Main st., Carlisle, Pa.

"I have been taking Ayer's Pills and using them in my family since 1857, and cheerfully recommend them to all in need of a safe but effectual cathartic."—John M. Boggs, Louisville, Ky.

"For eight years I was afflicted with constipation, which at last became so bad that the doctors could do no more for me. Then I began to take Ayer's Pills, and soon the bowels recovered their natural and regular action, so that now I am in excellent health."—S. L. Loughbridge, Bryan, Texas.

"Having used Ayer's Pills, with good results, I fully indorse them for the purposes for which they are recommended."—T. Conners, M. D., Centre Bridge, Pa.

A Fortunate Woman.

Mrs. Mary L. Baker, of Ovid, Mich., has reason to be very thankful. She was a great sufferer from heart disease for years. Was short of breath, had hungry spells, pain in side, fluttering, faintness etc. After taking two bottles of Dr. Miles' New Heart Cure, she says, "I am better than for twenty years. My mind and eyesight have improved wonderfully, I advise all persons thus afflicted to use this great remedy." F. E. Davenport the druggist, recomends and guarantees it. ON THE WING.

Items and Ideas Found by the Courier Reporter in His Journey.

The pen-pusher has rested up his weary limbs, and sharpened his pencil preparatory to spending a little more time among the people living in the rural districts. His travels this spring have been so pleasant and satisfactory, that he wishes to establish an affinity with a still greater number of people. Country people as a general thing are very sociable, and it is with no small degree of pleasure this personage calls upon every one he comes in contact with on his journey.

Lindol Calkin is one of those young men of good qualities, who believes that it is right and proper for every citizen to keep posted as to the things going on in his county. To show just how earnest he is in what he says, he has arranged for the COURIER to come to his house once every week.

The itemizer was afforded the opportunity of passing a few minutes in pleasant conversation with Lewis Shaffer, of Corunna, a few days ago. He is a very genial, good-natured sort of a gentleman. He has been a blacksmith for 27 years, "and the muscles of his brawny arms are strong as iron bands."

Fred Becker, of Richland, is a young farmer, and believes in being to the front in everything that pertains to good. He reads the COURIER for the news it contains; sustains its democratic principles by his counsel, and advises his relations to do the same.

Our-man-of-walkin' disposition, found Geo. W. Brand, of Corunna, to be fully awake to the demands of the present time. He is a thorough farmer and delights in following the requirements of his chosen profession. Aside from that he is a good conversationalist and a very sociable man. We assure our friends there is one printer, who will remember how generously he satisfied a big appetite, when hunger was gnawing at our vitals.

J. M. Hosler, of Corunna, has read the COURIER for several years, and he distinctly affirms that he could in no way get along without it. This, friends, we take as evidence not to be ignored. It is the universal testimony.

Geo. Shaffer was found to be equal to the demands of this age. He is one of those social, good-natured fellows, who appreciate a thing of value when he sees it. The COURIER will be a welcome guest at his home for one year.

Levi Harding, near Corunna, is one of those pioneers who take delight in staying out of mischief by keeping busy. He is a good-natured old gentleman.

J. F. Stewart, of Angola, has pitched his tent on the commons at Corunna, and is by the power of his eloquence, trying to teach the way of salvation as he understands it. He is an able minister and it is hoped that great good may come from the efforts he is putting forth. He represents the Church of Christ.

J. W. Miller smiled graciously upon "newsy" as he approached the threshold of Mr. M's. homelike residence near Corunna. Though he is well up in years, yet he is a sociable old gentleman and apparently delights in the entertainment of his callers. Being a genuine democrat, he finds the COURIER indispenable and hails its appearance each week with delight.

Ephraim Farrington is one of Richland township's successful farmers, and his term as a DeKalb county citizen has been seemingly satisfactory.

John Lehner, has a dog that is imbued with almost human intelligence. When Mrs. L. starts to milk, the dog seems to know just what his duty is, and trots off to hunt up the cows and sees that they are safely corralled in the barnyard. This is one dog in DeKalb county that money will not buy. It may be added that the COURIER is found in this same household.

H. K. Dawson is another of the COURIER's staunch supporters. He has just erected a magnificent bank barn, and everything around him speaks of prosperity.

Jacob Shull was found vigorously pressing the bar and scouring the glittering steel, in a brave attempt to keep the weeds out of his corn. He is a genuine DeKalb boy and knows just how to appreciate a county paper. His hours of rest will be pleasurably spent in perusing the COURIER for what it contains. A first-class idea to keep one out of mischief.

To Those Whom It May Concern.

All persons knowing themselves to be indebted to me will please call and settle at once. Resp. Yours,

LOUIS LÆMLE.

Charles Curtis, Lafayette, while packing bananas, was stung by a tarantula that had been shipped with the bunch. After great labor the victim's life was saved.

They All Failed.

The following letter from W. A. Thomson, of Columbus, Wis., is peculiarly interesting: "My wife," says he, "has been treated for her head, stomach, and nervous prostration by three doctors in New York, two in Chicago, one in Philadelphia, one in Cincinnati, and at the large institute in Buffalo for 16 months. They all failed. But one bottle of Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine helped her wonderfully." This should be used in all headaches, backaches, changes of life, nervous disturbances, fits, rheumatism, etc. Ask at F. E. Davenports' drug store for a free trial bottle and Dr. Miles' new book on the nerves and heart. 2

Lightning's Freaks.

Last Friday night, about half past twelve, there was a heavy thunderstorm, that woke up about every one in town. It especially woke up the family of Frank Borst. Mrs. Borst, after being awakened, had gone upstairs to the room where her grandmother, who is blind, was sleeping, as had also her mother, Mrs. L. J. Miller, for the family of the latter reside in the same dwelling. On reaching this room, a terrific clap of thunder, or rather three claps, in quick succession, shook the building and filled the room with lightning, and dust. The shock threw Mrs. Miller against Mrs. Borst, with some force, but neither was seriously hurt. The family were aroused, of course, and it was found the lightning had struck the kitchen chimney, and scattered in several directions. A part went along the roof and tore pieces off the eaves and cornice. The main bolt seemed to go down the chimney and reaching the room below had burst out in both directions. The part going into the kitchen knocked down the stove pipe unjointed the pipe, even bursting some of the joints open, and scattering them all about. Some of the fluid seems to have escaped at a point near the door, as some damage was done there. A portion had burst through into the other room, coming out with some nails that held up a large picture of their little girl. It burnt up the wire that held this picture, and followed the staples through the frame, burning a hole in the plush edge of the face side of the frame, and broke the glass in coming through it, but the picture was not harmed. Of course it fell to the floor. A loose paper, four or five feet away, lying on a pile of books, had been set on fire, and after being partly burned, had gone out. Plaster from the wall, and other rubbish was scattered over the floor, and things looked like a general wreck. It seems almost miraculous that no one was hurt. The same bolt it would appear, had sent a part of its charge along the telephone wires into Davis' hardware store, where it fired a lot of papers, in the banking office. These fired the wooden casing, and other material, and there would have been a disastrous fire, had not Henry Baker, the night watch, seen it and broke out a pane of glass in the window, which enabled him to get in. He was followed by Frank Davenport with one of his fire grenades. This was thrown and broken in the flames, and the fire put out. The same bolt, had also sent a portion into Kiblinger's new factory, just west of Davis', and between the store and Mr. Borst's residence, through here, it did not do much damage. Several of the neighbors were shocked more or less, J. A. Potter being among the number. On the streets it had its own way. One of the new telegraph poles was struck, and it ran into every box on the line of the electric lights, and burned out the fuse. At the electric light building, John Johnson and Tom Patterson were treated to a succession of loud reports that made their quarters rather uncomfortable for a time.

BLOWN TO PIECES.

Disastrous Explosion of a Tug Boat Boiler.

New York special: A terrible explosion occurred in Brooklyn by which four lives were lost. The tug boat Elice E. Crane, owned by Thomas O'Brien, of O'Brien Brothers, and which had been moored at the foot of Van Brunt street, Brooklyn, was blown to pieces at her dock by the explosion of the boiler. The cause of the disaster is not known. The boat is a complete wreck. Asleep on the tug at the time were Capt. Oscar W. Squires, George Rogers, the cook, and a deck hand, whose name is not known. They were killed outright. The fireman had evidently attempted to get up steam and for some unexplained reason, probably a defect in the boiler, the explosion occurred. He is supposed to have been killed also, for he is missing. Melthen Bailey, dock hand, of 109 Richard street, received a lacerated wound of the hand and was scalded. The ballast scow, Lime Rock, which was lying alongside the tug, had her side torn out and went to the bottom. It is supposed that the watchman on board, whose name is not known, went down with her. The report of the explosion was heard a long distance, and brought crowds of people to the scene.

Brazil's New Constitution.

Rio Janeiro special: The new Constitution has been elaborated by some of the most notable jurisconsuls and specialists of Brazil under the immediate supervision of the ministers. The following are some of the principal ideas in the Constitution: Parliamentarism ceases. Brazil adopts the American system of a responsible executive, with Secretaries responsible only to him and to the people. A Senator or Deputy chosen Secretary loses his seat. The first election of President will be in November next, by Congress, but the Constitution establishes that this election shall subsequently be by means of electors, the people to select electors in proportion to their delegations in Congress. The President shall be elected for six years and be ineligible for the next ten years succeeding his term of office. The President of the Senate is Vice President of the Republic.

An Entire Family Stunned.

Belvidere (Ill.) special: Another storm of unusual severity visited this vicinity. Rain fell in torrents and the lightning was terrific. One bolt took off the corner of John Alexander's residence, corner Julian and Prairie streets, and stunned the entire family. The Chicago and Northwestern tracks west of here again washed out for the second time in two weeks and trains are all delayed. A miniature cyclone accompanied by a heavy hail storm, did considerable damage a few miles north of this city.

Struck by a Train.

William A. Blandin and B. W. Williams, sons of Judge E. J. Blandin and W. W. Williams, of Cleveland, are now lying at the Maple City House, Norwalk, Ohio, in a serious condition. While sitting on the Lake Shore track two miles east of Norwalk they were struck by a train going east, thrown into a ditch alongside the track and badly hurt about the hips. They claim they were on their way from Cleveland to Sandusky. Mr. Williams is a prominent magazine and book publisher of Cleveland.

Firemen Injured.

Truck No. 10, which was running to a small fire on North Halstead street, Chicago, was overturned at the corner of Garfield avenue and Halstead street, and Capt. O'Connell and Murphy, who is a truckman, were both thrown off the truck with great violence. The Captain's leg was broken just above the ankle and the truckman sustained severe internal injuries, besides having several ribs broken. Capt. O'Connell was removed to his home, while Murphy was taken to the Alexian Brothers Hospital. He may not recover.

A Horrible Death.

J. C. Scott, station agent and telegraph operator at Amboy, a small town south of Peru, Ind., was killed by a fast train on the Pennsylvania road. He had been spending the previous day in Marion, and returned home on the train mentioned, which was a fast mail and didn't stop for his station, but was slowed up a little for him to jump off. In some manner he was thrown under the wheels, which passed over his body, cutting him in two. He leaves a wife and family.

Disastrous Flood.

During a terrible rainstorm at Muscoda, Wis., the mill dam at Rodolf's mills gave way, flooding the valley, carrying away all the bridges on Mill Creek and wrecking several buildings. The flood washed out what is known as the North End dyke. Rodolf's loss is $5,000. All the sawmill dams and bridges on Knapp's Creek were washed away. Considerable damage was done to crops.

Carlisle's Successor Chosen.

A special election, to choose a successor to fill John G. Carlisle's unexpired term in Congress, has been held in the Sixth Kentucky district. The returns show the election of Worth Dickerson, the Democratic nominee, by 3,500 majority.

Union Pacific Employes Strike.

The employes of the Union Pacific machine shops along the line from Pocatello, Idaho, to Portland, Oregon, struck on account of a reduction in wages.

TROUBLE AHEAD

For the Captain of the "Umbria."

Acting Secretary Batchellor sent a letter to Speaker Reed in response to the resolution of the House of Representatives, inquiring "whether it is true that the Cunard Steamship Company, Saturday, June 20, 1890, refused to obey the officers of the United States to give return passage to certain immigrants (Belgian glass-blowers,) landed at New York by said company in violation of the contract labor laws of the United States; and if any steps have been taken to refuse entry to steamships of said company until said company has complied with the laws of the United States, and made reparation for their refusal to obey the order of the officers thereof." He encloses reports of the customs officers and a letter addressed to the department by Mr. Brown, the New York agent of the company, in regard to the case in question, and says: "I desire further to say that I have under consideration the expediency of referring the action of the Captain of the steamship "Umbria" to the United States attorney for the southern district of New York for such action under section IV. of the act of February 26, 1885, in the nature of criminal proceedings as may seem to him proper under the circumstances; and I contemplate such further action on the part of the department as may be admissible under the provision of the statute looking to a thorough enforcement of the laws prohibiting the importation and imigration of foreigners and aliens under contract or agreement to perform labor in the United States."

TERRIBLE CYCLONE.

Illinois Visited by a Terrible Cyclone and Many Lives Lost.

A special from Earlville (Ill.) dated the 21st inst., says: A terrible cyclone and cloud-burst occurred about five miles north of this city shortly after 4 o'clock this afternoon which resulted in terrible loss of life and property, no less than fifteen people being killed and a number of houses and barns entirely demolished. The storm came from the southwest and swooped down on Field's school-house, a new building standing at the Four Corners, and tore it to pieces. At the time there were but eight persons in the school-room and all were instantly killed. Their bodies were carried some distance, fearfully bruised and crushed. The names of those who perished in the school-house so far as known are: Miss Maggie McBride, the teacher; Edna Hunt, Jennie Radley, Minnie Berry, Ada Rudolph, Lena Prentice, Carrie White, Peter Beams.

An old peddler was driving by the school-house when the cyclone struck it, and he, too, was caught up, carried some distance and flung lifeless into a hedge. His team was also carried away.

The house of Newton Wood was next struck, and not a vestige of it remains. The family sought refuge in the cellar and escaped.

From the school-house the storm continued to the northeast through Paw Paw Grove and carried with it everything movable. Here the loss of life is reported to be greater—seventeen persons killed and many injured.

Twenty houses were torn to pieces and the eastern part of the town entirely wiped out. Some of the victims were carried hundreds of yards and mangled almost beyond recognition. The force of the cyclone was terrific. Nothing remains in its path but bare earth, huge trees being torn out and carried away. The width of the storm was about eighty rods, and it progressed forward at the rate of eighty miles an hour. The work of rescue began immediately, but at the hour of writing but little can be learned in regard to the names of the killed and injured.

Cornell special: A cyclone swept over the country west of here. Everything in its path was destroyed. The path of the storm was about eighty rods in width. Several houses were blown down, trees uprooted, fences destroyed and several persons hurt. No lives are reported lost.

OUT OF THE GRAVE.

Short Rest of a Tramp's Body—Desecration of the Old Cemetery at Greencastle, Ind.

Greencastle (Ind.) special: The old cemetery was the scene of a daring and successful attempt at body-snatching that led to the arrest of one of the perpetrators. Don Whittaker, a colored man on his way to the stone quarry, and Henry Powell, a rag and iron picker, saw some clothing lying on the ground just inside the inclosure. Looking further they saw where a grave had been tampered with, and, on proceeding to the spot, they met a young medical student of this city who admitted that the coat and clothes were his own, and that he came to recover them. It was then about sun up, and the body had been spirited away during the night. The men brought the young ghoul to town and turned him over to the authorities, by whom he was locked up. The young medical student proved to be Harry Insley, a youth not yet out of his teens, and whose father, now deceased, was a physician before him. He is also a member of the preparatory class of DePauw University. He had just entered the office of his medical instructor upon the close of his college term, and being of an adventurous turn was easily led into the escapade. He refuses to divulge the names of his accomplices, or the disposition that was made of the stiff. It is known, however, that the body is that of the tramp who was killed by the cars near the Vandalia Depot. Insley was arraigned before the Mayor, and, giving bond for his appearance at Court, was released from custody.

WHAT'S THIS?

A Rumor Comes from the White House that President Harrison Will Not Be a Candidate for Renomination.

A special to the Brooklyn Standard-Union from Washington says: A piece of news that will be read with intense interest comes from the White House. It is no less than a positive declaration by President Harrison that he will not be a candidate for renomination under any circumstances. The President, it appears, made up his mind some time ago not to seek the presidential nomination again. He did not think it necessary to make any announcement of the fact, although it was assumed by thousands of party men that in the natural course of things he would be a candidate for a second term. Indeed, the announcement was made in the most casual way. The President was in conversation with an intimate friend at the White House and the talk turned on the silver bill. Incidentally national politics was mentioned, and the President expressed himself quite freely. He said, among other things, that he had made up his mind not to be a candidate for renomination, and that at the end of his present term he intends to settle in Indianapolis again and resume the practice of law. The President's declaration touching his relation to the next presidential nomination, made as it was without reserve, was soon in wide circulation and afforded a topic for conversation that in interest subordinated all other topics for the time.

No Rebel Flags.

A riot was prevented at the small town of New Cumberland, six miles above Steubenville, Ohio, by the decisive action of the authorities. Eugene Robinson is the owner of a show boat which moves up and down the river giving exhibitions in the small towns. The boat while moored at the village put among a lot of foreign flags the rebel flag. Inside of ten minutes the whole town was out. As the crowd was growing menacing the town authorities waited on the manager of the show and requested him to remove his flags. He flatly refused at first, but after a long discussion, during which time the crowd was asking that the manager be brought out and beaten, he consented and hauled the flags down, putting up small flags of national colors.

Lueth Must Hang.

The Ohio Supreme Court has refused to grant the motion for a new trial in the case of Otto Lueth, the Cleveland boy murderer of Maggie Thompson. A petition was at once made to Gov. Campbell for a respite, which was granted until August 29, in order to bring the case before the Board of Pardons.

How They Did It.

Texarkana (Ark.) special: Radcliffe, the wounded train robber, who died here, left a wife and three children. In his dying moments he said it was too late for him to talk, but that his wife would make a statement for him. She is a woman of more than ordinary intelligence for one of her class. She made a detailed statement of the whole affair as far as she knew and this she will testify to in court. The statement, as taken down by a stenographer, fills fifteen pages of legal cap and clears up many of the mysteries that surrounded the robbery. She says that the men in jail, Detective Williams, Napoleon McDaniel, and John Bromley, with her husband committed the robbery, that McDaniels went through the express car while the others stood guard. Radcliffe did the shooting that disabled the express messenger and that McDaniels shot Radcliffe through mistake.

The Lottery War.

Baton Rouge (La.) special says: A movement from an unexpected quarter took the wind away from the Louisiana State Lottery men. Representative Wells introduced a proposition made by Benjamin Nengass, a banker of London and connected with the Rothschilds to give to the State $1,250,000 per year or $250,000 more per year for a franchise to run a lottery than is offered by the present company which is headed by James T. Morris. The new proposition is to give the money direct to the State for levees or any specific purpose. Banker Nengass has large real estate interests in New York and New Orleans. He has instructed his agent to outbid Mr. Morris $250,000 at a time until the old corporation weakens. He agrees to give a satisfactory bond to guarantee the payment of the money to the State.

A Mysterious Tragedy.

Omaha special: J. J. Werner, of Hebron, Neb., rushed into the clerk's office of the Merchants' Hotel, in his night clothes, at an early hour the other morning exclaiming: "I have killed my best friend." Investigation showed that he had thrown his room-mate, L. O. Secrist, from their room in the third story, into the court below, inflicting what will probably prove fatal injuries. Werner and Secrist are delegates to the Grand Lodge of Masons in session here, and are intimate friends. Werner says he dreamed of fighting a monster, and when he came to himself found that he had thrown his room-mate out of the window. There are indications that the men quarreled over the Cerneau Scottish Rite, which has created considerable disturbance in Nebraska Masonic circles. Werner was arrested.

Absolutely Hopeless.

A special from Dunbar, Pa., dated the 23d inst. says: The rescuing party continued their work at the Mahoning mine but without any encouraging results. Great crowds of sight-seers gathered to the scene of the disaster early in the morning and lingered until they were driven away by the thunder-storm in the evening. There is nothing in the report that the rescuers had been working in the wrong direction. Mine Inspector Keighly says he knows the exact location of the chamber where the men are entombed and the work is being rushed as rapidly as possible. The men are certainly dead, and will not be reached for twenty-four hours yet.

An Unheeded Warning.

Frank Johns and Jacob Ringley, miners, disregarded the warning of the bank boss at the West Massillon (Ohio) Coal Company's No. 1 Mine by going into an abandoned room from which the props had been taken to get their tools, the roof caved in and the men were crushed beneath a solid stone 6x10 feet in dimensions, killing Johns almost instantly and seriously injuring Ringley. Johns was twenty-six and would have been married within a week. Ringley has a family. He may recover.

A Peculiar Death.

Some weeks ago Ella, the 11-year-old daughter of J. C. Lloyd, of Urbana, Ohio, was playing in the grass at the home of John Smith, in Muncie, Ind., in her bare feet, when she was stung, or bitten, or hurt in some way on the great toe. Nothing further was thought of the matter until a few days afterward she was taken sick and the foot became swollen out of all proportion. Her condition grew worse until she died of blood poisoning. Many think the child was bitten by a snake.

Next Door to Murder.

A Wichita (Kan.) special of June 23 says: Three children of John Laber, a well-known farmer ten miles south of Wichita, Kan., were burned to death. Laber and his wife left them locked up in the house while they went visiting neighbors. During their absence the house took fire. The little ones, unable to escape from the burning house, were consumed with it. Their skeletons were found in the ashes this evening.

Man and Wife Hanged.

Joseph Potts and Elizabeth, his wife, were hanged at Elko, Nev., for the murder of Miles Fawcett in January, 1888. No exciting features marked the execution.

—Omer, the 13-year-old son of Dr. Biddinger, who resides in Clay Township, Bartholomew County, was kicked in the stomach by a vicious horse. He died. This is the fifth child of the doctor that has met death by violence, and he is crazed with grief.

Pulaski County boasts of a cow five years of age that has given birth to eight calves. In March, 1888, when three years old, she gave birth to four, perfect in form and of usual size. In June, 1889, twins, and last week she again had a pair of healthy steer calves.

—Nicholas Rust, aged 60 years, boss malster at the Riesing brewery, New Albany, while in a somnambulistic condition, walked out of the second story window of his residence, falling twenty feet to the pavement below, breaking his spine and receiving other injuries. He will die.

—Frank Grimm, a wealthy farmer of Vanderburg County, suffered great damage in the loss of a fine barn, a large amount of grain and feed, a reaper, mower, harness, general farm implements, and some stock. —During a heavy thunder-storm, lightning struck the brick livery barn occupied by Love A. Franklin and owned by J. and H. Kirby, at Muncie. Prompt work saved the horses and vehicles. Eighteen tons of hay were consumed. The loss on the building is fully covered by a two-thousand-dollar policy in the Buffalo German Insurance Company. Mr. Franklin's loss of $500 is total.

—The country south of Milan is infested this season with black snakes. Joshua Cottingham, an old and well-known farmer, had a desperate encounter with two of these large reptiles. Had he not fought them vigorously with a club they would have twined about his person. Miller Sutton, farmer, has killed a score of these snakes recently, and squirrel-hunters report shooting large numbers of them.

—The lightning killed five steers belonging to Elias Wray, north of Crawfordsville. In the same neighborhood a horse was killed, and three houses and one barn were struck by the lightning.

—A country store, owned by Thomas Bright, of Washington Township, Brown County, caught fire and burned. A large keg of powder in the store exploded, killing, 200 feet away, a valuable horse attached to a buggy. Loss on building and contents, $2,000; insured in the Standard Insurance Company of Missouri for $600.

—William Broyer and Mart Doyle, who live about five miles northwest of Martinsville, were in that city a few days ago. When they started home Broyer was very drunk. His horses became frightened, and, running away, turned the wagon over. The wagon-bed fell on Broyer's neck, and when taken from under it he was found to be seriously injured. The injury has resulted in paralysis of the left side, and his death is but a question of a few days.

—Henry Shaaf, for many years proprietor of the Franklin Hotel, New Albany, arose from his bed at the residence of his son-in-law, Edward McCauliffe, and, not returning as soon as expected, his daughter left her bed and went out to look for him. —It is charged by a number of prominent persons in southern Indiana that venal voters are already clubbing together for the purpose of circumventing the new election law and of securing money. A monstrous meeting was held in the church and addresses up to a late hour were made by leading workers and ministers of the vicinity. In return the temperance people abandon the forty odd indictments which they have against him.

—A sad accident happened at the furnace in Brazil, by which two men, Frederick Miller and David Heller, lost their lives. Workmen were employed in the furnace in removing a large "salamander," weighing at least four tons, to do which dynamite has to be used to burst it so it can be handled. The "salamander" was hot. The hole was drilled and the explosive was put in it, and in two minutes more all would have been secure. But a premature explosion sent two men into eternity. No others were hurt. Miller was an old hand, having worked at the furnace for more than twenty years. Last year a piece of terra cotta cornice fell on his daughter, killing her instantly. Both were about forty-five years of age and leave families depending on them for sustenance. It cast a deep gloom over the small city.

—The Supreme Court, through Judge Coffey, has rendered an exhaustive opinion in the case of the Indianapolis Street Railway Company vs. the Citizens' Street Railroad Company, appealed from the Marion Superior Court. The decision holds that the company, holding a franchise for a cable road, and attempting to build one of another character, forfeited all rights in the premises and became a trespasser, not only upon the rights of the other company, but also upon those of the city. The court also decides that the Citizens' Company, having procured a franchise to build and operate a system of lines on all the streets of the city, and having shown due diligence in the construction of that system to supply the needs of the people, does not forfeit its rights even on unoccupied streets until a lack of desire to supply needed transportation be clearly shown. The decision of the court was affirmed.

—W. C. Foster, fireman on the P., C. & St. L., was killed at Ford's Crossing. He was leaning out of the cab when he collided with a swinging crane.

—Bertie McPherson, aged 8 years, opened an oil-tank at Terre Haute, to look in, and was overpowered with gas and fell into the tank. Daniel Thompson, a rolling-mill hand, saw him fall and attempted to rescue him, but was also overcome and fell in. Wm. Armstrong, a fireman, succeeded in getting them both out, and medical attention soon revived them.

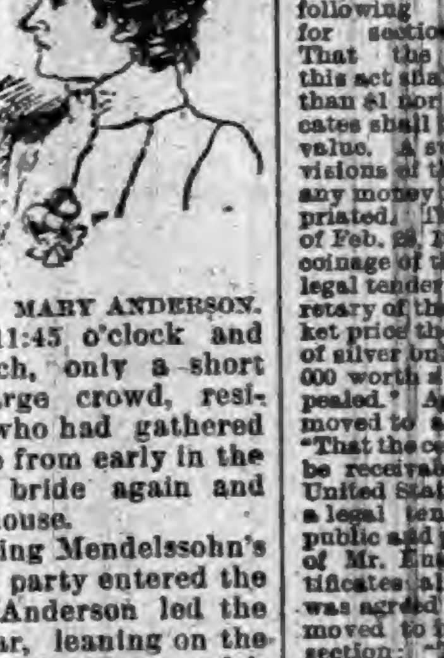
MARRIED "OUR MARY."

ANTONIO NAVARRO LEADS MISS ANDERSON TO THE ALTAR.

The Wedding of the Fair Actress a Strictly Private Affair—The Bride Is Cheered by the Gathered Crowds on Her Way to the Chapel—Future Plans.

London cable: The wedding of Antonio Navarro, of New York city, and Miss Mary Anderson took place Tuesday noon (17th inst.) at the chapel of St Mary, Hampstead, Canon Pursell of Brompton oratory officiating.

The ceremony was strictly private. Three closed carriages contained all the guests who were permitted to witness the nuptials. These favored individuals numbered only ten and included only the members of the two families immediately interested in the ceremony.



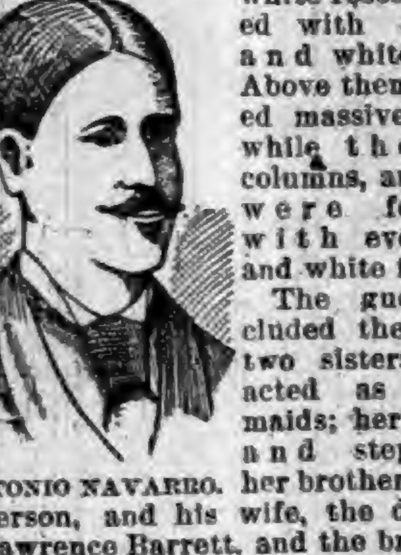
DR. MARY ANDERSON.

Every possible precaution had been taken to keep the time and place of the wedding a profound secret, and no cards were sent out. Large crowds assembled in the streets and about Brompton oratory where the newspapers had announced the ceremony was to take place, and waited patiently until long past noon.

The wedding party left the cottage at Hampstead, the residence of Miss Anderson's step-father, Dr. Hamilton Griffin, at 11:45 o'clock and proceeded to the church, only a short distance away. A large crowd, residents of Hampstead, who had gathered in front of the cottage from early in the morning, cheered the bride again and again as she left the house.

The organ was pealing Mendelssohn's wedding march as the party entered the little church. Miss Anderson led the procession to the altar, leaning on the arm of Dr. Griffin, and Mr. Navarro followed, escorting the bride's mother.

Miss Anderson wore an elaborate gown of rich, white satin, covered with embroidered lisse. He flowing bridal veil was of tulle, trimmed with a profusion of orange blossoms. Superb diamond ornaments sparkled from every possible place.



ANTONIO NAVARRO.

The chapel was a veritable flower garden. The three altars were beds of white roses entwined with imperial and white lilies. Above them towered massive palms, while the walls, columns, and pews were festooned with evergreens and white flowers. The guests included the bride's two sisters, who acted as bride's maids; her mother and step-father; her brother, Joseph Anderson, and his wife, the daughter of Lawrence Barrett, and the brother of Mr. Navarro, who acted as groomsman.

At the conclusion of the ceremony the party returned to the cottage, where a wedding breakfast was spread at which the usual toasts and congratulations were offered.

Here a correspondent had an opportunity for a brief interview with the happy bride. Mrs. Navarro said she and her husband expected to pass their honeymoon in Switzerland, and she had decided to retire from the stage in accordance with the wishes of Mr. Navarro, unless she loses the suit brought against her by Mr. Abbey. In that event she will act one season to fill the contract which he claims.

"You see I am not strong," she said, "and it was purely my ill-health which compelled me to forego my engagements. Even now my health is not sufficiently restored to justify my undertaking the strain of appearing on the stage."

"Why did you resort to such absolute secrecy in regard to the wedding?" was asked.

"That is easily explained," replied Mrs. Navarro. "The truth is that Mr. Navarro is in deep mourning for a relative and desired the utmost privacy. I willingly respected his wishes for the quiet ceremony and ignored all my friends. No person outside of our families was invited. I am sure my friends will appreciate the circumstances and be as generous as they have always been in excusing 'our Mary.'"

BLAINE ON THE SUGAR DUTY.

The Secretary of State Sets Forth His Views on the Subject.

Augusta (Me.) dispatch: The following letter from Secretary Blaine has been received by ex-Mayor Coney:

WASHINGTON, June 15.—My Dear Sir: I have your favor of the 11th inst. You are in error in supposing that I am opposed to sugar being admitted free of duty. My objection is not to free sugar, but to the proposed method of making it free. If in the pending tariff bill sugar is placed upon the free list we give to certain countries a free market for $95,000,000 of their products while they are not asked to open their markets to the free admission of a single dollar of American products. We ought to have in exchange for free sugar from certain countries a free market for breadstuffs and provisions, besides fabrics from all parts of our country. In short we ought to secure, in return for free sugar, a market for $60,000,000 or $70,000,000 worth of our own products. It will not require reciprocity treaties to secure this great boon. The tariff bill can contain all the necessary conditions. The legislative power is able to secure the desired end. Within the last twenty years we have given the countries south of us free admission for nearly $60,000,000 worth of their products without receiving a penny's advantage in exchange. If sugar be now made unconditionally free we shall have given to the Latin-American countries free admission for $150,000,000 of their products. It is time, I think, to look out for some reciprocal advantages. We are a very rich nation, but not rich enough to trade on this unequal basis. In great haste, sincerely yours,

JAMES G. BLAINE.

BOYCOTTED THE POSTMASTER.

Two Missourians Arrested for Usurping the Rights of an Unpopular Official.

Kansas City (Mo.) dispatch: John Love and Thomas Duckworth, of Peculiar, Mo., have been arrested charged with conspiracy to deprive the postmaster at that place of the receipts and emoluments of his office, interfering with the discharge of his duties and settling up unauthorized receptacles for United States mail. The trouble grew out of the unpopularity of A. S. Gilson, recently appointed postmaster. Love and Duckworth purchased stamps at other towns and gave them away or sold them to people in Peculiar so as to prevent Gilson from getting his commission on such stamps, and also arranged to collect mail matter from people of the town and take it directly to railroad trains, thus depriving the postmaster of his legitimate cancellation fees.

THE NATIONAL SOLONS.

WORK OF THE SENATE AND HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Our National Law-Makers and What They Are Doing for the Good of the Country—Various Measures Proposed, Discussed and Acted On.

IN the Senate, after disposing of some routine business, the silver bill was taken up on the 17th, and Mr. Wolcott spoke in favor of free coinage. The Senate then proceeded to vote on the amendments reported by the Finance Committee. The amendment to strike out the bullion redemption clause was agreed to—yeas, 57; nays, 7. Mr. Plumb offered the following amendment in lieu of the first section of the House bill: "That from and after the date of the passage of this act the unit of value in the United States shall be the dollar, and the same may be coined of 412½ grains of standard silver, or of 25 8-10 grains of standard gold; and the said coins shall be legal tender for all debts, public or private; that thereafter any owner of silver or gold bullion may deposit the same at any mint of the United States to be formed into standard dollars or bars for his benefit and without charge; but it shall be lawful to refuse any deposit of less value than $100 or any bullion so base as to be unsuitable for the operations of the mint." Agreed to—yeas, 43, nays 24. Mr. Plumb moved to add a new section to come in as section 2, as follows: "That the provision of section 3 of an act to authorize the coinage of the standard silver dollar and to restore its legal-tender character, which became a law Feb. 28, 1878, is hereby made applicable to this act." Agreed to without division. Mr. Reagan offered the following amendment as a substitute for sections 3, 4 and 5: "Section 3. That the certificates provided for in this act shall be of denominations of not less than $1 nor more than $100, and such certificates shall be redeemable in coin of standard value. A sufficient sum to carry out the provisions of this act is hereby appropriated out of any money in the treasury not otherwise appropriated. The provision of Section 1 of the act of Feb. 28, 1878, entitled 'an act to authorize the coinage of the standard dollar and to restore its legal tender character,' which requires the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase at the market price thereof not less than $2,000,000 worth of silver bullion a month nor more than $4,000,000 worth a month of such bullion, is hereby repealed." Agreed to without division. Mr. Teller moved to add the following as a new section: "That the certificates provided for in this act shall be receivable for all taxes and dues to the United States of every description, and shall be a legal tender for the payment of all debts, public and private." Modified (at the suggestion of Mr. Eustis) by adding "and all silver certificates already issued," and as so modified it was agreed to—yeas, 34; nays, 22. Mr. Plumb moved to insert the following as an additional section: "The owners of bullion deposited for coinage shall have the option to receive coin or its equivalent in the certificates provided for in this act, and such bullion shall be subsequently coined." Agreed to without division. The bill was then reported to the Senate, and all the amendments agreed to in the committee of the whole were agreed to in the Senate—yeas, 40; nays, 26. The bill as amended was then passed—yeas, 42; nays, 25. The bill for the admission of Wyoming as a State was taken up, so as to make it the "unfinished business," and the Senate adjourned. The House, after passing the sundry civil appropriations bill, took up the Indian appropriations bill and spent the remainder of the afternoon upon it, adjourning at 5:30 o'clock.

IN the Senate, on the 18th inst., Mr. Morrill from the Finance Committee, reported back the tariff bill and said that it was not expected that it would be brought up for consideration earlier than a week from Monday, 23d. The conference report on the anti-trust bill was presented and agreed to. Both houses recede from their respective amendments and the bill remains exactly as it was passed by the Senate. The Senate then proceeded to the consideration of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill. An amendment was agreed to increasing the salary of twenty-six committee clerks from $1,600 to $1,800 and the salary of clerks to Senators from $1,500 to $1,800. The Senate disposed of seventy pages of the bill and adjourned. In the House, on motion of Mr. Payson (Ill.), a bill was passed to confirm the title to certain cemetery land in Sault Ste. Marie, Mich. The House went into committee of the whole, Mr. Allen (Mich.) in the chair, on the Indian appropriation bill. The committee was in session but a few moments when it rose informally to allow the House to receive a message from the Senate. As Secretary McCook announced the passage of the silver bill, with sundry amendments, the Democratic side of the House broke out in loud applause, which was continued for a minute. The committee having resumed its session, Mr. Bland (Mo.) moved that the committee rise—his purpose being to have some action taken on the silver bill. The vote by tellers resulted 94 to 105. So the committee refused to rise. The consideration of the Indian appropriation bill being resumed, appropriations of $12,200 for the Creek Indians, $48,800 for the Pottawattomie Indians, and $27,000 for the Mexican Pottawattomie Indians were stricken from the bill. The committee then rose, the bill was passed, and the House adjourned.

AFTER disposing of some routine business the Senate, on the 19th inst., resumed consideration of the legislative, executive and judicial appropriation bill, but without action the bill was laid aside. A message from the President in relation to reciprocity was read and laid on the table. After eulogies on the deceased New York Representatives, Messrs. Nutting and Wilbur the Senate adjourned. The Journal of the House having been read, Mr. Mills (Tex.) objected to its approval on the ground that the clerk had not read it in full. The Speaker suggested that the clerk had only omitted to read such portions as it is customary not to read, but he directed the full reading of the journal. The clerk proceeding, read the portion of the journal which disclosed the reference of the silver bill to the Committee on Coinage, Weights and Measures. During the reading Messrs. Mills and McKinley remained standing, anxious to claim recognition. The latter was successful and he moved that the journal be approved. Upon this he demanded the previous question. The previous question was voted down. Mr. Mills offered a resolution reciting that the order of reference made by the Speaker referring the silver bill to the Committee on Coinage, Weights and Measures was incorrect, under the rules of the House, and was made without authority under the rules, and resolving that the journal be corrected by striking therefrom this entry. Mr. Cannon (Ill.) raised a point of order against the resolution. A long discussion ensued, participated in by the leaders on either side of the House. The Speaker, in rendering his decision, overruled the point of order to submit the question to the House. Mr. Cannon moved to table Mr. Mills' resolution. On a vote by tellers the motion to table was lost—yeas, 118; nays, 121. The question then recurred on Mr. Mills' resolution and it was agreed to—yeas, 121; nays, 117. Mr. McKinley was then recognized to move a reconsideration and also to move an adjournment. Mr. Mills managed to sandwich in a motion to lay the motion to reconsider on the table. The motion to adjourn was lost—yeas, 119; nays, 123. The vote recurring on Mr. Mills' motion to table the motion to reconsider, it was agreed to—yeas, 121; nays, 114. Mr. Springer moved the approval of the journal as amended, pending which, on motion of Mr. McKinley, the House, at 7 o'clock, adjourned.

THE Senate spent the 20th inst. on the legislative, executive and judicial bill, which was finally disposed of and passed with several amendments. In the House the Speaker announced the pending question to be ordering the previous question on the motion made by Mr. Mills, of Texas, to approve the journal of Wednesday as amended by the resolution of Thursday. Mr. Mills' motion was carried, the vote being 126 yeas, 122 nays. Before the vote was announced Mr. McKinley changed from the negative to the affirmative, and after announcement moved a reconsideration. Mr. Mills moved to table the motion to reconsider, and it was tabled, yeas, 131; nays 129. The question then recurred on approving the journal of Wednesday's proceedings as amended and the journal as amended was agreed to by a vote of 132 to 120. The clerk then proceeded to read the journal of Thursday's proceedings, and it was approved. The House agreed to the conference report of the anti-trust bill. After sundry executive communications were laid before the House a recess was taken until 8 o'clock for the consideration of pension bills. At 8 o'clock the House met to consider pension bills, but Mr. Enloe at once demanded a quorum. No quorum being present, the House, at 8:07, adjourned.

GHOSTS.

BY OZIAS MIDSUMMER.

The thought "may be Will-o'-the-Wisp" shook his knees
As fire-flies thence flew about 'mid the trees
And thoughts of ghosts, goblins and demons and these Arrayed for a jig or a whirl
So filled Joseph's mind with a sense of dismay,
As in the deep darkness that followed the day,
He plunged in the blackness that lay in his way
Toward home from seeing his girl.

That church in the hollow and mill on the hill,
Though peaceful and quiet, deserted and still,
Caused up and Joseph to wander or chill,
As lonely they stood in the night;
Caused him to unpocket a rusty old blade
And pucker his lips till a whistle they made,
Then many shrill blasts blow, as though not afraid
If demons came on for a fight.

Yes, caused him to pray and forget Mollie dear,
For just then he saw a white specter appear
Which waved its white arms as it came to him near
And seemed to say, "Now I've got you."
He bowed to the earth in a season of prayer,
Remembered the wrongs he had done everywhere,
Expecting to die in his boots then and there,
And feeling contemptibly blue.

But Joseph still lives, for the specter passed by,
As at his prone figure it heaved a deep sigh
At thinking he'd gone to the sweet by-and-by,
His mother would never know how.
Then bellowed a voice in lamentable woe,
Which voice 'spite his frenzy Joseph seemed to know,
For seen by the light of the fire-flies' glow,
The ghost was his mother's white cow.

BETRAYED;

—OR—

A DARK MARRIAGE MORN.

A Romance of Love, Intrigue and Crime.

BY MRS. ALICE P. CARRISTON.

CHAPTER VII.—(Continued).

The intellectual superiority of Elliston, refined and insolent as it was, aided to blind Slyme, showing him evil which was not only prosperous but was also radiant in grace and prestige. For these reasons he most profoundly admired his employer—admired, imitated, and hated him!

The magnificent Elliston professed for him and for his solemn airs an utter contempt, which he did not always take the trouble to conceal; and Slyme's limbs trembled when some burning sarcasm fell from such a lofty height on the old would of his vanity—that wound which was ever sore within him.

What he hated most in his employer was his easy and insolent triumph—his immense and unmerited fortune—all those enjoyments which life yielded, without pain, without toil, without conscience—peacefully tasted.

But what he hated above all, was that this man had thus obtaining these things, while he, Oscar Slyme, had vainly striven for them.

There was yet one thing more; he had looked upon the young wife of the fortunate man whose bread he ate, and seen that she was wondrously, surpassingly lovely, and, like all who had ever come within the magic circle of her baneful influence, he had speedily succumbed to her powers—aye, the time quickly came when he loved her with a fierce and maddening passion, when he would gladly have run any risk, committed any crime, to win a single smile of approval from her beautiful lips.

Of course Cora was not slow to see and understand the power she had gained over the secretary, and that one word from her would make him her willing slave; but for a time she treated him coolly, even contemptuously.

But when she wanted an instrument wherewith to reach the heart of the man who had calmly and deliberately slighted her proffered love, here was one ready to her hand, and she scrupled not to make use of it.

"Take a seat, Mr. Slyme," said the lady, hastily throwing the paper on the floor, "and tell me where in the world you have been ever since last evening."

"I have, to the best of my poor ability, Mrs. Elliston," responded the secretary, quietly seating himself, "been carrying out your plans and instructions."

"But, pray, what has kept you so long? The girl is dead—at least so the paper states."

"Ah! to be sure the papers say so, and, thanks to a rapidly conceived plan of my own, which I must say I carried out most admirably, her husband thinks so, too; and now it only rests with you to say whether or no he shall ever be undeceived."

"Lauding your wonderful abilities again I see, Slyme; that's a particularly bad habit of yours. But no matter—what do you mean? How does it rest with me? Please explain yourself. Tell the whole story, and begin at the beginning, if you please."

Slyme flushed painfully at the rebuke he had received, and, moving uneasily in his chair, he commenced his story, speaking in a low and rapid tone, his eyes the while wandering about the partially lighted room, and never for more than a moment at a time resting on the lady's face.

CHAPTER VIII.

THE SLAVE BEGS A SMALL FAVOR.

"Of course," the private secretary began, "you know all about the decoy letters, and what they were intended to accomplish. Well, they worked to a charm. I sent the one addressed to the bridegroom at about the right moment, and when I saw he had taken the bait and gone to the girl on Forty-seventh street, I knew he was out of the way for some time, and so thought no more about him, but turned my attention to the bride—ha! ha! the bride of less than an hour!"

"Do pray go on with your story, Mr. Slyme."

"Well, the note I prepared for her I caused to be handed in about twenty minutes later, and it wasn't long before it produced visible effects.

"From my post of observation I saw her rush out of the house, and almost fly in the direction of the Fielding girl's home."

"Ah! well done."

"I had a carriage ready, and, springing inside, directed the driver to keep her constantly in view. He did so, and managed the whole thing admirably.

"She reached the house on Forty-seventh street, and a moment later saw her husband issue from it; then she did the very thing I could have wished her to do. She questioned the Irish servant-girl.

"The result of that interview was, as you may easily guess, a resolution never to see her husband's face again.

"She sent the girl for a carriage. Ours was the first to attract her attention. Hurriedly I told the driver to take the job, and when the lady was safe inside, and the carriage was turning the corner, I mounted on the rack behind.

"Of course, in this way, I never really lost sight of her for a moment. As she entered the waiting-room of the Grand Central Depot by one door, I entered by the other.

"She bought a ticket for Cos Cob, and directly afterward I bought another for the same place. Then I was careful to keep my eyes on her until the train was made up. But, meantime, I had noticed a very curious thing."

"Ah! and what was that, pray?"

"Sitting next to her, and evidently waiting for the same train, was a middle-aged lady with a young girl by her side.

"Now, I am quite sure our friend did not see this girl at the time, but I could not help seeing her; and, wonderful to relate, she was not only about Mrs. Cleveland's own age, but looked enough like her to be her twin sister."

Cora Elliston aroused herself and showed a suddenly increasing interest.

"Go on," she said, eagerly.

"Ah! I thought I should interest you before I had finished," said the private secretary, a little dryly.

"Permit me to assure you I have been deeply interested all along," rejoined the lady. "Now please go on."

"These ladies," Slyme continued, "went out to the train at about the same time Mrs. Cleveland left the room, and I followed closed after them.

"They found the right car first, and had taken their places before our friend came in, and she, after a moment's hesitation, sat down two seats back of them, while I, not to lose sight of her, took up my station directly opposite.

"Well, as you have doubtless learned before this, some great man was about to die in New Haven, or further east, and as he wanted his relatives and friends about him, a special train started with a number of them from this city.

"It was delayed by some means near Greenwich, and the fact was not telegraphed back, as it should have been; so, directly after rounding a curve, we plunged into it full tilt, and our cars were telescoped, shattered, torn from the track, and tumbled down a steep embankment, where they speedily took fire.

"By some wise dispensation of Divine Providence, I escaped uninjured——"

"See here, Slyme," suddenly interrupted Cora, with an ill-concealed sneer, "you get that cant from the so-called religious people you meet with occasionally.

"Doubtless when you are with them it's all well enough to make use of it, if you see fit to do so; but in my presence—knowing you as I do—will you have the kindness to forbear?"

The secretary, with a chagrined look, bowed humbly, and fixed his eyes upon the floor.

"Your will is my law," he said in a low tone, and then went on, hurriedly:

"How I ever managed to crawl out of that burning wreck I know not, but I did do it, and strangely enough, when I gained my feet, I found Mrs. Cleveland's hat in my hand. I then looked around to see if I could find any traces of the lady herself, and presently, not a dozen yards away, I discovered her lying among a number of the dead and dying.

"Now, you see the wonderful likeness between these two women, had occupied my mind ever since I saw them sitting so near each other in the waiting-room of the depot; and now, all at once, as I stood there, it occurred to me that I might turn that likeness to good account, provided the other was dead, as I strongly suspected she was.

"I commenced a thorough search, and with the assistance of a brakeman and one or two uninjured passengers, soon found her body, so horribly burned and disfigured, that it might easily have passed for almost any one's; but taking into consideration the hair, her height, build, and certain features that were uninjured, and which were common to both, I was perfectly satisfied that Mrs. Cleveland's own mother would not hesitate for a moment to declare that the dead girl was her daughter.

"But, to make assurance doubly sure, after having the real Mrs. Cleveland conveyed away, I burned the remains of a hat, which I took from the dead girl's head, and placed the other by her side, and thus, a short time after, Eugene Cleveland found the body, and accepted it as that of his wife."

"Ah!" ejaculated Cora. Then quickly: "And what did you do with the woman you took away?"

"I hired a carriage, and conveyed her to the cottage you ordered me to lease in Roxbury."

"And she is there now?"

"Yes, ma'am, and likely to remain there a long time."

"She was injured, perhaps?"

"Badly. Her right arm was broken, her head frightfully cut, and she received other injuries.

"It was some time, of course, before I could put her in charge of a physician, and by that time fever had set in. She is out of her head now, and the doctor says ten to one she will never recover her reason."

"She has brain fever, then?"

"Yes."

"She may die?"

"It's more than likely."

"H'm—and the—tne other; what did they do with that?"

"I made inquiries afterward," said Slyme, slowly, "and found they had taken it to Mrs. Cleveland's mother's, at Riverside, from whence it is to be buried to-morrow, I think."

"Ah!" Then, after a moment's pause: "Slyme."

"Yes, ma'am."

"You must attend that funeral."

"Attend the funeral! What possible good can come of that?"

"I should greatly like to know who the guests will be. What information you are able to gather there may, in a great measure, shape our course for the future."

"Then I will certainly be there. And now, madam, have you any further commands for me?"

"Have you told me all I ought to know?"

"I believe so—unless——"

"Unless what?"

"Why, I am inclined to think, from what I have been able to learn since I reached the city, that young Fielding and his sister are likely to make quite a stir about the liberty taken with their names, and the fraud practiced upon them the other night."

"Pooh! let them stir. If they go too far, they'll suddenly find themselves without bread and butter, that's all. And now, Slyme, I think our interview for this time is over."

But, seeing that the secretary still lingered, she thought it wise to bestow upon him a little honey; so, with her sweetest smile, she said:

"My friend, I am very well pleased with you. The ardent zeal you have displayed in carrying out my plans and wishes has quite won my heart."

A flush of pleasure mantled the secretary's face. His lips quivered and his eyes lighted up with a new fire.

"Mrs. Elliston," he said, eagerly, but in trembling tones, "I have—I am proving to you, as best I can, that I ask no better than to be your slave. But even a slave may now and then kiss the hand of his mistress; you have not as yet granted me so much as this favor."

Cora bit her lips with vexation and suppressed anger, but quickly dissembling, she held out her hand with another of her gracious smiles, while she said:

"You have, indeed, earned so poor a reward. Continue to be faithful if you would stand even higher in my regard."

With a low cry of rapturous joy, the infatuated secretary threw himself upon his knees before the woman, and fervently pressed her hand to his lips; then, as she softly whispered:

"You must go now, my friend, indeed, you must," he slowly arose and staggered from the room as one drunk with wine.

Ah, if he could only have seen that same woman the next moment! If he could only have seen her flushed face, her angry, flashing eyes, her compressed lips, as she rubbed the spot on her hand that had come in contact with his lips.

Then if he could only have seen how she threw from her the delicately embroidered handkerchief she had used, as if it had been some unclean thing, he might have doubted her sincerity. He might even have doubted his own great power of fascination.

CHAPTER IX.

AN UNSEEN WITNESS.

Oscar Slyme was perfectly right.

Grace Lester accepted without question the poor disfigured body, brought to her the morning after the frightful accident, as that of her only and well-beloved child.

Her grief was unbounded; yet, ill and wholly unprepared though she was, superhuman strength seemed given her to bear up under the terrible affliction.

The hour for the funeral arrived, and, as was to be expected under the strange, and even dreadful, as well as romantic circumstances, the little cottage and grounds about it, were filled with sympathizing or curious friends and neighbors.

The lonely widow, who now deemed herself childless, and the unhappy husband, with a few intimate friends, among whom were Raymond Fielding, his sister Meta, Mr. Henley, and old William Rawley, and his wife, Hannah, occupied a little room by themselves during the services.

In the crowded parlor, where the closed coffin occupied a place in front of the mantel, Oscar Slyme had taken up his post of observation.

He had selected the corner nearest the head of the casket, from whence, without running much risk of being observed himself, he could see all that passed in the room, as well as note through a window at his elbow all who entered or passed out through the front door.

The assiduous secretary remained until the services were over, and the funeral cortege had started for the picturesque cemetery on the hillside; then, feeling confident he had learned all his mistress would care to know, he took an early train for New York.

"Ah!" murmured Cora, when he had made his report, "it is just as I expected; that Fielding girl was well enough to be at the funeral, even if she was too ill to be at the wedding. I'm inclined to believe that I shall find it necessary to remove her also from my path."

Oscar Slyme was watching her face intently, and while he did not catch her words, fully understood, from her looks and tone, that something displeased her greatly.

"I have told you something that you would rather not have heard?" he said, inquiringly.

She looked up hastily, and regarded him attentively for a moment.

"Listen, my friend," she at length said. "It does not please me that this working girl—this Meta Fielding, as you say she is called, should be anything more to my husband's nephew than she is at this moment; and cannot you see that already she and her precious brother are scheming for the place made vacant, as they suppose, by the death of Mildred Lester?"

"Ah! It does look like it," assented the private secretary.

"More than that," Cora went on, hastily; "unless something is done, and done speedily, they will succeed; for being more lonely than ever now, and full of grief, as undoubtedly he is, naturally he will turn to them for comfort and sympathy; and loving him, as I am sure she does, it is very easy to see how it will all end; and it doesn't please me, Mr. Slyme—I repeat—it doesn't please me at all."

The secretary looked at her curiously.

"You must love or hate this man very much," he said, with more than a trace of suspicion in his tone.

Cora raised her beautiful eyes, and threw upon him a quick, searching glance.

"Have I not already told you," she said, sharply, "that he has mortally offended me—that I will never forgive him—never, if I can prevent it, allow him a single moment's happiness on this earth?" and her looks and tone convinced the jealous secretary of her sincerity.

"What would you have me do?" he asked, humbly enough.

She threw herself back into the chair from which she had risen, and resting her head upon her hand, said, after a moment's hesitation:

"I don't know yet; let me think."

Then, as if speaking to herself:

"We mustn't have the brother turned out of the bank; that was a bad move in Eugene's case. No; whatever is done now my hand must in no wise appear. Besides, it would do him no good to throw him out of his situation; the publisher would give him a better, as readily as he did the other.

"No, no; we must manage in some other way; and suspicion—well, suspicion must be directed toward some other source. And there's another thing—Slyme, are you listening?"

"Yes, Mrs. Elliston."

"Well, you must find out if I—that is, if we are in any way suspected of the plot that ended in the young bride's supposed death; and if so, you must find some way to free us from the suspicion. I don't choose to have it rest on me, at all events."

"I don't think, ma'am, it can be done," said the secretary, slowly. "And now with regard to the other matter; I believe I have a plan that will work, and which I am sure will in no wise compromise you."

"Then let me hear it, by all means."

The secretary, in a diffident and deferential manner, drew his chair a little nearer, and began to speak in a low and rapid tone.

As he continued the lady's face flushed, and her eyes sparkled with excitement and satisfaction.

"Yes, yes, Slyme," she was saying; "that will do most admirably. You are indeed a real treasure, and if you carry this through as successfully as you did the other your reward——"

And here she was interrupted by a knock on the library door.

"Come!" she called, impatiently, and a footman entered with a card on a silver salver.

Cora glanced carelessly at the card, and then, as every vestige of color left her face, gasped out rather than spoke the name of Eugene Cleveland!

"Cleveland!" echoed Slyme, in a tone of consternation. "What can he want here at this time? He must have come directly from the depot."

"I don't know what he wants, I am sure," murmured the guilty woman, thoughtfully; "I wish I did."

"Shall you see him?"

"I am trying to think what is best to do. If I refuse most likely he will say I was afraid. If I see him—— But pshaw! I will see him." And hastily recalling the footman, who had discreetly retired, she said:

"Show the gentleman in here." Then, turning to the Secretary: "You go into Mr. Elliston's private room; it will be quite as well if he doesn't see you."

Slyme, who was of that opinion himself, hastened to retire, and the door had hardly closed upon him when Eugene was admitted from the reception-room.

Cora slowly rose to receive him.

The young man advanced, and when he had nearly reached the table, by the side of which she was standing, stopped and regarded her fixedly, yet without speaking.

For a moment Cora bore his close scrutiny, then, feeling that she could not keep her feet another instant, rapidly said:

"Please take a seat, sir, and tell me to what chance I am indebted for the honor of this call," and, without waiting for him to accept her invitation, she sank back into her own easy chair.

Eugene, however, made no movement toward seating himself, but advancing another step and resting his hand upon the table, he calmly said:

"Mrs. Elliston, I have called to ask you if you are now quite satisfied with your completed work?"

"Sir! I do not understand you," answered the lady, with quivering lips.

"And yet it seems to me I have spoken quite plainly," said Eugene, bitterly. "From the night of our interview in this very room you have pursued me with a vindictiveness that has never rested nor slept. And now it has come to this: You have caused the death of my wife, and not only that, but she, poor innocent child, died, thanks to you, believing me unfaithful to her; I, who never wronged her even in my inmost thoughts."

"You have married, then, since I saw you, and your wife is dead?" said Cora, in a low, questioning tone.

"Yes; but I apprehend there is no necessity of telling you about it."

"And you accuse me of your misfortune—of her death?" persisted the lady.

"I do, most positively," said Eugene, firmly.

"You do so wrongfully, then. I have never lifted a finger against you. I have not had the heart." And the words were uttered in a mournful, melting tone that, spite of himself, thrilled the hearer's whole being.

He regarded the woman with a look of amazement.

"In that case," he managed to ask, at last, "why did my uncle cause me to be dismissed from the bank?"

"Your uncle is a person who does not like to have others set up opinions in opposition to his own. He told you it was right to take the hundred dollars his wife offered you, and yet you refused. He regarded that refusal as a direct insult offered to himself, as well as an unpardonable slight to me, and in spite of all I could say or do, he insisted upon having you turned away from the bank."

Eugene continued to regard her fixedly.

"Then you solemnly declare to me that you did not persuade my uncle to have me turned away from the bank?"

"On the contrary, I urged him, even with tears in my eyes, to have you retained in the place. More than that, I showed him how hard it must be for you to live on the meager salary you were receiving, and begged him to have you advanced, so that you might live as you had been accustomed to from your youth."

Eugene was still incredulous.

"Mrs. Elliston," he said, "so far as I know, besides yourself, I have not an enemy on earth—you remember, you told me you were my enemy, and that, sooner or later, you would make me feel the weight of your wrath. Now, then, can you tell me how it is that all my movements were watched up to the hour of my marriage, and how, before I had been married an hour, I was decoyed from the side of my bride, and how she soon afterward was roused to jealousy and induced to flee from the man who loved her with all his heart?"

"I know nothing of all this," said Cora, sadly. "Indeed, Mr. Cleveland," she continued, fixing on him her wonderful eyes, "since the interview to which you once referred, I have been ill—a part of the time, very ill."

"Can it be possible, madam," he said, drawing yet a step nearer, "that I have wronged you—that I have accused you unjustly?"

"If you really believed me capable of what you have charged me with, you have indeed wronged me most grievously," answered the lady, in the same sad tone, and with downcast eyes.

"Then will you—can you forgive me?" exclaimed the young man, carried away by a sudden impulse.

"Willingly—freely," cried Cora, starting from her chair. And with an hysterical sob she threw herself into his arms.

At that moment the door connecting with Mr. Elliston's private apartment noiselessly opened, and a face, as it might have been the face of a fiend, looked out upon the couple, united, to all appearances, in a passionate and loving embrace.

CHAPTER X.

EUGENE RECEIVES A VISITOR.

Eugene Cleveland left his uncle's house in a strange state of mind. His head was dizzy—confused, as though he were drunk with wine.

He had promised to spend the evening with the Fieldings. They had considerately urged him to do so, knowing how lonely he would be, all by himself, in his own desolate home.

But he forgot his promise. He no longer remembered the dear friends of Forty-seventh street.

He went directly to his own apartments, let himself in, threw himself into an easy chair, and thought not of her whom he had lost—not of the sad ceremonies that had been performed in the little New England village that day, but of her whom he had just left, the siren of the Fifth avenue mansion—her whom his uncle called wife!

So absorbed was he that he forgot the flight of time, and when the little clock on the mantel-shelf struck the hour of midnight, he awoke, as it were, with a start, and with a guilty feeling at his heart, slowly prepared to retire.

At length his preparations were made, and extinguishing the light, he got into bed; but alas, not to sleep.

In spite of him, all that had occurred from the time Ray Fielding had confessed to him the loss of the hundred dollars, down to that very hour, passed in review before him, like an endless panorama; for no sooner was the last act in his uncle's library passed, than the first scene with Ray sprang up again.

And now, gradually, he once more began to doubt Cora Elliston—he once more began to look upon her as the author of all his misery—as the murderer of his pure and innocent bride, and then, as he remembered how he had held her, clasped in his arms, as again he felt her hot kisses on his cheek—his eyes, his lips, he shuddered, and, shuddering, slept.

Cornfield Philosophy.

Whom the gods love die young may be very true. If so, the gods certainly show good taste, as most people who are spared are not calculated to inspire love in gods, or anyone else.

"One swallow does not make a spring," sang the ancient proverb. But I have seen one swallow make a man jump as if he had aspring.

You will notice that all the mother-in-law jokes are written by single men. Married men don't dare write them.

"Love thy neighbor as theyself" is next to impossible if she happen to be a toothless and penniless old maid.

"To accept a benefit is to sell your liberty," runs the ancient Latin proverb. Most men I know of, judged by this rule, are the most abject slaves.

Homer said "the learned man is always rich in himself." This is very poor consolation to the man whose great knowledge is discounted 1,000 per cent. by an unappreciative world while he starves.

The Tailor's Little Joke.

"I see," he said, as he entered the tailor's shop, "that you advertise for 100 sewers to go to Chicago."

"Yes," replied the tailor, "they'll be putting in a new sewerage system there soon and they'll want at least a hundred——"

"I'll teach you to joke with a poor man out of work!" cried the newcomer, drawing his knife, for he was a cutter also, and he sprang at the tailor, collared him, laid him out, cut him, basted him and pressed him against the floor until the poor man felt sewer all over and begged for mercy between his pants.—Clothier and Furnisher.

THE old belief in the blindness of the mole—a belief justified by the creature's invisible eyes and odd life—seems to have been partially supplanted by theories of defective vision, one naturalist arguing that the eyes are near-sighted. A thorough microscopical examination has lately been made in Germany by Carl Hess, who fails to confirm either of these views. The mole's eye, though only a twenty-fifth of an inch in diameter—appears to be perfectly developed, and as well adapted for seeing as that of any mammal. The mole doubtless makes use of his eyes when he is above the surface, especially in swimming, and he is able to do this by simply altering the erect position of the hairs which cover and protect the eyes when underground.

RESOLUTIONS ADOPTED

Resolved: That the constitution be amended to be read as follows:

Sec. 11. "The annual re-unions of this association shall be held at Auburn.

Sec. 12. All persons who have resided in northern Indiana for fifty years or in DeKalb county since January 1, 1846, shall be designated as pioneers, and all who resided in northern Indiana for thirty-three years prior to any annual meeting, shall be considered as old settlers, and both classes shall be considered members of this association.

Adopted, after striking out "thirty three" and inserting "forty."

Capt. E. D. Hartman as chairman of the committee on speakers, read the following letters from Ex-Senator Hendry and Hon. J. P. Widney:

Angola, Ind., June 18, 1890.

E. D. Hartman, Esq.,

Dear Sir: Your kind favor of to-day is here. The statement of Judge Powers is correct, and I further stated that I believed that I could arrange my business so as to spend the 19th with old friends in your city. Nothing could give me greater pleasure than to take them once more by the hand. Engagements that I cannot shake off compel me to wait till a future meeting.

Truly Yours,
A. W. Hendry.

Lakeside, Ohio, May 28, 1890.

E. D. Hartman, Esq.,
Auburn, Ind.

Dear Sir: Yours of the 27th inst., received, inviting me to be present at the meeting of the old settlers' organization of your county, held at your place on the 19th of June next. While I greatly appreciate the honor conferred upon me by the committee, through you, in selecting me as one of the speakers at the meeting, yet I am compelled by circumstances to decline your kind invitation. My health has not been good for the past two weeks and though improving somewhat, would not warrant me in promising attendance. Were the circumstances different I would very much like to be there. It would give me great pleasure to meet with you and clasp the hands of the old pioneers whose labors, sufferings and privations have done so much to transform into happy homes and productive farms what was, when I first entered it, fifty four years ago to-day, a tangled wilderness of forest and swamp, inhabited only by wild beasts and roving savages. Your organization recognizes the fact that such men should be remembered and honored not only by contemporaries but by posterity. Soldiers who have toiled together on the march, slept together on the tented field and fought side by side when the air was full of death, love to meet in after years to greet surviving comrades and together to recount how fields were won and how sufferings were endured, as well as to do honor to, and cherish the memory of other comrades who have passed from life, some, perhaps, amid the flame and smoke of the bloody field where their remains lie buried. To do this is commendable, and all honor to the patriots who have offered their lives at the altar to save the country. But your organization recognizes that there are other patriots who deserve well of the country and whose memories should be cherished. Men and women who through a lifetime of toil heroic endurance in labor upon scanty food, of night after night passed in weary watching at the bedside of the sick with no help at hand, and all this that we might have a country worth saving. Many of these noble and self sacrificing ones sleep their last sleep upon the hillsides of the country with no monument to transmit their deeds of heroism to posterity. They live only in the memory of their companions in toil and in suffering. They had a history full of tenderness and of sympathy, of courage under the most trying circumstances, but it has never been written. Many sad memories as well as triumphant victories amid discouraging surroundings have alike been buried with them in the grave and thus pass into oblivion. Your organization avails itself of the only means that can now be used to preserve what is left of the memory of a noble generation that is now passing away, substituting tradition in part for written history. Yearly you meet and pass in review the scenes of years long gone by. Call up a father and mother who sleep in the church yard and again, in memory, hold familiar intercourse. Again, in memory, sit at the table or toil in the field together. Again hear the voice of that christian father invoking the blessing of heaven upon his little ones clustering around the paternal hearth. These hallowed memories not only do deserving honor to those who have passed away, but cultivate and develop all the higher instincts and finer sensibilities of the living, preparing us to live better lives and thus secure, when we have passed away, some tribute of regard.

Believing that you will have a pleasant and profitable meeting

I remain yours truly,
J. P. Widney.

Just before the close of business at the noon hour, President Leighty appointed Cyrus Bowman, S. M. Ralston, J. E. Rose, W. L. A Webster's Dictionary for $4.00.

Knowledge is the power that moves mighty motives to great and noble ends. In carrying this argument out it seems very strange that the people should be denied the privilege of obtaining this knowledge as they have been in years past by means of exorbitant prices, luckily that barrier is broken down, and people can get Webster's dictionary at living prices. Everybody knows what this great and world famed dictionary is, and there are but few persons who have not expressed a desire at some time, to have one. Now is the time to secure this very valuable book, while it is offered at a price that comes within the reach of all. To those desiring an Agency, I will say that I purpose to place an agent in every township in DeKalb county, for the sale of this book, with full control of territory assigned. For price list and full particulars, address L. B. Fretz, Box 437, Auburn, Ind. Please enclose stamp to insure reply. tf

Notice to Settle.

Having sold out my business at the grocery store in the south end, I wish to have my accounts settled. All that are indebted to me are requested to call and fix up their accounts at as early a date as possible. Settlement can be made at the store, or by calling on me at my farm home. Jacob Stamets.

A Successful Combination.

Rings, pools, trusts, combines, monopolies—call you what you will—they are fast increasing throughout the length and breadth of this country. Legislators denounce them and newspapers attack them, but still they seem to flourish. It is gratifying, however, to note that there is at least one combination in this country that meets with the approval of the public, especially of farmers. It is composed not of individuals, but of the following quartet of harvesting machines: Deering Binder, Deering Light Reaper, Deering Giant Mower, and New Deering Mower.

The last quarterly meeting for this year was held in the U. B. last Saturday and Sunday by Rev. D. B. Keller. Eight persons received the ordinance of baptism at the creek, by Rev. J. H. Crouse on Saturday afternoon. On Sunday forenoon three persons united with the church. The elder reported great improvements in his district during the year.

Passing along the street one evening some one said, "You have not been to see my two boys." The reply was. "Have you two boys?" "Yes," the first speaker responded, and upon looking up David Till proved to be the first speaker. This was our first intimation of the double blessing that had come to him. He was smiling all over his face, and was evidently happy, as he should be.

The Presbyterian church was most beautifully decorated last Sunday evening for Children's Day. The house was filled at an early hour. The exercises were very interesting.

Time was when nothing especial seemed to be done for the children, or to interest them, outside of their own homes. Such a thing as holding special services, decorating the place of meeting, was not thought of. Do children appreciate how much is done for them? How good, happy and grateful they ought to be.

Every Lady and Gent

within 50 miles of Auburn is invited to call on F. E. Davenport and try a 25ct. bottle of the great guaranteed remedy for coughs and colds, Dr. Marshall's Lung Syrup, and it is the cheapest and best cough syrup in the world. It is pleasant to take and the first dose gives relief. All we ask is to give it a trial and you will use no other. Supplied by F. E. Davenport.

A snake was discovered coiled up inside a piano at Sulphur Springs, Texas the other day. It fought valiantly before it was dislodged from its musical home and killed.

A Severe Case.

Amos Clark a prominent man of Clarinda, Iowa, says: Through the recommendation of J. P. Burrows of our city, I gave your Dr. Marshall's Lung Syrup a trial in case of severe cough, after using it a short time my cough was cured, which fact gives me such great confidence in its merits that upon every occasion I reccomend it to my neighbors.

Yours,
Amos Clark.

ig show Saturday.

Social at Mrs. Plum's July 1.

No show like the Whitneys. Be here Saturday. Everybody goes.

Ice cream, cake, sandwiches, coffee, or a full dinner at the Sheets building on the Fourth.

A relative of Mr. Boland's people has been visiting them a few days. She resides at Elkhart.

Best performers on the road, are with the great Whitney show that comes here Saturday, June 28.

You can get a good dinner or a good lunch, and so help a good cause, by calling at the Sheets building, July 4.

Mr. H. H. Weaver and her daughter Jessie have returned from Canton, Ohio, where they attended a family reunion.

No meetings of any kind at the Lutheran church next Sunday, on account of the newly laid cement steps and side walk. Children's day exercises will be one week later.

Remember the warm dinner given by the M. E. people, in the Sheets building south of the public square July 4. Or you can get lunch, such as sandwiches, ice cream, coffee, cake, etc.

Rev. G. W. Barr, formerly pastor of the Presbyterian church here, has been visiting in the county a week or two. Mrs. Barr is with him, visiting her people, Henry Wanamaker's family near Newville. They are located at Laramie City, Wyoming, and are well pleased with the country.

We believe the town should collect a license from the parties, who have Bowman's stock on sale at auction. If Mr. Bowman got the money on these sales, we would not object. But he don't. It all goes to outside parties.

Mr. Hub VanDolah, who has been in the employ of the Gandy & Nicky Co., for a number of years, has resigned his position with that firm. He goes from here to Muskegon, Mich., where it is presumed he will engage in similar work. Mr. VanDolah has been a good citizen, always taking great interest in the wellfare and upbuilding of the town, and it is with no little regret that we chronicle his departure. May success crown his effort, is the wish of the Courier.

Married, at the residence of the bride's parents in Butler, Ind., Tuesday, June 24, 1890, by Rev. Dieffanbach, Mr. Elton Campbell, of Ft. Wayne, to Miss Clara Vandusen. Mr. Campbell, was formerly a resident of this place, but for the past two years he has been passenger brakeman on the G. R. & I. R. R, running from Ft. Wayne to Grand Rapids. He and his wife will make their home at 193, East Washington street, Ft. Wayne, for the present, but will soon move to Grand Rapids, Michigan. The Courier extends hearty congratulations to the young couple, wishing them a prosperous and happy journey through life.

It is gratifying to see how sensible the outgoing democratic postmasters have acted. When republicans had to go out, there was a lot of squirming and kicking. Some of them had to be forced out. At Butler in this county, it created a big flurry, and there was a merry war for some time. Now friend Stoy goes out like a well drilled old soldier retiring from a place he knows he can no longer hold. Then look at Jim McDonald, editor of the Ligonier Banner, and H. E. Wadsworth of the Laporte Argus, both giving a handsome newspaper send-off to the men who succeed them. That's manly.

C. P. Houser is furnishing the people here, a large amount of fine strawberries. A visit to his farm the other day, showed the extent of his preparations for small fruit. He has over an acre in strawberries, with nearly as much more that will be in bearing next year. He also has a large area in blackberries, and raspberries, which are just beginning to bear, and will be in fine shape next season. In addition to these he has a fine lot of currant, gooseberry, pear and all other fruit trees under way, as well as a choice lot of evergreen trees, roses, etc. He will soon have not only a prosperous fruit farm, but a pretty home.

The summer issue of the Jenness-Miller Quarterly is just out, and there is no American publication of its kind which can rival it for valuable infomation, artistic excellence, and lowness of price. For five cents one gets 24 pages of reading matter, containing besides an interesting story, several columns of fashion news and all manner of suggestion as to how to dress, how to be beautiful, how to make home attractive, etc,, etc. The ten pages filled with fashion cuts comprise the newest and most attractive of Jenness-Miller styles, and, all in all, the Jenness-Miller Quarterly is for its price the best compendium of woman's news issued in the United States. Subscription price, 20 cents a year, postage paid.

Our life is made up of mistakes and the greatest one I ever made was in not using Looes's Extract of Red Clover long ago. I suffered two years, scarcely knowing a well day, with rheumatism and indigestion, had arrived at the conclusion that I was nothing but a trial to myself and friends. I commenced taking your fluid extract of Red Clover, in fact arrived at the point where I would take anything any one recommended. Saw your ad. and thought I would try a little newspaper recommendation on my own hook. Like all other remedies the first bottle seemed to do me good. But unlike all other remedies I discovered no bad effects from taking it. I am now on my thirteenth bottle and though perfectly well, go on the supposition that if a little does me so much good, will keep it up.

Very truly yours,
J. A. Eberling.
Latonia, Ill.

Chas. H. Ellis, an engineer of the Wabash road was in town Monday. He resides in Detroit, and has been in charge of the two surveying parties now at work on the north, or Montpelier line. He is the engineer who surveyed the road from Detroit to Butler, and has made himself quite familiar with the lay of the ground all over northern Indiana. He says he cannot decide for the company what route they shall take, but it is his duty to look over all the proposed lines, and so assist the company to make its selections. He is free to admit, that the Montpelier line, while a few miles shorter, would compel them to build and operate about twenty-two miles more of new road, than by the Auburn line. Altogether the conversation with this official left the impression here that Auburn stands as good a show as any other point. Let it be distinctly understood, that this point has no fight against any other town in DeKalb county. It has come to a struggle between Auburn and Montpellier only, and we feel sure all the towns in this county, would sooner see Auburn and therefore DeKalb county, get it, than to have it go to Montpelier. As we have already said we believe we have the best route, and that the company take it. But our own people will have to stand united, and must be ready and willing to make some sacrifices.

There will be a meeting in Ft. Wayne, June 30, at which will be exhibited different styles of booths for voting under the new law. There are several kinds now patented. Our own commissioners have purchased a set for this county, at a low figure, the lowest we have heard of, $8 50 for a set. Our county dads are a pretty careful set of men, and spare no pains to get as good bargains for the people, as they possibly can. They ought to have the credit.

Miss Lida Welch, who will be remembered by our grocers, as the lady who traveled for a wholesale tea house, and made regular visits here, died at her former home, Ligonier, June 13, and was buried June 16. Her death was caused by a severe attack of typhoid fever. Miss Welch was in many ways a remarkable woman. She had been a teacher, then became an insurance agent, and was admitted to the bar in Noble county, She succeeded quite well. Then she became a general book agent, traveling to establish local agents as she did here. Later, she traveled as state agent for a tea house. She had accumulated quite a property, which she informed us at one of her late visits here, she had invested profitably in Chicago real estate. She was an old family acquaintance of ours, and highly esteemed.

IT was shown at a recent Methodist conference in Maine that the average pay of the preachers in its jurisdiction was 81 cents a day.

IT has been said that Prince Bismarck treats his wife with contempt. That is incorrect; he married her for love and has always had a profound respect for her. In 1846 he wrote to his sister, the Countess Arnim: "If his satanic majesty does not meddle in the affair I have decided to take unto myself a wife."

A MEXICAN shepherd made a bet with his employer that his dog would stay alone on the ranch for five days, taking the sheep out to pasture in the morning and penning them at night. The dog was instructed by his master, plenty of meat was hung up within reach, the shepherd went off, the dog faithfully discharged his duties, and the bet was won.

ACCORDING to the results of an inquiry instituted by the French government there are at present in France 2,000,000 households in which there has been no child; 2,500,000 in which there was one; 2,500,000, two children; 1,500,000, three; about 1,000,000, four; 550,000, five; 330,000, six; and 200,000, seven or more.

IT is strange that the use of points for purposes of punctuation should be such a comparatively modern invention. Of the four generally used points only the period (.) dates earlier than the fifteenth century. The colon (:) is said to have been first introduced about 1485, the comma (,) some thirty-five years later, and the semi-colon (;) about 1570.

GEORGE P. CRAIG, of Gwinnett, Ga., has two hogs that perform the office of a calf to perfection. Mr. Craig had been complaining that his cows were falling short of milk for several weeks, and upon close examination, to his astonishment, he found these roguish hogs had been imbibing the milk of the cows, both remaining in the same lot together at night.

MORE than a century before the Christian era there were many beautiful cups in China. The Portuguese, it is said, introduced the ware into Europe about 1518, calling it "China," after the country so long pre-eminent in its production. The first English manufactory of earthenware found place at Stratford-de-Bow, in Elizabeth's reign. The Shakspeare jug is the best known of Elizabethan pottery.

A FORTUNE awaits the ingenious man who can make a watch spring that won't break. Every now and then some one comes to the front with the claim that he has made the discovery, but all have so far failed. The breaking of watch springs is largely due to electrical influences. After a watch spring has been demagnetized it is less liable to break, of course. But to say that a watch spring will not break or that some will break, is nonsense.

A SCHOOL of journalism has been established in England by two young ladies, both being competent and experienced journalists. Pupils are received on the apprenticeship system and required to pay a fee on entering the office, where they will be trained as compositors, proof-readers, short-hand writers, reporters and journalists. Toward the end of the three years for which they are bound, they receive a certain fixed salary.

FARMERS in the neighborhood of Fort Abraham Lincoln are alarmed at the proposition to abandon the fort at the present time. They say they settled in the country with the understanding that they were to be protected against the raids of hostile Indians, thousands of whom are camped within a day's journey of the fort, and that if the protection is withdrawn they will be compelled to abandon their farms. A petition will be forwarded to the War Department.

AN inventor has patented a process by which he claims there will be hereafter no end of hemlock bark. The trees are to be peeled standing by means of ladders, beginning at the top of the trunk. As the peeler descends he removes the bark, and immediately covers the trunk with a preparation of rubber dissolved in sulphuric acid. Thus protected, the tree not only will not die but reproduce its bark within one year as thick as before, and of a superior quality for tanning purposes.

SOME strange judicial proceedings are reported from Queensland, Australia. The presiding judge was in a hurry to get away, and tried cases continually for thirty-six hours. At one stage all the available jurors were occupied in considering verdicts, and not to lose time, the judge ordered the doors of the court-room to be locked, and then impounded every person in the audience to serve. Many of the jurors were so exhausted by continuous service that they fell asleep in their seats, but the trials went on.

WE make a fatal mistake to devote the whole of our strength and energy to wooing prosperous circumstances and warding off adverse ones. Much of it must of course be thus employed, but enough of it should be reserved for the reception, in the right spirit and with the right aims, of whatever comes. Bacon tells us that the virtue of prosperity is temperance and the virtue of adversity is fortitude; but it depends upon ourselves whether we gather those and other precious fruits from either of those plants.

"NEVER put a bird in the window!" says Olive Thorn Miller in the Christian Union. "I rarely go into the street in summer, or even on a mild day in winter, that I do not see unfortunate canaries hung in the window. Even if the sun is not broiling the brains under the little yellow cap, a draught is blowing all the time over the delicate body. People have been told a thousand times that they must not put a bird in the draught, yet how few remember that there is always a draught in an open window!"

AN official report shows that there are 283 Indian schools in the Dominion. Of this number 84 are managed by the Church of England, 80 Roman Catholic, 33 Methodist, 10 Presbyterian and 16 undenominational. The funds for their support are divided as follows: Roman Catholic, $257,600; Church of England, $186,761; Presbyterian, $56,439; non-denominational, $51,941; Methodists, $21,541; total, $574,285. The Church of England, the Presbyterian Church and the Methodist Church supplemented the grant quite materially, but the Catholic Church is not known to make any expenditure for the schools.

SAYS a house decorator in the Washington Star: "You can bid good-by to carrara marble. It was all very well up to a few years since, but the developments of our own land and of Mexico have driven it to the wall. Its most formidable foe is the Mexican onyx. This, although it looks soft and creamy, is as hard as steel, and when once polished is almost indestructible. At present it is used in small quantities, and is chiefly known from its white and yellow varieties. More remarkable than the onyx is the petrified wood of Arizona and New Mexico. It comes in all colors, and is superior in beauty and elegance to most of the moss agates used in jewelry. It takes a magnificent polish and is not so costly but that it can be used for mantelpieces, bar fronts, washstands, ash receivers, table tops and bureau slabs. The supply is inexhaustible."

A Fresh Agent.

"When much younger than I am now," said an old newspaper man, "I sold sewing machines. You may rest assured I was a trifle fresh, and suffered therefor, as the following adventure will show: Near the close of a hot August day I was driving through the little village of G—— to the town where I made my headquarters. Suddenly a big black cloud appeared in the sky, and when my played-out horse had covered half a mile the rain came dancing down. I had two machines on and no blanket. To save myself and machines from getting drenched, I drove for the only house within a radius of a mile. I was a sorry sight when I reached that old country mansion half hidden by tall maples. Jumping out, I knocked at the door and explained that I would like to leave my machines temporarily, in order to save them from the storm. Before I made the request I discovered that the young lady who responded to my knock was one with whom, much against her will, I had left a machine on trial a month or two before, and had only taken it back after repeated protestations on her part that she did not want it. You understand, we used to get a machine into a house by representing that we would leave it on trial. But once we got it into the house we insisted on its being bought, and used every persuasive art to accomplish that result. Frequently this was very embarrassing to the lady of the house, and she never forgave us for the annoyance of leaving the machine for weeks, and asking her every other day if she wouldn't buy, when she had emphatically declared she would not. Now was the turn of the young lady in the old-fashioned house to get square. And although the rain had nearly washed the machine out of the wagon, she slammed the door in my face, and then sat by the window enjoying my discomfiture to her heart's content. As I prepared to drive away, I turned my head, and beheld her pretty face bubbling over with smiles. When I reached N—— I was a sight to behold. But the experience cured my freshness."—Boston Globe.

Timepieces.

Looking in the familiar face of one's watch, it seems strange that the almost universal pocket companion of our day should have been unknown at the time of the Reformation. The most ancient specimen of the article was "built" in 1541. It is now in the possession of an English baronet. It is a clumsy concern, about the size of a dessert plate.

Clocks came in about the middle of the thirteenth century, and took the place of the simple instruments that measured time by the running of sand and the trickling of water. Before these, the hours were marked, on bright days, by the shadows cast by the sun, and guessed at by night and when the sun was obscured by clouds. At what a rate the mechanic arts have progressed since Demosthenes requested that the clepsydra (or water-dripping time-measurer) might be stopped, in order that he might continue his oration! For be it remarked that the prudent Greeks timed their orators, thereby escaping the modern bore of being talked at by speechifiers who matched their tongues against old Chronos.

TARIFF AND SILVER.

DISASTROUS RESULTS OF REPUBLICAN LEGISLATION.

How the Republican Party Has Handled These Two Important Subjects to Build Up One Class of People at the Expense of All Others, the Farmers Especially.

[Speech of Senator Jas. K. Jones, of Arkansas, in the United States Senate.]

Since 1873 the Republican party as a party has set its face like a flint against silver, just as steadily and persistently as it has championed the tariff, and for exactly the same purpose. It is true that in 1878 there was a temporary deviation from this rule, but that was the result of individual action, and was against the general party policy, and resulted from a wholesome dread of a thoroughly aroused public opinion.

"The ox knoweth his owner and the ass his master's crib," and those who have had their private fortunes swelled by the unequal operation of unjust laws have in turn had the "fat fried" out of them to secure Republican success, and as a reward have dictated the course of economic legislation, including silver.

By land grants, by special privileges, by the operation of the tariff, and by silver laws these have reaped where they have not sown. They have piled up overgrown fortunes, while those from whom they have taken them have grown poorer.

There is a most extraordinary spirit of unrest pervading the entire people. The farmers, that class which, in all the great North and West has uncomplainingly borne the burdens made by tariff taxation, have borne the increase of their burdens made by demonetization of silver, relying with uncomplaining and unshaken faith on the assurance of their political leaders that their hardship would soon pass away, and great prosperity would be sure to come to them as it had to the manufacturers. These are at last driven to the wall. The mortgages cannot be met. Instead of getting better it is growing constantly worse, and they have at last stopped and demanded an accounting.

The war on silver inaugurated in this country in 1873 has served more to depress values than all else. The effect has been steady, and is now being felt all over the country.

There has never been in the history of this country so much of wealth and of distress as there is now. Some classes are exceedingly prosperous, while the masses are suffering such straits in their finances as was never known in this country, and such as in the natural order of things could never have occurred.

The farmers constitute the largest class of our industrial population. They have more money invested in their calling than any other class. They follow God's laws in the absolute creation of the food and clothing products of the world. Our wealth, considered from a national standpoint, is fabulous and is increasing at a rate that astonishes mankind, and it would seem that with this condition of things all our people should be prosperous; but the lamentable fact is that the great agency for this production, the great class which is producing this result, feel no part of this marvelous prosperity, but, on the contrary, they year by year feel more and more heavily the weight of some strange, mysterious, and unseen power that holds them down and makes their lives a burden.

It is not their fault, and, in the language of Colonel Polk, "it is not God's fault;" and it is not an accident. We have a country unsurpassed on the globe. There was never in the former history of the country anything approaching the present condition of things. Our people are the same, the country is the same. There has been no great social change to produce such remarks. Why, then, is it that the present extraordinary condition exists? Why is it that at a time when the world is making progress such as was never dreamed of before, while the condition of wealthy classes is improving at a rate never equaled, the poor do not keep pace in improvement?

And why is it that while there is an evident improvement of one sort or another in almost all classes the farmers, so far from improving at all, seem to retrograde? Results have causes, and the economic methods of the political party which has controlled this country for twenty-five years have caused all this. And while they have robbed the masses by the operation of their other economic laws they have aggravated the robbery and made it absolutely unendurable by their management of the laws regulating money. These two, their tariff laws and their silver laws, have been the twin plunderers of the poor for the benefit of the rich. Seven million six hundred and seventy thousand four hundred and ninety-three farmers have been by the operation of these laws deprived of their own hard earnings for the benefit of less than 14,500 mill owners for years.

Careful calculations have been made from statistics actually taken from the official records of the Government, and the amount of this wholesale legal robbery computed and shown to be more than $500,000,000 each year—this by the direct robbery of protection, while the exaggeration of the evil caused by interference with money cannot be estimated, but has been faintly suggested already.

"In union there is strength" is as true of individuals and classes as it is of states. Almost all classes and callings are organized, and have been for years. Ever since I have been connected with politics I have believed there was no hope of relief for the farmers until they followed the general example and organized, and I have urged this in my speeches in the House and here, as well as at home and on the stump.

Every new popular movement is almost sure to make mistakes. Inexperienced leaders will naturally fall into errors. Such movements, too, are always, especially at first, the prey of demagogues. The Republican party, which has always had cause to dread an awakening among the masses to the fact that they have been steadily robbed under the forms of law for a quarter of a century, has been active in inducing every such movement to destroy itself by attempting the organization of a new political party, instead of allying itself with the natural enemy of Republican methods, and the only enemy that that party fears is the great Democratic party.

I am rejoiced that at last the farmers seem thoroughly aroused and are organizing. I hope that they will keep clear of party politics, avoid the seduction of demagogues, and keep steadily on in the great purpose of educating the farmers to a correct and just understanding and appreciation of the difficulties under which they labor, and to a patient and careful investigation of the causes of their trouble. That with a broad and catholic spirit of toleration they will permit the widest range of honest differences of opinion, feeling confident that after free discussion and a full understanding the truth will prevail.

Without undertaking to control the votes of anybody, if they will only bring out the truth clear and strong their members will generally vote in the direction of their own interest, and for that party and those men who are advocating those principles most consonant with liberty and good government. There are but two great parties; one or the other will control the country, and that party whose principles of government are most in accord with the principles of justice ought to be supported.

When the present great movement takes this line of procedure and closely adheres to it, whether called the Grange, the Wheel, or the Alliance, its results will be marvelous, and the good it will do the cause of the farmers, good government and freedom will be incalculable.

A Startling Possibility.

A Norwegian scientist claims that the perfume of a flower represents a force that might be made to explode a cannon. The next thing we know, somebody will be utilizing the smell of limberger cheese to run machinery. It is certainly strong enough.—The Ram's Horn.

HOW WE ARE TAXED.

[From the Chicago Herald.]

The present tariff on imported farm product is useless to men who grow more than the country can consume, and who must look abroad for that market which the protectionists promised them at home. Last year we sent abroad $42,000,000 worth of wheat, $45,000,000 worth of wheat flour, $33,000,000 worth of corn, $17,000,000 worth of cattle, more than $2,500,000 worth of butter, and $8,000,000 worth of cheese. The farmer is to be protected by the McKinley bill from competition with similar foreign products. Having supplied his own market, protection having failed to give him that generous demand which it promised him, he sends this large surplus abroad; and yet Mr. McKinley has faith enough in the farmer's ignorance to tell him that he must have more protection, that he is suffering from foreign competition in the visionary home market.

We imported last year less than one-thirtieth as many cattle as we exported; less than $4,000 worth of wheat, about $1,200 worth of corn, less than $6,000 worth of wheat flour, only $18,000 worth of butter, less than one-fifth as much cheese as we exported. As to potatoes, we exported about as much as we imported. In other words, all our agricultural importations are in inconsiderable quantities along our borders, and constitute a smaller trade than might have been expected to go on between neighboring farmers.

The attempt to delude the farmer is likely to be as useless as it is dishonest. It is a desperate effort to mend the chains of a slavery which were first voluntarily assumed and which are now rapily breaking.

Some valuable testimony showing that protected manufacturers are selling their products abroad for lower prices than at home is found in a pamphlet issued by the New York Reform Club. There are two journals in New York devoted to the export trade in American manufactures, the American Mail and Export Journal and the Australasian and South American. They are not allowed to circulate in this country, and the reason assigned is that the prices quoted for export are considerably lower than those the commodities command in this country. The data obtained from advertisements and in other ways show that wheel hoe, cultivator, rake and plow that sells in the home market for $11 costs foreigners only $8.40; a cultivator which is sold for $8 at home goes abroad billed $6.85; another grade sells at $7.20 at home and $4.50 to go abroad. On plows the discount to foreigners is less, being 10 per cent. Thus a plow that costs $5.60 at home is sold to go abroad at $5.04; a two-gang plow, four horses, all steel, $58.80 at home, $52.92 abroad. On shovels the difference is greater. A dozen shovels that are sold at home for $9.20 are sold at $7.86 for export—a difference of about 15 per cent.

There are many other articles which are sold for export much cheaper than for sale at home. A typewriter which costs $100 at home can be bought for $60 to be shipped abroad. Not to multiply individual instances farther, it may be stated generally that the prices are from 10 to 30 per cent. cheaper for export than for sale at home.

In order to reward the Tin Plate Association, the money of which, distributed by John Jarrett, defeated William R. Morrison, the Republicans propose an average increase of over 125 per cent. on all forms of tinned plate. The increase on roofing plate is over 100 per cent.; on the plate used in the workingman's dinner pail and other tinware it runs from 100 to nearly 300 per cent. The object of this tax is not to "protect an industry," but to create a monopoly. Tin plate can be made in the United States at a profit, but the iron barons of Pennsylvania refuse to make it unless they can make more on it than they can on those articles on which they have already a monopoly under the tariff. In order to induce them to make it this bill proprposes to prohibit the purchase of foreign tinned plate, and thus give them such a monopoly as will enable them to fix such prices as they please in the entire American market. Every dinner pail, every tin pan, every package of canned goods purchased after the passage of this bill will pay this tax—not to the Treasury, for it is the intention that the Government shall not have a dollar of the tax. The iron barons of Pennsylvania are to have the whole of it. They are empowered to collect for themselves a tax of from $2.43 to $9 on every box of tinned sheet-iron used in the United States, and in order that they may collect it the tariff duty is adjusted to prohibit Americans from buying elsewhere. The whole bill is framed on this principle, but the dinner-pail tax is a peculiarly outrageous illlustration of it.

The existing tariff is so flagrantly inequitable, partial, and sectional that it is a wonder how the thrifty grabbers of the benefits can pocket the enormous profits it yields them without an accusing blush of shame. It is called a policy for the protection of American manufactures, but it was intended to protect, and does protect, only certain kinds of manufactures. It is called a policy for the benefit of American labor; but if it really benefits any American labor at all, it is only that labor employed in certain favored industries. It is called an American policy; but its advantages are reaped, and were intended to be reaped, chiefly by the nine manufacturing States in the north-eastern corner of the Union. The States are the six New England States and New York, New Jersey, and Pennsylvania. The statesmen of that section contrived the tariff schedule so as to yield enormous benefits to their special interests at the expense of the other States by protecting all the particular manufactures they are engaged in, and a few in some other States tacked on for a show of decency; and a comparison of our manufacturing statistics with the tariff schedule will show how effectually they accomplished their task.

The Linen Trade Association of New York has issued a circular to the dry goods trade showing what the effect of the McKinley tariff would be on linen goods. The circular says that the bill proposes to raise the duty on most of the linen goods imported from 35 per cent. to 50 per cent. ad valorem, and 3 cents per pound additional. This would make the following changes in the cost of goods:

A Horse's Sense of Smell.

A horse's weak point is his eyesight. Nearly all horses seem to be near-sighted, and that is the probable reason why they start and tremble at a piece of paper rolling in the road, an old stump by the wayside, or anything, no matter how ordinarily it may be, if it happens to be beyond the limited range of their vision. The inherent weakness of their eyes is also proven by the number of blind horses.

But if the horse's eyesight is weak, his sense of smell is highly developed. He will leave musty hay untouched in his rack, however hungry. He will not drink of water objectionable to his questioning sniff, or from a bucket which some odor makes offensive, however thirsty.

His intelligent nostril will widen, quiver and query over the daintiest bit offered by the fairest of hands, with coaxings that would make a mortal shut his eyes and swallow a nauseous mouthful at a gulp.

A mare is never satisfied by either sight or whinny that her colt is really her own, until she has a certified nasal certificate to the fact. A blind horse, now living, will not allow the approach of any stranger without showing signs of anger not safely to be disregarded. The distinction is evidently made by his sense of smell, and at a considerable distance.

Blind horses, as a rule, will gallop wildly about a pasture without striking the surrounding fence. The sense of smell informs them of its proximity. Others will, when loosened from the stable, go directly to the gate or bars opened to their accustomed feeding-grounds, and when desiring to return, after hours of careless wandering, will distinguish one outlet and patiently await its opening. The odor of that particular part of the fence is their pilot to it.

The horse, in browsing, or while gathering herbage with his lips, is guided in its choice of proper food entirely by its nostrils. Blind horses do not make mistakes in their diet. In the temple of Olympus a bronze horse was exhibited, at the sight of which six real horses experienced the most violent emotions.

Ælian judiciously observes that the most perfect art could not imitate nature sufficiently well to produce so strong an illusion. Like Pliny and Pausanius, he consequently affirms that "in casting the statue a magician had thrown hippomanes upon it," which, by the odor of the plant, deceived the horses, and therein we have the secret of the miracle.

The scent alone of a buffalo robe will cause many horses to evince lively terror, and the floating scent of a railroad train will frighten some long after the locomotive is out of sight and hearing.

The Moonshiner Has Gone.

The rocky fastnesses of Tennessee's mountains were once famous for the moonshining of its inhabitants.

Moonshining was not followed for purposes of revenue, the product was not intended for surreptitious carriage to the marts of commerce.

The business was not of gain by sales in populous sections.

The mountaineer loved the fiery liquid. Its fragrant, enticing odor delighted his senses, and its soft and oily flow tickled his palate. He had few of the luxuries of this life, and his chief engagement and pleasure was to sip the distilled nectarine of his grain and fruit. Money was little known to him. The price of drink was a fabulous sum and far beyond his reach. His fathers made their own store of liquor, and he came naturally by what he esteemed his right. Internal revenue laws forbade his humble still and he was driven to covert retreat, there in the solitude to surreptitiously carry on the conversion of his grain into mountain dew.

Two, three or more would be joint owners of the still. While some fired the furnaces and attended the crude appliance, others would guard the avenues of approach, and lurking behind tree or rock keep a sharp watch for the prying marshal.

The moonshiner had no reluctance in the killing of a revenue officer. He was an invader of rights, an enemy of homes—a spy. Many a poor revenue officer fell a victim to the rifle shot of a moonshiner.

Now all is changed. The advance of the prospector, the miner, the boomer, has overrun every mountain and penetrated every valley. Towns have sprung up magically in the depth of the woodland and before the march of progress, the mine, the furnace, the sawmill, the moonshiner has deserted his last retreat, and the business has fallen into the hands of a different class of people. Gain alone is the object. They pander to the vicious elements of society, and offer no armed resistance to the revenue officials—they buy them. The old moonshiner has passed away; he has succumbed to the inevitable and lives only in fiction.

Directions for Taking Beecham's Pills.

In the first place I must caution all who take my pills to abstain from all intoxicating drinks, or they will not do much good. But should anyone be laboring under the influence of drink, let him be ever so ill, or his head ever so bad, I would advise him to take six or eight of my pills at bed time, and he will be all right the following morning. It may appear to many that the dose here recommended is too large; but I would remind invalids that except the pills be taken in proper doses they will do no good, and experience will teach all who use them that the doses here recommended, instead of being too large, are, in many obstinate and severe cases, not large enough, and many strong persons, in very sudden and obstinate disorders, will derive benefit in a few minutes after the first dose by taking a larger dose than here mentioned.

These excellent pills are composed entirely of medicinal herbs; they are warranted free from mercury or other poisonous substance. They can harm no one, but may be given to an infant or to the aged and infirm with perfect safety. They cleanse the stomach and bowels, and clear the blood, giving tone and energy to the muscles, and invigorating the whole nervous system.

Beecham's Pills are prepared only by myself, Thomas Beecham, St. Helens, Lancashire, England.

Cheering Outlook.

"Theatrical troupe in town?" asked a native of a small Texas town of a drug dealer.

"Yes, so I heard this afternoon" was the reply.

"Are they going to burst into the burning eloquence of the immortal bard?" asked the young man, who is somewhat addicted to literary pursuits himself.

"I don't know about that," replied the druggist, "but I heard the landlord of the hotel where they are stopping say that he thought they would burst into something before they managed to pay their bills and get their baggage away."

NERVOUS DISEASES.

As a cure for every class of Nervous Diseases, no remedy has been able to compare with the Nervine Tonic, which is very pleasant and harmless in all its effects upon the youngest child or the oldest and most delicate individual. Nine-tenths of all the ailments to which the human family is heir, are dependent on nervous exhaustion and impaired digestion. When there is an insufficient supply of nerve food in the blood, a general state of debility of the brain, spinal marrow and nerves is the result. Starved nerves, like starved muscles, become strong when the right kind of food is supplied, and a thousand weaknesses and ailments disappear as the nerves recover. As the nervous system must supply all the power by which the vital forces of the body are carried on, it is the first to suffer for want of perfect nutrition. Ordinary food does not contain a sufficient quantity of the kind of nutriment necessary to repair the wear our present mode of living and labor imposes upon the nerves. For this reason it becomes necessary that a nerve food be supplied. This recent production of the South American Continent has been found, by analysis, to contain the essential elements out of which nerve tissue is formed. This accounts for its magic power to cure all forms of nervous derangements.

CRAWFORDSVILLE, IND., Aug. 20, '86.

To the Great South American Medicine Co.:

DEAR GENTS:—I desire to say to you that I have suffered for many years with a very serious disease of the stomach and nerves. I tried every medicine I could hear of but nothing done me any appreciable good until I was advised to try your Great South American Nervine Tonic and Stomach and Liver Cure, and since using several bottles of it I must say that I am surprised at its wonderful powers to cure the stomach and general nervous system. If every-one knew the value of this remedy as I do, you would not be able to supply the demand.

J. A. HARDEE,
Ex-Treas. Montgomery Co.

Mr. Solomon Bond, a member of the Society of Friends, of Darlington, Ind., says: "I have used twelve bottles of The Great South American Nervine Tonic and Stomach and Liver Cure, and I consider that every bottle did for me one hundred dollars worth of good, because I have not had a good night's sleep for twenty years on account of irritation, pain, horrible dreams, and general nervous prostration, which has been caused by chronic indigestion and dyspepsia of the stomach and by a broken down condition of my nervous system. But now I can lie down and sleep all night as sweetly as a baby, and I feel like a sound man. I do not think there has ever been a medicine introduced into this country which will at all compare with this Nervine Tonic as a cure for the stomach."

A SWORN CURE FOR ST. VITUS'S DANCE OR CHOREA.

CRAWFORDSVILLE, IND., May 19, 1886.

My daughter, twelve years old, had been afflicted for several months with Chorea or St. Vitus's Dance. She was reduced to a skeleton, could not walk, could not talk, could not swallow anything but milk. I had to handle her like an infant. Doctor and neighbors gave her up. I commenced giving her the South American Nervine Tonic; the effects were very surprising. In three days she was rid of the nervousness, and rapidly improved. Four bottles cured her completely. I think the South American Nervine the grandest remedy ever discovered, and would recommend it to every-one.

My daughter, eleven years old, was severely afflicted with St. Vitus's Dance or Chorea. We gave her three and one-half bottles of South American Nervine and she is completely restored. I believe it will cure every case of St. Vitus's Dance. I have kept it in my family for two years, and am sure it is the greatest remedy in the world for Indigestion and Dyspepsia, all forms of Nervous Disorders and Failing Health from whatever cause.

INDIGESTION AND DYSPEPSIA.

The Great South American Nervine Tonic

Which we now offer you, is the only absolutely unfailing remedy ever discovered for the cure of Indigestion, Dyspepsia, and the vast train of symptoms and horrors which are the result of disease and debility of the human stomach. No person can afford to pass by this jewel of incalculable value who is affected by disease of the Stomach, because the experience and testimony of thousands go to prove that this is the ONE and ONLY ONE great cure in the world for this universal destroyer. There is no case of unmalignant disease of the stomach which can resist the wonderful curative powers of the South American Nervine Tonic.

Harriet E. Hall, of Waynetown, Ind., says: "I owe my life to The Great South American Nervine. I had been in bed for five months from the effects of an exhausted Stomach, Indigestion, Nervous Prostration and a general shattered condition of my whole system. Had given up all hopes of getting well. Had tried three doctors with no relief. The first bottle of the Nervine Tonic improved me so much that I was able to walk about, and a few bottles cured me entirely. I believe it the best medicine in the world. I can not recommend it too highly."

Mrs. M. Russell, Sugar Creek Valley, Ind., writes: "I have used several bottles of The South American Nervine Tonic, and will say I consider it the best medicine in the world. I believe it saved the lives of two of my children. They were down and nothing appeared to do them any good until I procured this remedy. It was very surprising how rapidly they both improved on its use. I recommend the medicine to all my neighbors.

Mrs. Ella A. Bratton, of New Ross, Indiana, says: "I can not express how much I owe to the Nervine Tonic. My system was completely shattered, appetite gone, was coughing and spitting up blood; am sure I was in the first stages of consumption, an inheritance handed down through several generations. I began taking the Nervine Tonic and continued its use for about six months, and am entirely cured. It is the grandest remedy for nerves, stomach and lungs I have ever seen.

Ed. J. Brown, Druggist, of Edina, Mo., writes: "My health had been very poor for years, was coughing severely. I only weighed 110 pounds when I commenced using South American Nervine. I have used two bottles and now weigh 130 pounds, and am much stronger and better than have been for five years. Am sure would not have lived through the Winter had I not secured this remedy. My customers see what it has done for me and buy it eagerly. It gives great satisfaction."

THE AMERICAN EAGLE.

BY MRS. F. M. HOWARD.

MR. BUNCOMBE had received an invitation to make a speech at the coming Fourth of July celebration.

So had hundreds, perhaps thousands, of other men, but it is to be hoped that the honor did not have the same effect upon the other thousands; for, from the hour when the committee on program waited upon Mr. Buncombe with the request, he had begun to puff up and enlarge until there seemed to be a coming necessity for a new suit of clothes at the least, if not an entire change of residence and occupation.

He was not a domestic angel at any time, and poor, gentle Mrs. Buncombe immediately descended to a lower scale in his estimation than ever before, while the junior Buncombes were made to stand around with a firmness hitherto unparalleled in the domestic economy.

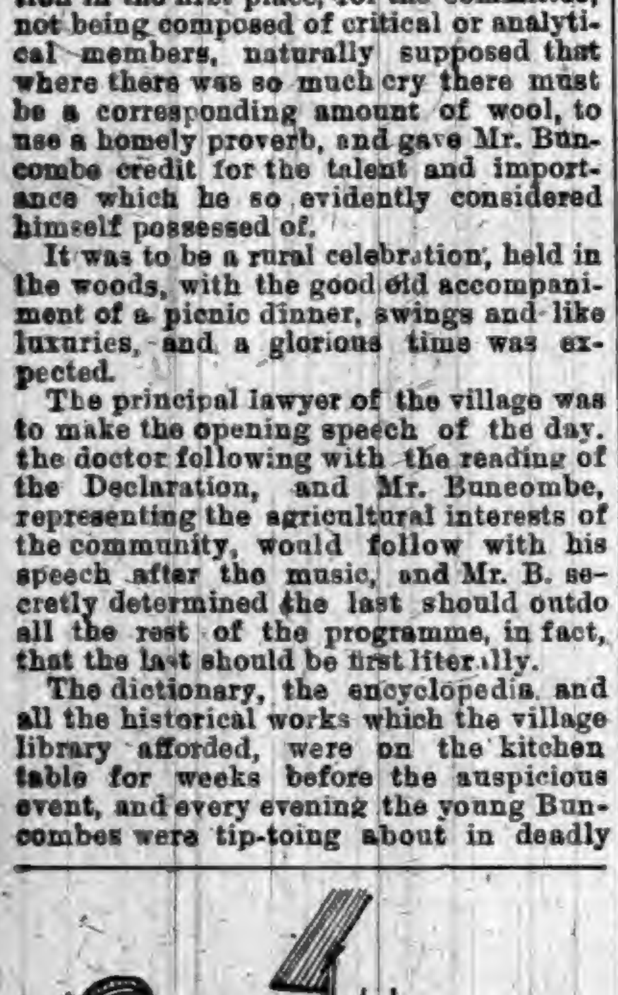
He had a gait of swelling importance at any time, and now his spinal column seemed in danger from the strain put upon it, as Mr. Buncombe swelled and strutted, while his eyes had a far away look, as if the great mind was soaring off into space in search of wonderful and unapproachable thoughts for the coming oration.

It was this important gait and manner of his which had gained him the invitation in the first place, for the committee, not being composed of critical or analytical members, naturally supposed that where there was so much cry there must be a corresponding amount of wool, to use a homely proverb, and gave Mr. Buncombe credit for the talent and importance which he so evidently considered himself possessed of.

It was to be a rural celebration, held in the woods, with the good old accompaniment of a picnic dinner, swings and like luxuries, and a glorious time was expected.

The principal lawyer of the village was to make the opening speech of the day, the doctor following with the reading of the Declaration, and Mr. Buncombe, representing the agricultural interests of the community, would follow with his speech after the music, and Mr. B. secretly determined the last should outdo all the rest of the programme, in fact, that the last should be first literally.

The dictionary, the encyclopedia and all the historical works which the village library afforded, were on the kitchen table for weeks before the auspicious event, and every evening the young Buncombes were tip-toing about in deadly fear of "disturbin' pa," until such time as they were sternly ordered off to bed, until the oration was finished and its commitment to memory began.



"A MOMENT LATER MR. BUNCOMBE EMERGED FROM THE BARN."

"Pap's a recitin'," said Johnny to Philander, as they came within hearing of a sonorous voice out in the barn, affirming that "The great cause of American liberty has been gloriously—ahem!—ah!" Evidently Mr. Buncombe had referred to his MS., which he always carried with him now.

"So there, you unregenerate heart——" Evidently, also, the cows' views on the subject of American liberties had been enlarged, and a moment later Mr. Buncombe emerged from the barn with an empty pail and clothing very much bespattered with milk, oratory and milking, seemingly two distinct occupations which did not meet harmoniously.

Mrs. Buncombe meekly wiped him off, while Mr. B. mentally resolved to seek a new sphere of action at no distant day—a wider sphere, better suited to his talents, and where cows are not a disturbing element.

There were savory smells proceeding from the Buncombe kitchen the day preceding the picnic.

Mr. B. was not generally a prodigal provider, but the circumstances were such in this case that the paternal purse-strings were unloosed to an unprecedented extent, and Mrs. Buncombe was almost bewildered under the fire of raisins, citron, spices and other good things which the grocer's delivery clerk rained in upon her.

"Say, Johnny, yer don't s'pose pap's goin' ter die," said Philander, anxiously.

"Naw, not 'nless that air speech sticks 'n 'is throat 'n chokes 'im," replied Johnny, irreverently, smacking his lips prospectively at sight of the unwonted dainties. "Bet there's big words nuff in it to choke a n'ox."

Mrs. Buncombe, dressed in her best Sunday delaine, climbed into the big wagon the morning of the Fourth, followed by Johnny, Philander and little Matilda, and last but not least, the clothes basket full of good things, which was carefully hoisted in by Mr. Buncombe himself, who was gotten up in a style befitting the importance and solemnity of the occasion.

Very few words were exchanged on the way to the picnic ground, Mr. B's mind being evidently employed in rehearsing the intricate portions of his speech, as he sat bolt upright, holding the reins with all the dignity a little at variance with the meek and humble characters of old Doll and Bess, ambling along in equine ignorance of the fact that they bore an orator of the day in their rear.

Mr. Buncombe formed an ornamental addition to the select crowd gathered on the platform, as his stately head towered up from his stiff collar and ample cravat, his broad brow bared to the July breeze, and his broad smile beaming upon his fellow-citizens in a most condescending and patronizing manner.

"Thet yer man hain't got curvatoor of the spine, hez he?" remarked an honest farmer to another, as he caught a side view of Mr. Buncombe's portly figure. "'Pears like his back bone's kinder drawn back somehow?"

The lawyer gave a terse and pointed speech, ending by wittily remarking that he presumed his audience were as hungry as he was himself, and he would not detain them with a long speech within the very shadow of the tempting tables. The doctor rattled through the Declaration with all the speed allowable, and the band played fast and furious upon the "Star Spangled Banner," and then Mr. Buncombe arose, and with a mighty ahem! posed before his audience, ran his fingers through his stubbly hair, and began:

"Ahem! Friends and fellow-citizens, that proud bird of freedom, the representative of our American liberties, the American eagle——"

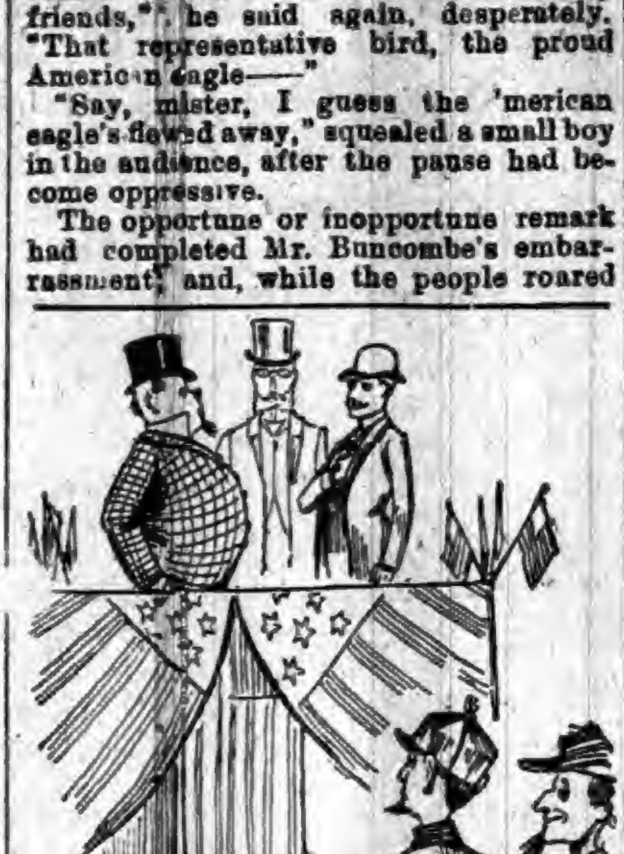
Poor Mr. Buncombe, he was unused to public speaking, and that terrible malady known as stage fright seized him in its relentless grip, and his speech flew away from him to the four winds of heaven in the twinkling of an eye.

He turned a vivid red, ran his hands through his hair with desperate energy, and began again. "Dear friends and fellow-citizens, that proud bird of liberty, the representative of our American freedom—the American eagle——" Just then an owl, probably awakened from his noonday nap by this invasion of his domain, solemnly inquired, "Whoo, whoo?"

The audience tittered, and Mr. Buncombe turned a shade redder. "My friends," he said again, desperately. "That representative bird, the proud American eagle——"

"Say, mister, I guess the 'merican eagle's flewed away," squealed a small boy in the audience, after the pause had become oppressive.

The opportune or inopportune remark had completed Mr. Buncombe's embarrassment; and, while the people roared with laughter, Mr. Buncombe staggered back to his seat, and mopped the perspiration of defeat from his brow, and wished for a few mountains to cover him from the gaze of that giggling audience.



"THAT YER MAN HAIN'T GOT CURVATOUR OF THE SPINE, HES HE?"

"Pap's gone an' done it now," whispered Philander in Johnny's ear.

"Served 'im right," returned Johnny. "He'd no business to a-felt so blamed big over it."

"Our esteemed fellow citizen, Mr. Buncombe, desires me to say that, owing to a sudden attack of illness, he will be unable to finish the interesting and eloquent oration which we had hoped to hear," said the lawyer, blandly, as he came to the front, obligingly crooking his elbows and spreading his coat-tails as much as possible to screen his esteemed fellow citizen from the gaze of the laughing crowd.

In fact, Mr. Buncombe was sick—sick of public speaking, of Fourth of July celebrations and several other things, and giving Philander hasty directions in regard to unhitching and driving Bess and Doll safely home, he folded his tent and silently stole away.

"I say, Philander, one piece o' mam's currant pie is worth half a dozen o' pap's speeches," whispered Johnny at the table as he took an enormous bite of the delicacy in question.

"Tell ye what, ef I was mam, next time pap makes fun o' her cos she ain't ez smart ez he is, I'd jest ask 'im ef his American eagle'd got back yet. Bet I would."

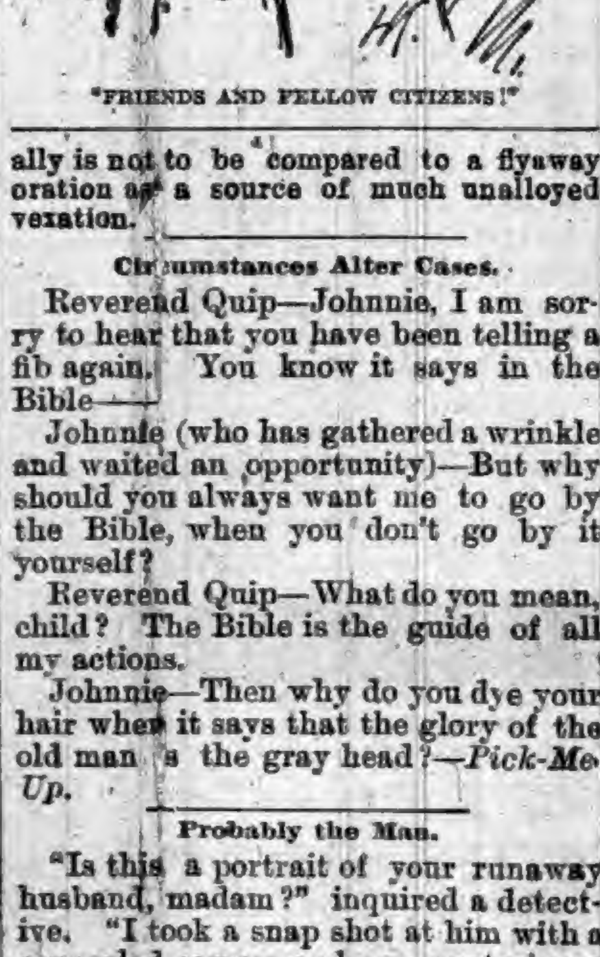
The audience was a good-natured one, and seeing by Mrs. Buncombe's scarlet cheeks and moist eyes how thoroughly mortified she was by her spouse's failure, they undertook to smooth things over by a judicious series of compliments on the spicy contents of the clothes-basket and otherly neighborly attentions, succeeding so well that she spent the day far more pleasantly than she had ever been able to when shadowed by the eclipse of her lord's superior presence. Meanwhile Mr. Buncombe trudged sadly homeward; he had been so over-confident of his ability to repeat his speech verbatim that he had left it on the table at home, and as he entered the kitchen the fateful document was the first object which met his gaze.

He took it up, looking at it with vindictive eyes, and shook it as a terrier shakes a rat.

"Ye'll never make me any more trouble, ye blamed onsartin thing," he muttered as he struck a match.

Perhaps the speech was uncommonly dry; at any rate it burned merrily and quickly, and a little heap of floating ashes was all that remained of Mr. Buncombe's maiden speech, the effort which was to have led on to fame and future glory, and then and there his oratorical aspirations died an easy and natural death.

As Mr. Buncombe meekly took the milk pails and went out to milk rantankerous Moolie, he concluded that though farming has its uncertainties and drawbacks, still a pail of spilt milk occasionally is not to be compared to a flyaway oration as a source of much unalloyed vexation.



"FRIENDS AND FELLOW CITIZENS!"

Circumstances Alter Cases.

Reverend Quip—Johnnie, I am sorry to hear that you have been telling a fib again. You know it says in the Bible——

Johnnie (who has gathered a wrinkle and waited an opportunity)—But why should you always want me to go by the Bible, when you don't go by it yourself?

Reverend Quip—What do you mean, child? The Bible is the guide of all my actions.

Johnnie—Then why do you dye your hair when it says that the glory of the old man is the gray head?—Pick-Me-Up.

Probably the Man.

"Is this a portrait of your runaway husband, madam?" inquired a detective. "I took a snap shot at him with a concealed camera as he was entering a door across the street from me."

"I am not exactly sure," said the lady, doubtfully. "This is a rear view. What kind of a building was it?"

"It was a saloon, madam."

"M—yes. What was the time of day?"

"It was 11:45 a. m."

"There is no doubt about its being his portrait," she said decidedly. "I can recognize him by the saloon and 11:45 a. m."—Chicago Tribune.

Realization.

Alas, when the day has gone by,
How heavy and heartfelt the sigh,
As the bills all come in
For the fireworks and din
And we find the fun costs mighty high.

And the boy, as with pain he is tossed
O'er his pillow, then reckons the cost
Which the day's sport imposed,
In his both optics closed
And the finger or two he has lost.

PRACTICAL SCIENCE.

A BUDGET OF INTERESTING INFORMATION.

A Good Word for the Much-Abused Milkweed—How to Ascertain the Speed of a Railway Train—To Obtain a Light Without Matches.

BY PROF. J. F. ELSOM.

A Good Word for the Milkweed.

The poorly growing and much despised milkweed will soon lift up its drooping head and take a front place among the profitable plants of the world. Its seed yields an abundance of oil, which analysis shows to be finer than linseed oil. A gum can be produced from the plant juices that rivals India rubber in strength and elasticity; its floss when spun is finer than the finest Irish poplin, which it closely resembles, and its stalk, leaves, and bark, manufactured into pulp by means of sulphur and boiling in alkalies, yields a fine parchment-like paper. Chemistry is rapidly showing the reasonableness and efficacy of the claim of the patriarchs that "nothing has been made in vain."

To Ascertain the Speed of a Train.

Everyone who has ridden on the cars has wondered often how fast the train was running, and often an entire coach-load of passengers will manifest a great interest in the rate of speed the train is making. There are three ways of getting at this with tolerable accuracy. The first is to watch for the passage of the train by the large white mile-posts with black figures on them, then divide three thousand six hundred by the time in seconds between posts. The result is the speed in miles per hour. Again, when by reason of darkness, or other causes, the above is impossible, listen attentively until the ear distinguishes distinctly the click, click, click of the car wheel as it passes over the rail joint. The number of clicks on one side of the car in twenty seconds is the speed in miles per hour, where the rails are thirty feet in length, which is generally the case. Finally, count the number of telegraph poles passed in two minutes, if there are four or five wires to a pole, and in two minutes and twenty seconds if there are only two lines per pole; the number of poles passed is the number of miles per hour the train is traveling.

Light Without Matches.

To obtain light instantly without the use of matches, and obviating the danger of setting things on fire, take an oblong vial of the clearest glass, put into it a piece of phosphorus the size of a pea, upon this pour some of the purest cotton-seed oil, heated to 100 deg. centigrade, filling the vial about one-third full, then cork tightly. To use it, remove the cork and allow a little air to enter the vial, then recork it. The whole empty space in the bottle will then become luminous, and, if the bottle is clear and the solution made properly, the light obtained will nearly if not quite equal that of an ordinary lamp. As soon as the light grows dim, its brilliancy can be at one restored by reopening the bottle and allowing a fresh supply of air to enter. In cold weather it may be necessary sometimes to warm the bottle by holding it between the hands to increast the fluidity of the oil. Thus prepared, the bottle is good for six months. The same contrivance is used by the watchmen of Paris in all magazines where explosive or inflammable materials are stored.

Food and Poison.

What is food for one may be poison for another. This is well exemplified in watching some of the natural provisions and characteristic peculiarities of certain forms of insect life. Take, for instance, the case of the spider and the bee. In my conservatory window one of each was seen on a blossom, each eagerly seeking for something. After they had worked diligently for a few minutes, during which time they met and passed often, the one seemingly found abundant pasturage on the spot vacated by the other. As they were passing away, apparently filled, they were caught, chloroformed, and chemically examined. As expected, the bee contained nothing but honey, pollen, etc., the usual fruits of the worker's life; the spider, on the other hand, showed a stomach perfectly empty, and evidently was going in search of food when leaving the blossom upon which it and the honey-bee had apparently been feeding. More intricate examination being made, an alkaloid, and one of the most energetic poisons known, was found in a receptacle, which was filled to repletion. Both these insects—one in search of honey, the other of poison—fed on the same flower, found what they sought, and turned away satisfied—a peculiar transformation, and both substances obtained by nearly the same process, from the same petal. A moral should adorn this truth. Like the two insects are many persons. For instance, two persons will look at another person to whom both are strangers. One will see all that is good and ennobling, beautiful and attractive; while the other will see nothing but what is bad and degrading, hideous and repulsive. Both feed the imagination on one person; each seeks his or her propensity, finds what is wanted, and returns satisfied. Reader, which one art thou?

Effecting Things.

It was the remark of a man who had done a good deal of public service of that sort which is wholly unremunerative, and which must be done from a pure love of seeing abuses righted, that everybody would apply himself to the righting of public abuses were it only generally known how easily things of this sort can be done. "The first time I undertook anything of this sort," he said, "I went into it without the slightest hope of really accomplishing anything more than the easing of my own conscience, and possibly of preparing the way for some one who should come after me and finish what I could not more than begin; but to my astonishment I discovered that after all one has only to set to work to do about what he will. The public is so ill-served because it is too indolent to take the trouble to find out that it may have most of the abuses which torment it remedied almost for the asking."

It is feared that this view is not to be taken too literally. It was probably too highly colored by personal experience to be reliable as far as the public in general goes. And yet it is undoubtedly true that the people who hold back from the attempt to have the unpleasant and undesirable things which vex the community righted would be amazed at the things they could do if they would but try. It is often the mere starts that cost, as has been so continuously remarked by the proverb mongers for hundreds of years.

In matters touching the well being of the community, it is almost always to those who are anxious to retain some hardly bought political preferment that one must apply for relief; and the fear of offending a possible voter is in itself not infrequently sufficient to bring matters about. It is to be noted, moreover, that as a rule people are good-natured enough to be willing to do anything for the public good if it is not too much trouble, and the amount of urging in such a case not usually large that is needed to bring them up to the working point. The reason that things go undone is because people in general are persuaded that it is of no use to trouble themselves about them, while people in particular are apt to be so engrossed in following out their private affairs that they have no time to give to the righting of public wrongs, even though so doing may be their manifest and individual duty. If only folk will take hold with a will it is not essential that they have a great deal of influence or power, but they can effect a good deal simply by making a beginning—by taking that first step which proverbially costs.—Boston Courier.

A Famous Ohio Poet.

Captain George W. Cutter, author of "The Song of Steam," "E Pluribus Unum," "Never, Never!" and many other bold and stirring hymns, was born in Kentucky, though much of his life was spent in Cincinnati. He was a gallant soldier in the Mexican war, an eloquent and learned barrister and a most entertaining companion. For charm of conception, choiceness of expression and vigorous language some of his poems will rank with anything in our language. But he was a victim of intemperance.

His poems, "Never, Never!" and "E Pluribus Unum" were set to music during our civil war, and sung everywhere in the North, with the most inspiring effect. Probably no song ever thrilled a nation to a greater extent than that of "E Pluribus Unum." I remember once during the war hearing it sung in Cincinnati by a choir of 200 voices at a patriotic meeting of some ten thousand persons in a grove, and can never forget the grand effect on the audience, as each singer, with a flag raised in his hand, sang with thrilling effect the last verse:

Then up with our flag! Let it stream in the air,
Though our fathers are cold in their graves;
They had hands that could strike, they had souls
that could dare,
And they were not born to be slaves.
Up! up! with that banner, where'er it may call,
Our millions shall rally around;
And a nation of freemen that moment shall fall,
When its stars shall be trailed on the ground.

A few nights afterward I was sent for to see a person in the station-house in my city. I went, and found there the author of "E Pluribus Unum," pale and trembling from the effects of a terrible debauch, covered with filth and his clothes almost torn off him. I spoke kindly to him, told him how that vast audience, but a day or two ago, had been inspired to patriotic duty by his songs. He clasped his hands to his eyes and exclaimed: "Great God! what a wreck I have made of myself!" bent over me and wept like a child, promising by all that was sacred that he would reform.

With the aid of some friends he was taken out and cared for in a way his pitiful condition demanded. New clothes were obtained, a pleasant boarding house found, and for a few weeks he was himself again, endeavoring to establish himself again in his profession. But, alas! the chain of appetite was too strong—it shortly dragged him down to his grave.—Texas Siftings.

Still Waiting.

A sad reminder of the great blizzard of two years ago, says a New York letter to the Baltimore American, is the mental condition of a man living in the fashionable part of Lexington avenue, not far from Thirty-seventh street. This man had an only son, who went out in a boat the day before the blizzard came, for a sail down the bay. The boat was never heard of after that, and the young man probably was lost. Yet the father did not lose hope. Day after day he waited for news of his son's rescue. He hoped that some vessel had picked the little boat up or by some other means the boy's life was saved.

The body not having been found the man could not believe the boy dead. For weeks he waited to hear some news, but none came. Under the load of grief his mind almost gave way, and to this day the old man, whose mind is almost a wreck, expects at the least noise in the block to hear that his son has been found.

If there is a sound of hurrying feet on the pavement outside he will get up to see if there is not a messenger boy coming with news from his son. All through the night he awakes at the slightest noise, and his first inquiry is whether the news of his son's rescue has come.

This has continued for two years. The facts in the case were told by a policeman, who a few evenings ago saw two men standing in front of the house at a late hour and requested them not to talk in a loud voice, lest they arouse the old man and start him to the door for the news which he has awaited so long.

His Suggestion to a Bald-Headed Man.

J. M. Sawyer, general freight agent, of the Great Northern Railway, during a recent trip to California, was accosted by a conductor wearing a gaudy emblem of the Mystic Shrine, of which Mr. Sawyer is himself a prominent member, but is satisfied with a simple button indicative of his affiliation. It was the subsequent course pursued by this conductor that firmly established in the mind of Mr. Sawyer the belief that the far Western railway official carries more nerve to the square inch than any other class of citizens in the United States. Mr. Sawyer is quite bald, prominently, so it might be said. To him the conductor said:

"Will you permit me to make a suggestion?"

"Certainly," replied Mr. Sawyer. "I am a fit subject for almost any kind of suggestion; second attack of the grip, somewhat bilious, generally used up and, as you might say, with one foot in the grave. But what is your suggestion?"

The conductor deliberately leaned over the seat and impressively placed one finger on Mr. Sawyer's dome of intellect.

"I would paint a jack rabbit right there," he said.

"A rabbit! What for?"

"Some people might take it for a hare."—Pioneer Press.

A Matter of Interest to Travelers.

Tourists, emigrants and mariners find that Hostetter's Stomach Bitters is a medicinal safeguard against unhealthful influences, upon which they can implicitly rely, since it prevents the effects that an unhealthy climate, vitiated atmosphere, unaccustomed or unwholesome diet, bad water, or other conditions unfavorable to health, would otherwise produce. On long voyages, or journeys by land in latitudes adjacent to the equator, it is especially useful as a preventive of the febrile complaints and disorders of the stomach, liver and bowels, which are apt to attack natives of the temperate zones sojourning or traveling in such regions, and is an excellent protection against the influence of extreme cold, sudden changes of temperature, exposure to damp or extreme fatigue. It not only prevents intermittent and remittent fever and other diseases of a malarial type, but eradicates them, a fact which has been notorious for years past in North and South America, Mexico the West Indies, Australia and other countries.

TO MAKE a long story short—send it to the editor of a newspaper.

AMONG the passengers on SS. La Bretagne, which sailed for Europe June 14, was the genial and popular Mr. Alfred B. Scott, senior member of the well-known manufacturing chemists, Scott & Bowne, proprietors of the world-famed Scott's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil, a remedy which has secured a great and deserving reputation in the cure of consumptive and scrofulous diseases. The success of this preparation is not confined to the United States. It enjoys a large sale all over Europe, and Mr. Scott now makes one of his periodical trips to attend to the affairs of his firm, which has branch houses established in London, Paris, Barcelona, Milan and Oporto.

NEW TRANS-CONTINENTAL ROUTE

Via the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Ry. and the Northern Pacific R. R.

Commencing Saturday, June 15, 1890, there was established a through line of first-class vestibuled Pullman sleeping cars running daily between Chicago, Milwaukee, St. Paul, Helena, Montana; Spokane Falls, Tacoma and Seattle, Washington; and Portland, Oregon, making the fastest time to and from all points on Puget Sound and the North Pacific coast, and affording an excellent through route for passengers destined to California points.

West bound trains will leave Union Passenger Station, corner Adams and Canal streets, Chicago, daily at 5:30 p. m., arriving St. Paul 7 a. m., Fargo 4:55 p. m., Helena 1:15 a. m., Spokane Falls 5 p. m., Tacoma 10:50 a. m., Seattle 11:45 a. m., Portland 6:30 p. m. These trains will carry all classes of passengers and will also provide the finest dining car service between Chicago and the Pacific coast. Trains of all lines from the East arrive in Chicago in ample time to make connection with the 5:30 p. m. train from Chicago.

In addition to the foregoing, special Pullman sleeping-cars for the famous Yellowstone Park will be attached to these trains, thus affording during the summer months a direct through-car line to the "World's Wonderland" and, the Lake Park region of the Northwest. Time, forty-eight hours to Mammoth Hot Springs Hotel.

The advantages to be secured by purchasing through tickets via a route composed of such favorably known and well-established lines as the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul and Northern Pacific Railways must be apparent to all first-class travelers.

For sleeping-car reservations, through tickets, time tables, and further information, apply at City Office of Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railway, at No. 207 Clark street, or at Union Passenger Station, Chicago, or address F. A. MILLER, Ass't G. P. A., C., M. & St. P. R'y, Chicago, Ill.

The summer term of the Butler Normal will begin Tuesday, July 1, 1890.

SPECIAL TEACHERS' CLASS

This class has been formed for the benefit of teachers and those desiring to prepare themselves for teaching. All the branches in which examinations are held for teachers' license, will receive careful attention. Special instruction will be given on the latest approved methods of teaching, on the organization, management and government of schools. It is the aim to educate and train teachers for their educational work. Other classes will be orgnaized to accommodate those not intending to teach, but who intend to follow other avocations of life. Drill classes in reading, writing, spelling and other practical branches, will receive proper attention.

EXPENSES.

Tuition per term, $5.00, in advance. Board with furnished room in private family per week, from $2.50 to $3.00. Board in clubs, per week, from $1.25 to $1.75. Rooms without board, per week, from 25 to 50 cents. Arrangements also, have been made with parties to cook for students who may desire to furnish their provisions from home, and thus permitting them to attend with very little expense. On information of those desiring to come but cannot on account of limited means, every possible effort will be made to assist them in such ways as will enable them to attend.

BOOKS.

Students coming to the normal will bring the books they wish to study. And those not having books can purchase them at nominal cost. We call special attention to the following fact: That we employ none but the most thoroughly qualified and efficient teachers; that our teachers use no cramming processes, but require the most thorough work of their students; that every student will be called upon for a recitation every day. Many institutions permit students to go three or four weeks at a time without obliging them to make a recitation. We work upon the theory of letting the students recite and not the teacher. If you desire any further information on any particular point, address,

ALAS!

How wretched is the man who has fallen a victim to Biliousness, Indigestion, Sick Headache, or diseased Liver, with all the horrible attendants. Look upon the picture. Poor man, being tired of dragging out a miserable existence, he is the picture of despondency; altogether, he is rather a forlorn specimen. Do we pity him? Of course; but at the same time feel assured that in a measure he is to blame for the bad state into which he has fallen. A sure, safe, speedy and easy cure can be found in Simmons Liver Regulator—Nature's own remedy. No mercury or deleterious drugs, not unpleasant to the taste, and always reliable—just such a remedy as you can pin your faith to without a shadow of disappointment. Read the testimonial, don't take our word for it:

"I have been subject to severe spells of Congestion of the Liver, and have been in the habit of taking from 15 to 20 grains of calomel, which generally laid me up for three or four days. Lately I have been taking Simmons Liver Regulator which gave me relief, without any interruption to business." J. Hugg, Middleport, Ohio.

CATARRH—CATARRHAL DEAFNESS—Hay Fever—A New Home Treatment

Sufferers are not generally aware that these diseases are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of living parasites in the lining membrane of the nose and eustachian tubes. Microscopic research, however, has proved this to be a fact, and the result of this discovery is, that a simple remedy has been formulated whereby catarrh, catarrhal deafness and hay fever are permanently cured in from one to three simple applications made at home by the patient once in two weeks.

N. B.—This treatment is not a snuff or an ointment; both have been discarded by reputable physicians as injurious. A pamphlet explaining this new treatment is sent free on application by A. H. DIXON & SON, 337 and 339 West King St., Toronto, Canada.—Christian Advocate.

Sufferers from Catarrhal troubles should carefully read the above. ly

HOW HEADS ARE CUT OFF.

One of the Conjurer's Most Startling Tricks Easily Explained.

For a number of years the masterpieces of some conjurers have been the cutting off of heads. The most common one, perhaps, is that where a countryman with "a sorter buzzing" in his head has it cured by cutting off the offending member. The subject takes a seat in a high back, upholstered chair. The long back of the chair is thickly padded and has two silk cords running crosswise on it, one from the inner edge of either arm up to the top corner of the opposite side, thus making a broad X.

The subject being seated in a chair, a large helmet or "receiver" is placed on his head. This helmet is made of any bright metal, has a vizor in front, and is open at the back. After it is placed over his head the vizor is lifted to show that the head is there, but in reality a dummy head is seen, made up to represent the subject. As the performer closes the vizor he tilts the helmet forward a little, while the subject at the same moment draws his head out of it and presses it against the back of the chair, which gives way under the pressure and a triangular space opens, the two sides of which are formed by the lower portion of the X in the padding, the base being on a line with the chair arm, where this swinging portion of the back is hinged on. On this flap, the opening of which is concealed by the receiver and a towel placed in front of it to hide the blood (?), rests the head of the subject.

The receiver is now removed and placed on a small cabinet, the towel being left at the neck of the subject in the chair. In a moment the receiver is taken from the top of the cabinet, and the head is seen resting there; it moves and speaks and is the head of another person made up to represent the first one, and who sits behind the mirror in the cabinet and pops his head up through a hole in the top of it as soon as the receiver is placed there. This cabinet is shaped like a safe, and contains several apparently deep shelves. In reality the shelves are shallow, a mirror of proper size being placed in it in such a position as to leave about four-fifths of the cabinet vacant.

The very latest decapitation is one now used by Herrmann. The stage is peculiarly set, the interior, from the first to the third groove, being completely hung in black velvet or felt, back, top and sides. In place of the ordinary footlights a row of gas jets is usually placed across the stage just on a line with the inside of the boxes, and another row carried around but outside of the arched entrance to the black chamber.

The effect of this arrangement of light and shadow throws the stage into impenetrable gloom. Herrmann appears suddenly clothed in white. Then Mephistopheles appears so suddenly that it seems as if he had jumped out of space, but really coming through an opening in the black cloth. Then comes a light cloak and a pretty woman in evening dress. This latter first wraps herself in a black domino of the same material as the stage hangings, leaving her arms and head free. Over this she now slips a framework of light wire, covered with a fine evening dress. This framework has no back, and she can slip out from it behind, leaving the shell with dress.

For the lady to sit on, two pedestals suddenly appear. These are white, and appear by having a cover of black pulled from them quickly. One of these is about two feet high and the other about five feet high. The lady sits on the smaller one, and Mephisto orders Herrmann to cut her head off.

After some demurring he finally seizes a carving knife, places a light cloak over the lady's shoulders and cuts off her head.

Taking it with one hand under the chin and the other holding her hair, he carries it across the stage and places it on the other pedestal, she walking along with him, having slipped out behind the framework leaving it upright on the small pedestal. She walks across the stage in her black domino or behind a black screen shoulder high, only her head showing, and finally stopping with her head on the pedestal that is about five feet high. To replace, the same gliding back is again employed, and she again resumes her dress case and the trick is over.—New York News.

A Bridge Over the Bosphorus.

The most recent proposal for a huge bridge is for one across the Bosphorus, a project for which has been made out by a French engineering company. The historic and picturesque channel between the shores of Europe and Asia, which connects the sea of Marmora with the Euxine, is 872 yards broad, and it is proposed that the bridge to span it should be of one arch only. In these days of huge bridges this should not offer serious difficulties from an engineering point of view, if the financial ones can be got over. Various projects have been put forward to the same effect during the past twenty years, but it was not considered that the bridge would be useful enough to justify the enormous expense which it would entail. Railways have, however, developed very much during recent years, and it is now thought that, if constructed, it would act as a link in the local railway system, and eventually pay a fair return on the money invested in it.—Toronto Globe.

Gas for Air Purification.

Gas jets may be made important auxiliaries to ventilation. Inserted in the bottom of air shafts, they establish active currents which withdraw the vitiated air. A cubic foot of illuminating gas can be utilized so as to cause the discharge of 1,000 cubic feet of air, and a common gas burner will consume nearly three feet of gas an hour, so that the quantity of contaminated air that would be extracted from an apartment during that time would be 3,000 feet. By suitable contrivances gas lights, the effects of which are but too often pernicious, may not only become self ventilating, but may be also made to contribute materially to the purification of the air of inhabited apartments.—New York Telegram.

While boring for water near Bowling Green, Ky., Ebeneezer Cathcart struck a well of fragrant oil. It is so clear as to be nearly transparent, of a beautiful pale pink color, and, while entirely odorless when cold, if heated emits a most delicious odor, resembling somewhat attar of roses. An experiment was tried with a small quantity to test its burning properties, when it was found to burn slowly but steadily giving a soft, clear flame, shedding a faint rose-colored light, and filling the air with a penetrating fragrance.

Failures in Life.

People fail in many ways. In business, in morality, in religion, in happiness and in health. A weak heart is often an unsuspected cause of failure in life. If the blood does not circulate properly in the lungs, there is shortness of breath, asthma, etc.; in the brain dizziness, headache, etc.; in the stomach wind, pain, indigestion, faint spells, etc.; in the liver, torpidity, congestion, etc. Pain in the left side, shoulder and stomach is caused by heart strain. For all these maladies Dr. Miles' New Cure for the heart and lungs is the best remedy. Sold, guaranteed and recomended by F. E. Davenport. Treatise free. 3

In the year 1706 the average weight of fatted steers in the London and Liverpool markets was but 310 pounds! This, too, at the average age of five years. In 1775 this average weight was increased to 482 pounds. In 1830 the weight was 650 pounds, more than double that of 1706. The average weight of the fatted steer to-day is four times what it was in 1706, only 184 years ago.

An Important Matter.

Druggists everywhere report that the sales of the Restorative Nervine—a food and a medicine—are astonishing; exceeding anything they ever had, while it gives universal satisfaction in headache, nervousness, sleeplessness, sexual debility, backache, poor memory, fits, dizziness, etc. L. Burton & Co., Troy, N. Y.; Ambery & Murphy, of Battle Creek, Mich.; C. B. Woodworth & Co., Fort Wayne, Ind., and hundreds of others state that they never handled any medicine which sold so rapidly, or gave such satisfaction. Trial bottles of this great medicine and book on nervous diseases, free at F. E. Davenport's who guarantees and recomends it. 3

The Value of Pure Wine in Sickness.

The chief difficulty with reliable wines has been their scarcity and richness in body, but this has been removed by the introduction of a pure native wine, produced by Mr. A. Speer of New Jersey. He has submitted his wine to the test of many celebrated physicians and chemists, and all concur in its purity, rich medical properties and superiority to all Port Wines. Most of them prescribe it in most cases of debility, affections of the kidneys and chronic complaints, requiring a tonic, sudorific or diuretic treatment.—Examiner.

The Pulpit and the Stage.

Rev. F. M. Shrout, pastor United Brethren church, Blue Mound, Kan., says: I feel it my duty to tell what wonders Dr. King's New Discovery has done for me. My lungs were badly diseased, and my parishoners thought I could live only a few weeks. I took five bottles of Dr. King's New Discovery and am sound and well, gaining 26 lbs. in weight." Arthur Love, Manager Love's Funny Folks Combination, writes: "After a thorough trial and convincing evidence, I am confident Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, beats 'em all, and cures when everything else fails. The greatest kindness I can do my many thousand friends is to urge them to try it." Free trial bottles at Robbins & McCord,s drug store Regular sizes 50c. and $1.00. 3

Our Druggists.

F. E. Davenport says they are selling more of Dr. Marshall's Lung Syrup than any other preparation, for coughs, colds etc., it being cheaper, more pleasant to take and guaranteed to cure. The price is only 25cts., making it the cheapest reliable cough medicine in the market. Sold by F. E. Davenport.

Two Doses.

J. W. Spellman, a prominent merchant of Elkhart, Ind., says: Two doses of Dr. Marshall's Lung Syrup completely cured my child of a severe attack of croup. I have used a great many different croup medicines but have never found any so efficient as Dr. Marshall's which makes it a very necessary article for the family.

Yours, G. W. SPELLMAN.

Pure Brandy.

We call our readers attention to the following testimonial from undoubted authority on the excellence and purity of Speer's P. J. Brandy.

NEW YORK.

Mr. Speer:

I congratulate you on a recent unsought testimonial as to the purity of your brandy. Lady Duffus Hardy, of London, England, an old acquaintance of mine, on testing from the bottle of brandy we brought from Passiac the other day, immediately asked me to get a like one for her, which I did this morning. The English aristocrats, you know, male and female, are pretty good judges of brandy.

Wishing you every success in your really good work, I remain yours truly,

LINES,

(Addressed to Mrs. Jennie Dinckinson, by Mary O. Sawyer.)

By request I am writing
This poem here to-day;
The friends of whom I'm writing,
Cannot hear a word I say.

Although they see me often,
They never hear me say,
"Come back and see me Jennie,
Yes come some other day."

They are deprived of hearing
The voice of welcome here,
That would gladly tell them,
"We love you very dear."

They cannot hear the songs of praise
That's sung by Christians here;
They never hear the prayers ascend
By those they love so dear.

Can never hear their father's voice
In prayer ascend on high,
Pleading with our blessed Lord,
To take them when they die.

'Twould be so sweet when mother prays
To hear her words, you know,
Asking of our God above,
To guide us as we go.

The pretty songs of birds in spring,
They can never, never hear,
Nor the strains of music as we play,
So sweet upon the ear.

But listen now, just let me say,
"God knoweth all things best.
T'is better to be deaf and dumb,
And then forever rest.

Than to be talking ill about
The friends we ought to love,
Than saying vile and wicked things
Of Him, who rules above."

How many do profane the name
Of Him, who died to save
A world that's filled with wickedness,
From the cradle to the grave.

The greatest senses of the five
To you have not been given,
But when you lay your armor down
You can hear and speak in heaven.

And friends that you have loved here,
That's gone to view that land,
Will welcome you across the stream
To know you've joined their band.

Upon this subject I could write
For hours and days to come.
God knows, I love and pity, both,
A friend that's deaf or dumb.

Farmers Alliance of DeKalb Co.

I wish to say to the farmers of DeKalb Co. that I have been commissioned to organize subordinate lodges of the National Farmers Alliance. In order to accomplish any permanent good it is advisable to have but one organization and to have the county thoroughly organized with resident farmers for the principal officers. I think that all will see the advisability of organizing into but one organization and to become a unit in this way. I believe this to be the only organization that is for the good of the farmers exclusively. Do not organize with strangers into any kind of a lodge until you confer with me. I will announce dates for meetings in each township as soon as arrangements can be made. If the farmers of any neighborhood wish to have a meeting I will attend at any time and give all the information necessary. Please let me know and let us as farmers stand together for our rights.

AGENTS WANTED by an old reliable firm; large profits, quick sales, SAMPLE FREE. A rare opportunity. Geo. A. Scott, 842 Broadway, N. Y.

Poor Financiering.

If we had as good an opinion of our business ability as the editor of the Dispatch has, we would manage to be made county commissioner, town council and all such. Last week he made up a little private financial platform of his own, and without any outside suggestions, and in order to let people see what a prodigy is now among them, published it in a conspicuous place. Some of his planks are sound, but the last part of No. 3, gives him away. He wants to refund the county debt, because it can be done at a lower rate of interest. Now, he claims to be good at figures. Let us see how the matter would stand.

Propositions have been made to take at par $40,000 of twenty-year three per cent bonds, and the sole argument by those who favor or are interested in such a deal is the saving of interest to the taxpayers of the county.

Forty thousand dollars at 3 per cent would be $24,000 to be paid in interest during twenty years. It is a debt for posterity to pay and posterity will doubtless have debts enough of its own.

The interest on $40,000 county orders held in the county by widows, guardians, farmers and townspeople, benefits our own people who by being taxed on the orders return a share of it to the county, town and township funds.

Bonds could not be taken by residents, and the interest would be paid abroad just as for fourteen years Auburn has been paying 8 per cent interest to New York bankers.

The interest on $40,000 to be saved by issuing bonds is figured at $1200, or less than 20 cents on $1000 valuation and the person whose property is valued for taxation at $500 would save less than ten cents in his year's taxes.

The funding of the debt is totally unnecessary, orders are at par, run but a year and can be taken up gradually by slight increase of the levy.

The debt serves as a buffer against extravagant demands for outlay, and if bonded it would not be long before DeKalb county would have again a floating debt, and the bonded debt in addition.

The parties proposing, have no interest in the welfare of the county, they speak from interested motives, and the apparent saving would form a costly experiment.

Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly.

Whittier, Holmes and Tennyson, the three illustrious "Octogenarian Poets," are discussed by George Makepeace Towle in a charming literary paper, which leads off Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly for July. Some admirable portraits and views illustrate it. Mrs. Isabella Hinton's article on "Clara Barton and the Red Cross Association in the United States" is made timely by the account given of the association's work at Johnstown, Pa., the first anniversary of the memorable disaster at that place having just passed. Quebec, one of the most picturesque fortress-cities in the world, is described, with copious illustrations, by Elizabeth Taylor. Prof. Vallette's "Roman Campagna," Arthur V. Abbott's American Observatories," and W. I. Lincoln Adam's description of the new Daguerre Memorial, embracing an account of the discovery and developement of photography, are all rich in entertainment as in instruction. There are sketches of romance, travel and adventure, short stories by Lieutenant R. H. Jayne, Lucy Hooper, Ella Wheeler Wilcox, Susan A. T. Weiss, and others. The customary departments are usually full and varied. A notable improvement in the typographical and pictorial make-up is also to be observed in this number, which begins Vol. XXX. of the magazine.

Indigestion

IS not only a distressing complaint, of itself, but, by causing the blood to become depraved and the system enfeebled, is the parent of innumerable maladies. That Ayer's Sarsaparilla is the best cure for Indigestion, even when complicated with Liver Complaint, is proved by the following testimony from Mrs. Joseph Lake, of Brockway Centre, Mich.:—

"Liver complaint and Indigestion made my life a burden and came near ending my existence. For more than four years I suffered untold agony, was reduced almost to a skeleton, and hardly had strength to drag myself about. All kinds of food distressed me, and only the most delicate could be digested at all. Within the time mentioned several physicians treated me without giving relief. Nothing that I took seemed to do any permanent good until I commenced the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, which has produced wonderful results. Soon after commencing to take the Sarsaparilla I could see an improvement in my condition. My appetite began to return and with it came the ability to digest all the food taken, my strength improved each day, and after a few months of faithful attention to your directions, I found myself a well woman, able to attend to all household duties. The medicine has given me a new lease of life."

ACRES OF FLAMES.

A Terrible Conflagration in a Refinery of the Standard Oil Company.

Louisville special: Five acres of fire was the awful sight witnessed at the Standard Oil Refinery at Fifth and C streets Monday. The immense structure was blazing at every point, and the heat was so intense that even 200 yards away persons were overcome. Five persons were burned to death and a large number injured.

The fire broke out at 8:45 o'clock and was in many respects a remarkable one. The refinery is on the east side of the Louisville and Nashville Railroad track, but the tanks are scattered along it on both sides. On last Saturday a tank of crude oil came in on a flat car from Cleveland and it was to be turned into the refinery vats. Some of the men thought the iron tank was too hot for such a thing to be done in safety. After consultation it was postponed in the hope that the weather Monday would be cooler. It did not prove to be, and it became necessary to run the oil out of the car tank into another one in the yard.

Inspector Skene took John Pettigo and another workman and climbed on the car. They mounted the manhead and were about to unscrew the cap when they felt that there was a tremendous pressure from the inside against it. At first they decided not to open it, but they finally did so. In an instant there was a dull puff as the vapor escaped, filling the air all around.

The gas is heavier than the air, and it sank to the ground, spreading out all over the localit-, and moving with the wind. Almost in a twinkling it reached one of the sheds under which there was a fire. There was a flash as the inflammable vapor ignited, and immediately after there was a tremendous explosion.

The tank was blown to pieces, and the hundreds of gallons of burning oil were scattered all over the great works. A wall of fire 300 feet high and nearly 500 feet long, moved with lightning rapidity to the other buildings. In less time than it takes to relate it, the canning house, filled with thousands of gallons of canned oil, the cooper shop, carpenter shop, pump and engine houses, the filling and lubricating houses, the storage houses, the paint and glue houses, and 900 feet of platform were all ablaze and burned furiously.

ENTERED AT LAST.

The Awful Miner's Catacomb at Dunbar at Last Entered by the Rescuers.

A special from Dunbar, dated the 2d inst., says: "By God its through," were the words of Inspector Knightly, as the drill entered the Hill Farm mine at 12 o'clock this morning. For fourteen days the rescuing party had labored hard, yet untiringly to reach their fellow-workmen who had been swallowed up by mother earth. They had met with so many disappointments that they had almost been forced to give up in despair. Last night the Hill Farm mine was entered, and the wildest excitement prevails. Not an eye is closed in sleep. Hundreds of men, women and children are crowding up as close to the mouth of the Mahoning Mine as they can get, anxious to catch every word that may come from within. The inspectors have issued strict orders to put every person out of the mine. No one will be permitted to come out until an entrance is made to the mine and the fate of the entombed workmen is learned. The air has been tested and found to be perfectly pure. This gives encouragement and hopes of finding some of the men alive. It is thought an entrance will be made before daylight.

Population of Leading Cities.

As far as can be estimated from the returns received at the Census Bureau, the population of the leading cities is as follows: Brooklyn, 930,670; Baltimore, 500,000; Boston, 417,720; Buffalo, 250,000; Cincinnati, 306,000; Chicago, 1,085,000; Cleveland, 248,000; Columbus, 114,000; Detroit, 197,000; Grand Rapids, 95,000; Indianapolis, 125,000; Louisville, 180,000; Milwaukee, 200,000; Minneapolis, 185,000; New York, 1,620,727; New Orleans, 246,000; Philadelphia, 1,040,450, Pittsburgh, 250,000; St. Louis, 440,000; St. Paul, 138,000; Washington, 230,000.

Lottery Fight Over.

New Orleans special: The big lottery fight is over. The anti-lotteryites seeing they cannot prevent the passage of the lottery bill have consented to its passage on a compromise. This compromise is that the bill, as passed, will be submitted to the people at a primary election, white voters only to be allowed to cast ballots.

Killed by a Fort Wayne Engine.

At the gas-works crossing at Valparaiso, Ind., on the Fort Wayne Railway, a work-train engine struck the homeward-bound wagon of Geo. Wood, of Salem Church. The young man was killed and his sister-in-law, Mary E. Wood, was injured, probably fatally.

The Public Debt.

It is estimated at the Treasury Department that there has been a decrease of about $20,000,000 in the public debt since June 1. This makes a total decrease for the fiscal year of $87,800,000, as against $114,000,000 for the previous fiscal year.

THE POWER OF MONEY.

Louisiana Lottery Company Accepts the Senate's Proposition.

New Orleans special: The Louisiana State Lottery accepts the proposition made by the senate committee, increasing the amount to be paid by it annually from $1,000,000 to $1,250,000. This will probably go through both houses in the committee. Senator Provosty declared that the Newgass English syndicate was prepared to pay $1,500,000 for the lottery privilege, and he tried to amend the bill by increasing the license of the Louisiana Lottery to $1,500,000, but he was voted down, the committee taking the view that the Newgass syndicate was insincere and that its bid was not a genuine one. The case against Stamant, the representative from Ascension Parish charged with receiving a bribe of $18,000 from the Lottery Company, came up in the District Court in Baton Rouge. The Attorney General refused to take part in the prosecution. The State had no witnesses to offer, and the District Attorney at once nolle prosequied the case. It is probable that the charge against Stamant will be the subject of a legislative investigation. It is also proposed to investigate Judge Strikland, who is charged with bull-dozing legislators, threatening them with arrest, like Stamant, if they voted for the lottery.

WITHOUT HOPE.

All Efforts to Rescue the Entombed Miners Prove Unavailing—The Mines Now a Seething Mass of Flames.

A special from Dunbar, Pa., dated June 28, says: A raging fire has just broken out at the mouth of Hill Farm Mine. All hope for the unfortunates has been abandoned. There is no longer any hope. All faith in the industrious rescuers has been abandoned. The entombed miners cannot be rescued now. A furious fire has sealed their fate and if their dead bodies escape the hungry flames, the pilfering rats that infest the mines will have gnawed them beyond recognition. Death never came to men in a more revolting form and affliction never fell heavier on the bereaved. This has been an awful, yet even a greater disaster threatens. A fire, fierce as a whirl-wind, is raging for 2,000 feet down the Hill Farm Mine. Deadly gas has generated back of the burning, and the ponderous hill into which the Hill Farm, the Ferguson and the Mahoning pits are driven, is to-night a mighty magazine, fairly pregnant with death. The lightest stroke of a miner's pick would explode it and the effect of such explosion would be awful to contemplate. The rescuing party has been withdrawn from the face of the Mahoning pit, and a strong guard has been placed at the mouth of the Ferguson mines to keep out the impatient miners, who would rescue the unfortunates on their own account. The flames at the Hill Farm mines are hot enough to drive away invaders. Fire broke out from the mouth of the Hill Farm pit shortly after 9 o'clock to-night. It followed promptly after the drill entered the burning mine. For two hours before the flames burst out huge billows of smoke, black, dense and deadly, rolled over each other into the air and drifted upward, forming a ponderous monument of mourning to the dead inside. A rumbling, rushing sound like a swift-moving train through a tunnel preceded the flames. Secretary Watshorn, Superintendent Hill and the United Press reporter were at the pit mouth awaiting the outbreak. To the experts the smoke indicated approaching fire, and for a half hour before its arrival its coming could be heard long before the fire reached the pit mouth. It could be seen licking up the timbers in the mine, and the steady stream of water which rippled down the slope seemed only to inspire and encourage to wilder efforts the angry fiend.

THE LOTTERY WINS.

Bill for New Charter Passes the Louisiana House.

A special from Baton Rouge, La., says: The Morris Lottery Bill passed the House of Representatives after one of the most desperate struggles in the legislative history of Louisana. All attempts to reach a middle ground upon the pro-lottery and anti-lottery factions to meet and adjust their differences having utterly failed, the lottery leaders determined to push their bill to a vote and win or lose all. The efforts put out to secure the required number of votes were well nigh superhuman. Finally the necessary sixty-six votes were named, but a number rebelled, and an amendment was adopted giving any individual or corporation the right to secure a lottery charter, provided they could effect the passage of a Constitutional amendment upon the payment of not less than $1,000,000 per annum. Most of the members filed written explanations of their votes. The call resulted, yeas 66; nays 29. Absent three and the bill was finally passed. The bill will go to the Senate and will be pushed through that body with all possible speed.

BISHOP SPAULDING.

He Makes More Radical Declarations at Notre Dame University.

Notre Dame (Ind.) special: The radical declaration of Bishop Spaulding, of Peoria, speaking to the faculty and students of Notre Dame University on the position of women, has created a sensation here among Catholics. At the commencement of St. Mary's Academy he went even further. After having complimented the work of the sisters of the congregation of the Holy Cross, he siad that the position of women had been the position that the Southern planters gave their slaves. It was no better to-day than it was years ago. They were treated kindly—as the slaves of the men he knew had been treated, but kept in ignorance. In this country, however, women had emancipated themselves. American women are more intelligent than American men. He demanded the highest education for women and declared she must henceforth work side by side with man for the prices for which men work and won. The Bishop's words seemed very like a statement of advanced belief in woman's rights. They were applauded again and again.

HIS LAST SLEEP.

A Constantine, Mich., Business Man Fatally Shot by His Wife.

A special from Constantine, Mich., says: Henry Harvey, prominent in business circles, was fatally shot in the head by his wife while asleep. The couple had never lived happily together, and their whole life since their marriage, six years ago, has been one long series of marital troubles. They separated a couple of years ago, but were brought together by the wife's parents. The patched-up truce was short-lived, however, and the trouble soon began again. They are both very attractive persons, quite popular in Constantine society, and have succeeded quite well in the past in keeping their troubles from the prying eyes of the public. Mrs. Harvey is a striking brunette, of robust physique. Only one shot was fired by the woman, it entering the ear and lodging in the brain. The friends of Harvey are greatly incensed, and threaten the direst vengeance upon the unhappy woman.

A Picnic Tragedy.

One hundred people were poisoned at a picnic at Wichita, Kan., by drinking lemonade. One man and three children who partook of the beverage have died and others are not expected to live, but are receiving every attention possible to relieve them of their sufferings. A chemical analysis of the lemonade has not been made, but it is said that the man who supplied it used chemical acids and made a mistake in the drugs. Jessie Renebrake, aged 15, was the first whose illness resulted fatally. Two daughters of John Brassfield and a young man named Thornton Tannelton are the other victims. George Rankin, who mixed the drugs, hastened away, and has not been heard from since.

Ammonia Tank Explodes.

An ammonia tank exploded at the Louisville Refrigerator Company's works, Louisville, Ky. Nine men were at work beneath the tank, but were unhurt by the explosion, but nearly overpowered by the fumes. William Gallagher dropped unconscious, but his companions returned and dragged him out alive.

Accidentally Shot.

Timothy Liddy, a plumber, whose establishment is at No. 40 Massachusetts avenue, Indianapolis, was fatally shot by the discharge of a driver's pistol on a College avenue car. Mr. Liddy boarded the car near his home, above Massachusetts avenue, on New Jersey street, going south. He had with him a "street key," used to turn off water connections, and sat on the first seat of the car, behind and slightly to one side of the driver, Thomas George. On a signal to stop, George turned the brake and in letting it off, the crank struck the key held by Liddy. The crank and key struck the driver together in the side and at that instant the report of a pistol followed and Mr. Liddy fell back, clutching at his hat with the fatal bullet buried in his brain. The car driver has the sympathy of the public, and prosecution will not probably be urged.

Collapse of a Big Building.

Knoxville (Tenn.) special: One of the heaviest losses to property ever known in this section was caused by the falling of a mammoth six-story building on Commerce street. R. S. Payne had just completed the building at a cost of $50,000. It was being occupied by the wholesale dry goods firm of Daniel Brisco & Co., with a $200,000 stock. The building, from some unknown cause, gave way and collapsed. It was about 1 o'clock, when no one was in the building. Brisco & Co., employ nearly one hundred people, and had the wreck been in daylight many would have been killed. A large brick adjoining the one that fell is in a dangerous condition, and police have to guard adjoining streets. The commercial loss to Knoxville will reach $250,000.

Flooded with "Queer."

The business men of Goshen, Ind., are odds and ends over the deluge of counterfeit 10-cent pieces which have been poured into that vicinity of late. The counterfeits are of the date 1889, and very difficult of detection. They are different from the ordinary counterfeits in that they are heavy plated with pure silver on a body of German silver. This does away with the greasy feeling so common with counterfeits and also gives it a metallic ring strongly akin to that of a good dime. The officers are wrought up, but are at their wits end for some clew to the shovers of the queer. The amount is increasing without there being any corresponding increase in clews.

Original Packages.

About 1,000 people assembled at the park in Lawrence, Kan., to attend the original package meeting. Numerous speeches were made denouncing the original package men as "Missourians, cut throats and thugs." Judge Foster was severely censured and his impeachment demanded. In the main the speakers advised the people to be law-abiding, but to use every means in their power to rid themselves of the scourge. At the close of the meeting resolutions were adopted urging the Kansas Congressmen to lay aside all other business and urge the immediate passage of the Wilson bill or some other like measure for the relief of the State.

More Railroad Trouble.

Fifteen hundred freight handlers employed at the ten freight depots in East St. Louis struck for an increase in wages. The men are now receiving $1.25 per day and 12½ cents per hour for over time. They demand $1.50 per day and 18 cents per hour for over time. No freight is being handled and, in consequence, over four hundred transfer men are in enforced idleness. Three "traveling delegates" were seen in East St. Louis, and it is presumed that the strike is the outcome of this visit. The first intimation that the roads had of trouble, however, was when the men positively declined to go to work unless their demands were acceded to.

Strike Settled.

The Illinois Central strike is ended. By a vote of 305 to 106 the men agreed to return to work, and at six o'clock the trains were running the same as usual. Mr. Russell still retains his position, and while the company says it will remove from him that over-man power of hiring or discharging all railroad men on his division, it is well known that a division superintendent's duties are laid down in the by-laws of the company. By many it is considered that inside of a few months Mr. Russell will resign. In the light of circumstances the men have gained a quasi-victory and the company a very decisive one.

War on the Mayor.

An exciting scene occurred in the City Council rooms at Jeffersonville, Ind. The accounts of the Electric Light and Water-works companies had been pushed through by the Mayor and Clerk without submission to the Council. A resolution to have all bills allowed in open Council were passed. Mayor Warder became very angry and denounced the supporters of the resolution as thieves, and there was a bitter personal passage between Councilman Davis, Editor Daily and Warder, and an encounter was imminent. Bills of the light company for unlighted lamps have been allowed and other corruption is hinted at.

Against Watch Clubs.

Justice Feibleman of Indianapolis, has rendered a decision which will not be kindly received by the various individuals who are operating watch club schemes. It was in the case of W. T. Marcy, who not long ago started a club of this kind under an arrangement whereby each member was to get a watch immediately upon drawing it. He could then cease paying his installment. The justice, after examining the law prohibiting the operation of lottery companies, decided that Marcy's scheme was a direct violation of the provision of that statute and fined the defendant $10 and costs. He will appeal the case.

A Mine Accident.

Frank Johns was almost instantly killed and Jacob Ringley seriously injured by being crushed beneath a rock 5x12 feet in dimensions, which fell from the roof in the West Massilon, (Ohio) Coal Company's No. 1 mine. The men had been warned to keep out of the rooms from which the props had been drawn, as it was dangerous, but they disregarded the advice, went in to get some tools and were caught. Johns was to have been married within a few days. Ringley, who has a family, will probably recover.

Burglars Getting Bold at Decatur.

Decatur, Ind., has been infested with a gang of thieves for several months. On the night of the 28, they entered David Randall's residence and secured $185. So bold have they become that they enter residences in the early evening and secret themselves until the occupants have retired, when they proceed to ransack the premises. Already two or three houses have been searched, wherein have been found stolen goods, but too late to catch the thieves.

Drowned.

George Good, an electric light lineman, was drowned in the St. Joe River at Fort Wayne, Ind., while stretching a wire across the river. The boat he was in capsized and went over a dam.

A Toper's Fell Work.

In a drunken frenzy and urged on by imaginary fiends, L. B. Meyers went to the house of his wife's uncle, Benjamin Van Horn, a well-known Kansas City man, and attempted to kill his wife with a revolver. Mr. Van Horn, in shielding his niece from the bullet fired by Meyers, received a probably fatal wound in the abdomen. A second shot struck Miss Carrie Van Horn and entered her back. She will probably die. Meyers then escaped through the back yard and was not captured until he had turned and fired at his pursuers. The bullet hit Nelson Gleason in the leg. As soon as he was arrested and taken to the station, he fell to the floor in a drunken stupor. Domestic difficulties led to the tragedy.

Drank Carbolic Acid.

Jacob Dietrick, a tinner by occupation, 26 years old and married, committed suicide by taking a quantity of carbolic acid at Dayton, Ohio. Dietrick and his wife had not been living happily together. The latter returned from a three weeks' visit to her parents. She found her husband under the influence of liquor, when a quarrel ensued. It ended by Dietrick saying that he was tired of life, and that he would commit suicide. He suited the action to the word by taking a vial of carbolic acid from his pocket and swallowed the contents. When the wife realized what her husband had done she gave an alarm. Dietrick died fifteen minutes later.

The Future of Canada.

Toronto (Ont.) special: At a banquet E. F. Clarke, Mayor of Toronto, speaking of the future of Canada, said: "Quite unique is the position occupied by Canada as a sort of connecting link between the two great English speaking peoples of Great Britain and the United States. Canadians have as many ties of relationship with one as with the other. I can conceive of nothing more pregnant with happiness to mankind than a determination on the part of Canadians to use their high responsibilities in such sort as to bind together forever Great Britain, the United States, and Canada." These sentiments were warmly applauded by all present.

Killed an Apprentice.

James W. Kerr, of the firm of Steiger & Kerr, proprietors of the Occidental Foundry at San Francisco, shot and killed Edward Coogan, a moulder's apprentice employed in the Vulcan Iron Works. Kerr and a non-union moulder named Clauson were attacked on the streets by a crowd of strikers and were being badly beaten, when Kerr drew his revolver and fired. The bullet struck young Coogan in the heart.

Stock Cars Wrecked.

The engine and twenty cars of stock train No. 36, east-bound, on the Fort Wayne Railroad, jumped the track one mile west of Canton, O., and rolled down a twenty foot embankment. Engineer Hutchison was slightly burned. Fireman Whiting had a leg and arm broken and sustained probably fatal injuries. A number of cattle were killed.

After the Enumerators.

The Attorney General has ordered the District Attorney of Minneaplis to begin immediately the prosecution, for conspiring to defraud, of the three enumerators of the census who have been accused of making false returns for the purpose of swelling beyond its legal limit the report of the population of Minneapolis.

Sustained the Law.

The Supreme Court in the Ohio proceedings commenced by the Attorney General against the members of the Board of Public Works of Columbus to challenge the validity of the Heffner act, known as the Columbus "Ripper" bill, passed by the Legislature last winter, by a unanimous decision, sustained the law upon all points.

Pulled the Trigger with His Toe.

John Baughman, a well-known farmer of Perry Township, Licking County, Ohio, committed suicide by shooting himself in the head. He loaded a shot gun, placed the muzzle to his head and pulled the trigger by a string attached to his toe. He was 60 years old and owned a large farm. No cause assigned for the rash act.

Drowned.

Fort Wayne special: Miss Clara Gable, of this city, attended the Pittsburgh employe's excursion at Warsaw, and while attempting to exchange places in a row boat with a companion upset the boat and was drowned.

Charles Orbis was drowned while bathing in the St. Joe River near this city.

Deadly Ice Cream.

At New Concord, Ohio, about twenty people were taken dangerously sick and several came near dying. Dr. McCreary claims that they were poisoned by the flavoring used in ice cream, of which they had eaten.

A Venerable Pilgrim.

Harrison Warner, 89 years of age, who trundled a wheelbarrow from McConnellsville, O., to Baltimore, a distance of 550 miles, arrived at midnight, June 30th.

Poisoned at a Wedding Feast.

At the Methodist Church in Parker, east of Muncie, Rev. J. S. McCarthy was united in marriage to Miss Margaret Cultice, by Rev. Kemp, of Selma. After the ceremony the wedding party went to the residence of Mart Meeks, brother-in-law of the bride, where an elegant wedding supper was served. The bridal couple left on an Eastern wedding trip, and nothing has been heard from them, but shortly after they had left, the guests began to show signs of poisoning, and in the course of a few hours all but three out of the thirty or more present were deathly sick, vomiting and fainting away. The lives of many were despaired of during the night, and several physicians were called in to relieve the sufferings of the many victims. The medical fraternity was unable to determine the cause of the sickness. It is feared some of the cases will prove fatal.

FAIR COMMISSIONERS.

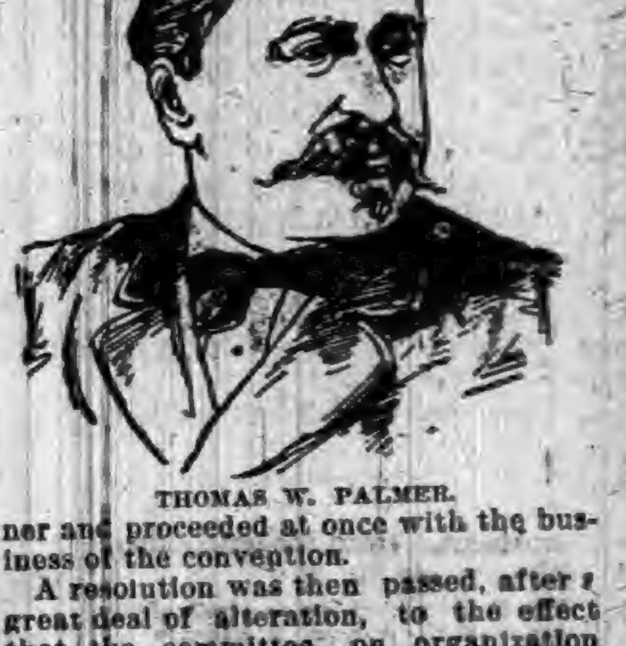
THE NATIONAL BOARD OF THE EXPOSITION CONVENES.

Ex-Senator Palmer, of Michigan, Elected President and John B. Dickinson, of Texas, Named as Secretary—Other Officers to Be Selected—The First Meeting.

Chicago dispatch: Mr. Thomas W. Palmer of Michigan has been elected president of the national world's fair commission. The first thing the commissioners did was to dispense with the roll-call and the reading of the minutes of the previous day's meeting. Then the committee on permanent organization reported, recommending the election of a president, five vice-presidents, and a secretary.

Thomas W. Palmer of Michigan was then placed in nomination for the office of president. He was elected by acclamation.

Mr. Palmer expressed his thanks in an exceptionally neat and concise manner and proceeded at once with the business of the convention.



THOMAS W. PALMER.

A resolution was then passed, after a great deal of alteration, to the effect that the committee on organization recommend to the commission its choice of candidates for the vice-presidencies, and that the committee sit for two hours to hear the individual view of any commissioner who desires to address them on behalf of any candidate before making any decision.

Nominations for secretary were then in order, and F. J. V. Skiff of Colorado, without preliminary remarks, nominated John B. Dickinson of Texas for the position and expressed the hope that the election would be made by acclamation, which was done.

As the president introduced Mr. Dickinson to the commission he remarked: "He looks as if there were a good deal of work in him, but it will all be worked out before 1893."

Secretary Dickinson made known his obligations in a suitable speech. It was then moved that the local committees be informed that the national commission was duly organized and ready for business. The committee on permanent quarters asked for a continuance of time in which to make a decision, which was granted.

An announcement was then made that Mrs. Potter Palmer invited all the commissioners and alternates present and their families to attend a reception given at her residence in the afternoon from 4 until 7 o'clock. President Palmer said: "Mrs. Palmer is not my wife but the wife of Potter Palmer, one of Chicago's most enterprising citizens, and I advise you all to attend."

The commission formally acknowledged the invitation. Prof. King of Iowa then moved that a committee of five be appointed to express the commission's thanks to the citizens of Chicago and the State's association for the banquet of the previous evening.

Gov. McDonald of California seconded this and added that never had he sat down to a more magnificent spread or met more hospitable and delightful people than the residents of Chicago.

THE STRIKE ENDED.

Illinois Central Employes Have Returned to Work.

Chicago dispatch: The strike of the Illinois Central employes has ended, the men having returned to work. In a few hours the tracks where were accumulated hundreds of freight and passenger cars were cleared and the business of the road was resumed. The strikers met in Prosperity hall where the ultimatum of General Superintendent Sullivan, refusing to discharge Division Superintendent Russell was presented. This was followed by a sharp discussion lastin gseveral hours, in the course of which Master Workman Wilkinson, of Galesburg, was accused of inactivity regarding the strike and of actually favoring the company. Mr. Wilkinson indignantly denied these charges and claimed that he was earnestly supporting the demands of the men.

Finally the question of formally calling out the employes of the road was presented, and the question of the men going back to their places was voted on the ballot standing 305 yeas to 106 nays, and thus the strike was settled.

It is a victory for the company, as was prophesied from the first by clear-thinking, impartial railroad men.

While the company has refused to discharge Division Superintendent Russell, it has, so the strikers claim, given them its word that Mr. Russell will no longer be allowed to exercise what the trainmen term a "one man power."

"On this promise we will return to work," said a committeeman during a lull in the meeting at Prosperity hall.

This determination was presented to Superintendent Sullivan and was accepted.

"No one will be discharged because of his connection with this strike," said the general superintendent "ill-advised as it may have been. The men have done no deeds of violence, have destroyed no property, have deported themselves as gentlemen, at least in my presence, and on that score will not be militated against."

SALVADOR'S REVOLUTION.

The People Tired of Menendez—Ezeta Proclaimed Provisional President.

La Libertad (Salvador) cable: During a ball given at the President's residence in the capital the 22d inst., in celebration of the anniversary of the triumphal entry of Gen. Menendez, Gen. Melesio Marcial suddenly entered the ball-room about 11 p. m. and announced on behalf of his chief, Gen. Ezeta, who had arrived with 600 men from Santa Ana, a revolt against the existing government, demanding at the same time the deposition of President Menendez. At this juncture Gen. Martinez, commander of the government forces in the capital, appeared on the scene and announced that President Menendez, who was sick in an upper story of the house, requested an audience with Gen. Marcial. An altercation ensued between Martinez and Marcial, resulting in the latter being shot and instantly killed. Ezeta's soldiers thereupon took Martinez prisoner and captured the barracks. Twenty-three persons were killed. It is asserted that the President died the following day from heart disease which had been aggravated by the excitement. Gen. Ezeta was proclaimed Provisional President and a new Cabinet was formed, but it has since been dissolved, and Gen. Guirola is for the present directing the different branches of governmental administration. General order prevails.

MY SWEETHEART.

BY WILLIAM ALEXANDER BOWEN.

I know not why in darkest skies
The stars gleam out the whitest,
But I know that from my love's dark eyes
The light seems always brightest.

I know not why the golden light
Of sunset seems so fair,
But it touched my sweetheart's tresses bright—
And shining is her hair.

I know not why an angel's face
To innocence is given,
But I know that in her smile I trace
The purity of heaven.

I know not how Love found its home
In hearts where no lights shone,
But I know her love to me has come—
And I know it's all my own.

I know not why, nor when, nor how
All things that are may be;
But my heart knows with gladness now
That my love loves but me.

'Tis only this I know, and this
To me is all of life;
And all of this my sweetheart is,
My sweetheart is—my Wife.

BETRAYED;

—OR—

A DARK MARRIAGE MORN.

A Romance of Love, Intrigue and Crime.

BY MRS. ALICE P. CARRISTON.

CHAPTER X.—(Continued).

The next morning he arose unrefreshed, and feeling that he had already lost too much time, hurried through his breakfast, and started for the publishing house.

He took his place at his desk, and in a mechanical sort of way endeavored to perform his duties.

An hour or two passed. It was nearly ten o'clock. The door of the counting-room opened. Listlessly he looked up, and to his unbounded astonishment, not to say apprehension, saw his uncle enter.

The visitor came straight toward his desk.

Eugene slipped from his stool and cast a hasty glance around.

The door of Mr. Norton's private room was open.

He looked in. The apartment was empty.

He motioned his uncle to enter, and followed him into the room.

As he closed the door his uncle turned, and seizing him by the lapel of his coat, in an impressive voice said:

"Well, young man!"

"Well, sir," gasped Eugene.

"What are you doing here?"

"I am at work, as you saw."

"At work? Um! Sit down there—sit down, I say!"

He threw himself into Mr. Norton's revolving chair, while Eugene seated himself a short distance away.

"Well, well!" he repeated, after a pause.

"Well, sir; what is it?"

"The deuce! You take things calmly, it seems to me."

"Calmly!"

"Yes; you have married since I saw you last, and what's more, lost your wife—in a very shocking way, too, I must say."

"It is true that I have been married, and alas! it is also true that my wife is dead."

"Very sad, hum! I saw accounts of it all in the papers. It shocked me very much, I assure you. Perhaps you have noticed how agitated I am at this moment?"

"I had thought you were not as calm as usual, uncle."

"Calm! Forty devils! Far from it, and I remembered that I had done you an injustice!"

"Let that pass, if you please, sir; I had forgotten it."

"But I have not forgotten it, and I remember the incident with real pain. I could wish to set myself right with you."

"It's all right as it is, sir. I am far better off here than I was at the bank; I am, indeed!"

"Glad to hear it. And you like the business?"

"Very much, sir."

"See here, my boy, to speak plainly, I owe you nothing."

"And I have never demanded payment even of that, sir," returned Eugene, with a smile.

"Ah, that is true! But you are my nephew, and I have wronged you."

Eugene made a deprecatory gesture.

"Um!" went on his uncle. "I am married, to be sure, and I may say that my wife was made to adorn society. A very lovely lady, my boy!"

"Indeed she is, sir! A very queen!"

"Right, sir. But I have no children, nor am I likely to have."

Eugene looked up quickly.

"In a word," continued his uncle, "I can well afford to do something for you."

"I am doing well by myself, sir."

Mr. Elliston brushed this answer away with one majestic sweep of his hand.

"You like this business, you say?" he asked.

"Yes, sir."

"You like Mr. Norton?"

"Yes, sir."

"Well, I have made inquiries. He is an honest man—a pushing man. This house will soon rival the Harpers—the Appletons—any in the trade. You shall have an interest in it, my boy," and with a grand air, Sherwood Elliston started to his feet.

"But, uncle," protested Eugene, "I cannot take a gift of money from you—and so large a sum as it would require to buy even a small interest here!"

"Well, if you won't take it as a gift, you must accept it as a loan—but mind! It must be for a long time and without interest."

"But, uncle——"

"Enough! I must do this to quiet my conscience; and because, to tell you the truth, I have a regard for you."

"But if anything should happen, and the sum you advanced is lost——"

"In that case, I shall not expect you to return a dollar of it. I shall take no receipt from you, and if you never return the loan under any circumstances, you will confer a great favor upon me."

"Really, uncle——"

"Come, come! Accept it as from a friend—from a relative—from your mother's brother—on any grounds you please, so you accept. If not, I swear you will wound me seriously."

Eugene rose, took his uncle's hand, and pressing it, with emotion, said briefly:

"I accept, sir. Thanks!"

A look of relief came into Mr. Elliston's face. He took one step forward, then abruptly turning, hurried from the room.

Eugene lingered, wondering what had become of him.

In a few moments he returned, accompanied by Mr. Norton.

A long conference followed. Then the three went out together.

But on the street they separated, Mr. Elliston and Eugene going to the office of the former's lawyer, where, soon after, they were joined by Mr. Norton and his attorney.

It was past noon when Mr. Elliston left them, and when Eugene again entered the doors of the publishing house, he did so a partner, owning a one-fourth interest in the business, for which his uncle had paid $37,500, and the firm name henceforth was to be John Norton & Co.

For one moment, at the end of the transaction, Eugene's peace of mind was somewhat disturbed.

As they were leaving the lawyer's office, his uncle took his hand and said:

"Eugene, my dear boy, I ought to tell you, for your conscience's sake, that Mrs. Elliston is aware that I intended to render you this little service, and that she approves of it. She has a great deal of love and affection for you, my dear fellow; be sure of that."

For a moment Eugene was unable to speak. At length he faltered out: "But does she know all. Does she know——"

"Yes," interrupted his uncle; "she knows all about it. I informed her that I did not intend to take any receipt for whatever sum I might advance on your account, and that no reclamation of it should be made at any time on any account."

"You are too good, sir."

"Not at all. This, or something like it, is what I ought to have done before. And now good-day."

"Good-day, sir, and many thanks."

"By the way, Eugene, your evenings must be very lonely. Come up to the house to-night."

Under the circumstances, Eugene regarded this invitation as in the nature of a command, and therefore accepted it promptly.

All the afternoon the thought that he was to meet his uncle's wife so soon again made him nervous. He had a shrewd suspicion that it was wholly owing to her influence that he was now a partner in the house of Norton & Co., and this suspicion tended to make him still more nervous; so when evening came it was with a somewhat lagging step that he approached the stately mansion, and ascended to the broad platform before the mansion doors.

He rang the bell, and stepped into the vestibule. The hall porter almost immediately opened the inner door, and showed him into the library.

His uncle was there, walking up and down the room with nervous tread.

The moment he perceived the young man entering:

"Ah, it is you!" he cried, darting an eager glance upon him. "By my faith, your arrival is fortunate!"

"How is that, sir?"

"I am called away—have to meet the State Central Committee in less than half an hour. Mrs. Elliston is not well; I don't know what's the matter with her."

"I am sorry to hear that she is not well; I——"

"I know, I know, and you must see her."

"But if she is ill——"

"She is not confined to her bed, you understand, and your presence will do her good. She needs some one to cheer her up. You must go to her at once. You owe her this mark of attention. And —er—Eugene!"

"Sir?"

"If you discover anything you must tell me."

"But what should I discover, sir?"

"The deuce! How do I know? But you understand women better than I do, and perhaps you can find out what's the matter with her. Something's troubling her, of that I am certain, and I would like to known just what it is."

"What makes you think there is anything troubling her?"

"From her actions. Then she is so reserved toward me—so impenetrable."

"I think Mrs. Elliston is naturally cold," said Eugene.

"Yes," responded his uncle, thoughtfully. "Yes, and in some respects I—but, really now, should you discover anything, I rely on your communicating it to me. And stop! when you have seen her do not leave the house, but have the kindness to return to this room. I shall be back in a couple of hours, sooner if possible. You will oblige me in this?"

"Certainly, sir. When you return you will find me here."

"For my part I love her like a fool!"

"That is only right, sir."

"Hum! And what do you think of her?"

Eugene started.

"As I have already told you, sir," he at length said, "I think her very beautiful—queenly, in fact, but naturally cold."

"That's it, that's it; and now go to her."

"Where shall I find her, sir?"

"In her boudoir at the head of the stairs."

Eugene thought he knew the room, and as his uncle left the house he ascended the broad staircase leading to the second floor.

Arriving at what he supposed to be the right door, he knocked.

Obtaining no answer he entered without hesitation, lifted the curtain which hung in the doorway, and was immediately arrested by a strange spectacle.

CHAPTER XI.

THE WILES OF THE SIREN.

At the other extremity of the room, facing him, was a large mirror, before which stood Cora Elliston. Her back was turned to him.

She was dressed, or rather draped, in a sort of dressing-gown of white cashmere, without sleeves, which left her arms and shoulders bare. Her auburn hair was unbound and floating, and fell in heavy masses almost to her feet. One hand rested lightly on the toilet table, the other held together over her bust the folds of her dressing-gown.

She was gazing at herself in the glass and weeping bitterly.

The tears fell drop by drop on her white, fresh bosom and glittered there like the drops of dew which one sees shining in the morning on the shoulders of the marble nymphs in the garden of Pallavicina.

Then Eugene quietly dropped the curtains of the entrance and noiselessly retired, taking with him, nevertheless, an eternal souvenir of this stolen visit.

He made inquiries and finally found the room he was in search of, and where, shortly afterward, he was joined by Mrs. Elliston.

To his astonishment her face was not only serene, it was joyous.

"Good evening, my dear nephew!" she said gayly, and with a peculiar emphasis on the nephew. "How very kind of you to come!"

"Not at all," murmured Eugene, as he took her proffered hand. "It was a duty I owed you."

"And one I trust you were pleased to discharge."

"You can rest assured of that, my dear aunt."

"I can not doubt it," she rejoined with a smile, at the same time seating herself on the divan by his side.

Her skirts came in contact with his limb. The touch thrilled him, and he began to experience a strange sensation of fear at the tremendous power he reluctantly confessed to himself this fair siren was acquiring over him.

Nevertheless, the sensation caused by the very knowledge of his danger was a delightful one, and the evening passed far too swiftly. It was with real regret, then, that he at last arose to say good-night.

"You will come again soon?" queried Cora, as she, too, arose, and offered him her hand.

"As soon as you like," he said, quickly, and then his face flushed a little.

"Did you know I was going to give a grand party?" she asked, abruptly.

"I had not heard of it."

"Well, I am. It is for your uncle's sake—to further his political projects, and bring certain important personages together."

"Ah, I see! When is it to be?"

"Some days hence, and I wish I might have the benefit of your advice about some arrangements I desire to make."

"I fear my advice will be worth very little to you, but of course it is freely at your service."

"I want to make some alterations in and additions to the garden—clear away here and there, and add marble statues and the like."

"Ah, indeed!"

"Yes; and I propose to light the whole by electricity."

"That will be charming."

"Will it not? What delightful promenades my guests will be enabled to take during the intervals between the dances!"

"I cannot conceive of anything more delightful."

"Then come and tell me where the new plants and statues should be placed."

"With pleasure, if you really wish it."

"Of course I do. Come to-morrow—come to luncheon at two."

"Very well," and bidding her good-evening, he descended to the library.

He had hardly seated himself when his uncle entered.

"Ah, there you are?" he exclaimed, coming briskly forward. "Eh, well?"

"Very well, indeed, uncle—much better than I had expected."

"You have seen her, then?"

"Yes, certainly."

"And what did she say to you?"

"Not much; but she was charming."

"Seriously, you did not remark anything?"

"I remarked only that she was very lovely and very kind."

"That as a matter of course. But what I want to know is—in plain words: Do you think she loves me a little?"

"Assuredly, after her way as much as she can love, for she has naturally a very cold disposition."

"Ah, as to that it doesn't much matter; all I demand is not to be disagreeable to her."

"You are very far from being that, sir."

"You think so? Well, you give me great pleasure. Now you may go, if you please; but come back soon—come often. Stay! We are going to give a grand party, ball, or something of the kind. It's necessary, my friends say. I wish you would come."

"I should be glad to do so; but you forforget; I am in mourning."

"Ah, true; but you might come and keep me company in the snuggery. I never dance, and soon tire of the crowd in the parlors."

"Well, I can see no harm in that."

"Quite the contrary, I should think. You will come, then?"

"Yes; and to-morrow I have promised Mrs. Elliston to run into luncheon, and give her some advice about certain changes she desires to make in the garden."

"Ah, do; I shall take it as a favor, as I am obliged to be away, and she always mopes when left alone."

"He is going to be away and she at home alone," mused Eugen. "I wonder if that is the reason she was so anxious I should come." And he left the house in a very thoughtful mood.

However, at two the next day he was promptly on hand, and a few minutes later was summoned to the dining-room.

During luncheon little out of the commonplace was said, one or more servants being always present. But as they rose from the table Cora asked:

"Will you go into the garden with me, now?"

He bowed, and she led the way through a side door.

As they reached the walk she turned and said:

"Let us go to the summer house. I want, in the first place, to get your advice about that."

"I don't see it," he replied, looking about him.

"Of course not. It is concealed by the trees and that arbor yonder."

"Ah, that is it." And they started down the walk together.

"What are you thinking of?" asked Cora abrubtly, after a moment's silence.

"Nothing. Only watching the coming storm."

"Are you becoming poetical, my friend?"

"There is no necessity for becoming, for I already am infinitely so."

"I do not think so. Will you stay to dinner?"

"Thanks, I can not. I must return to the store."

"That is unfortunate. There is so much I want you to do for me."

"I am very sorry; but there are certain matters that I must attend to for the firm."

"Nevertheless, it is unfortunate."

"Cannot Sly—Slyme help you?"

"He cannot do everything, you know."

"By the way, I do not like your Slyme."

"Nor I, either. And do not call him my Slyme, if you please."

"How came my uncle to engage him?"

"He was recommended to him at the same time by an old friend as a freethinker, and by another as a very religious man."

"What nonsense!"

"Nevertheless," said Cora, "he is intelligent and witty, and writes a fine hand."

"That last is an advantage."

"And you?"

"How? What of me?"

"Do you also write a good hand?"

"I will show you whenever you wish."

"Ah! and will you write to me?"

It is difficult to imagine just the tone in which Cora said all this.

"I will write you either prose or verse, as you wish," Eugene answered.

"Ah! you know how to compose verses?"

"When I am inspired."

"And when are you inspired!"

"Generally in the morning."

"It is afternoon now. That is not complimentary to me."

"But you had no desire to inspire me, I think."

"Why not, then? I should be happy and proud to do so. Do you know what I should like to put there?" And she stopped before a beautiful fountain.

"I do not know."

"You cannot even guess? I would like to put an artificial rock there, with a marble nymph resting upon it."

"Why not a natural rock? In your place I should put a natural one."

"That is an idea," said Cora, and walking on they passed the fountain.

"But it really thunders. I admire thunder in a place like this. Do you?"

"I prefer it down town."

"Why?"

"Because I should not hear it."

"You have no imagination."

"I have; but I smother it."

"Very possible. I have suspected you of hiding your merits, and particularly from me."

"Why should I conceal my merits from you?"

"I myself do so. It is charming."

"But why?"

"For charity—not to dazzle me, and with regard for my peace of mind. You are really too good, I assure you. Here comes the rain."

Large drops of rain commenced to fall on the flowers, the grass and the walks. The day was passing, and the sudden shower bent down the boughs of the trees.

"We must go in," said the lady; "this begins to get serious."

She turned toward the house; but after step or two a bright flash broke forth over her head, the noise of the thunder resounded, and a deluge of rain fell around.

Fortunately the summer-house was close at hand; there were openings on two sides, but the structure was large and the roof tight.

Cora entered, and took refuge in the dryest place she could find, and her companion followed her.

The storm, in the meantime, increased in violence. The rain fell in torrents, inundating the soil around the frail structure. The lightning flashed incessantly. Every now and then a great branch of the neighboring tree scraped the roof, detaching pieces, which fell heavily to the ground.

"I find this very beautiful," said Cora, presently.

"I also," said Eugene, raising his eyes to the roof, "but I do not know if we are safe here."

"If you fear, you had better go!" said Cora, quickly.

"I fear for you."

"You are too good, I assure you."

She took off her hat and commenced brushing it with her glove, to remove the drops of rain which had fallen upon it. After a slight pause, she suddenly raised her uncovered head and cast on Eugene one of those searching looks which prepare a man for an important question.

"My friend," she said, "if you were sure that one of these beautiful flashes of lightning would kill you in ten minutes, what would you do?"

"Why, naturally," he replied, "I should make you my adieux."

"How?"

He looked her in the face in terror.

"Do you know," he said, "there are times when I am tempted to think you are a devil?"

"Truly! Well, there are times when I am tempted to think so myself—for instance, at this moment. Do you know what I should wish? I wish I could control the lightning, and in two seconds you would cease to exist."

"For what reason?"

"Because I remember there was a man to whom I offered my love, and who refused it, and this man still lives. And this displeases me a little—a great deal—passionately!"

"Are you serious?" he asked gravely.

She commenced laughing.

"I hope you did not think so. I am not so wicked. It was a joke, and in bad taste, I admit. But seriously now, Eugene, what is your opinion of me? What kind of a woman am I?"

"I fear I cannot answer you."

"Ah, well, I am not so very bad; indeed, I am a good woman—one who loves you well—with a little rancor, but not much, and who wishes you all sorts of prosperity in this world and the next. Aren't you glad? Do not answer me; it might embarrass you, and it is useless."

She left her shelter, and turned her face toward the lowering sky.

"The storm is over," she said. "Let us go in."

She then perceived that the ground outside of the summer-house was transformed into a lake of mud and water.

"What shall I do?" she said, looking at her light boots. Then turning to Eugene, added:

"Will you get me a boat?"

Eugene himself recoiled from placing his foot in the mud and water.

"If you will wait a little," he said, "I shall be able to find you some heavy boots or rubbers, no matter what."

"It will be much easier," she said, abruptly, "for you to carry me to the side door;" and without waiting for the young man's reply, she commenced tucking up her skirts carefully, and when she had finished, said: "I am ready."

He looked at her with astonishment, and thought for a moment she was jesting; but soon saw she was perfectly serious.

"Of what are you afraid?" she asked.

"I am not at all afraid," he answered.

"Do you think some one will see us? They cannot."

"I don't care if they do."

"Is it that you are not strong enough?"

"Great Scott! I should think I was."

He took her in his arms as in a cradle, while she held up her dress with both her hands. He then left the summer-house and moved across the garden with his strange burden.

He was obliged to be very careful not to slip on the wet earth, and this absorbed him during the first few steps; but when he found his footing more sure, he felt a natural curiosity to observe the countenance of the lady.

Her uncovered head rested a little one side on the arm with which he held her. Her lips were slightly parted with a half-wicked smile that showed her fine white teeth. The same expression of ungovernable malice burned in her dark eyes, which she riveted for some seconds on those of Eugene with penetration, then suddenly veiled them under the fringe of her dark lashes. This glance sent a thrill like lightning to his very marrow.

"Do you wish to drive me mad?" he murmured.

"Who knows?" she replied.

The same moment she disengaged herself from his arms, and, placing her foot on the ground, ran up the veranda steps.

They reached the back drawing-room without exchanging a word.

Just as Eugene was about to withdraw Cora turned to him and said:

"Be sure that at heart I am very good, really."

Notwithstanding this soft assertion Eugene left the house in a decidedly uncomfortable state of mind. Indeed, he carried away the most painful impression of the scenes of that afternoon.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

A Forgotten Tomb.

A short time since inquiry was made in regard to the place where the father of George Washington was buried. Diligent search here failed for some time to ascertain the location of the grave of Augustine Washington. But the information has finally been secured, says a Washington correspondent of the New York Star. It seems that Augustine Washington, the father of General George Washington, died April 12, 1743, in Stafford County, and his body was brought down and deposited in the vault at Wakefield, near Bridges Creek, in Westmoreland County, where his first wife (Jane Butler) had been buried in November, 1728. The site of this vault and burial ground is correctly located on a chart made from a survey of "Washington's birthplace" by A. Lindenkohl in September, 1879, copies of which chart can be obtained from the office of the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey in Washington. The spot is occasionally visited by tourists, and was seen by Bishop Meade in 1857, who describes its neglected condition as "disgusting."

The condition has not been improved since. The burial ground occupies a space 50 or 60 feet square. The arch of the vault fell in many years ago, and the excavation is nearly filled with debris. Near by are two gravestones, one 1696, marking the grave of two children (John and Mildred) of Lawrence Washington, the grandfather of George Washington. The other is over the grave of Jane, the first wife of Augustine Washington, the father of the General, with the date Nov. 24, 1728. There are other fragments of gravestones lying around. The whole place is overgrown with vines and burdocks. It is a question as to who has a legal title to the spot now. In 1813 Col. George C. Washington sold the Wakefield estate to John Gray, but made a reservation of the old "family burial ground" and 60 feet square at the birthplace.

In 1858 Col. George C. Washington's son, Lewis Washington, granted both spots to the commonwealth on condition that they should be suitably marked and inclosed. The Legislature accepted the grant, but the conditions were not complied with. In 1833 the United States acquired title to the sixty feet square at the birthplace and other land adjoining for the purpose of marking that spot with a monument, but nothing was done about the burial ground. In 1887 Congress made an appropriation for a monument at the birthplace. The work has not yet been executed.

Discovered the Truth About Him.

Brown—You don't mean to say you've quit trading with Cutaway? Why, I thought you'd swear by Cutaway.

Robinson—I've got through with him. I owed him a little bill, and he sent around last week to say that he was in urgent need of funds, and would consider it a great favor if I would help him out.

Brown—And you found it inconvenient?

Robinson—No; it was quite convenient; but, Lord! I thought the man was rich.—Puck.

Mr. Mann was an old settler in this county, and aged about 58 years. He leaves a wife and five children. The funeral was conducted by Rev. J. H. Crouse at Hamilton on Monday forenoon. [A different account had reached us and will be found elsewhere.]

BUTLER.

Mrs. George Stoner died last Monday morning.

The alarming cry of "Fire! Fire!" aroused up our sleepy town about midnight last Monday night. The night was clear and very still with a slight descending mist, the sky was red with the ominous glow, and to the sleepy individuals it appeared that a large part of the town was ablaze. The fire started in C. H. Thurstin's meat market and burned both ways, destroying the building in which it started and a saloon on each side. It was a sorry sight to see these old landmarks go up in smoke. The sufferers by the fire, are R. M. Haskin's building and personal effects, C. H. Thurstin's meat market, W. W. Tomlinson's building, Dora Hirschler's building and Gabe Strauss' saloon and billiard table. The most of the contents of the buildings were saved. There was a slight sprinkling of insurance, R. M. Haskins $500, C. H. Thurstin $300, Gabe Straues $100, Dora Hirchler $200, W. W. Tomlinson $400. McNabb's hotel was saved by heroic effort, which stayed the destructive element in that direction, and Mutzfelt's store room checked it on the north. So the perdictions of the oldest citizens that the whole row would burn if it ever got on fire, was not verified, and McNabb's hotel stands a monument to the ante railroad days of Butler. A very quiet night and moisture on every thing saved much valuable property from destruction, and reduced the number of our saloons.

Several parties have complained to us about the carelessness of boys in the use of Flobert guns. Some parties while fishing in the creek Tuesday, heard boys shooting on the flats, and heard the bullets whistle close to their heads, some striking the bank within a few feet of them. Others have been put to similar risks. W. D. Rickel, who now owns the Baker place east of Seventh street bridge, has had some of his stock injured by these wicked little guns. We would think the tragic death of the Lawrence boy, by the careless handling of firearms, would be a warning. But the work goes right on.

Shot and Killed.

We are called upon to chronicle the death of little Judson Lawrence, the adopted son of Mrs. John Lawrence, of North VanBuren street. The lad was 9 years, 10 months and 26 days old, when the fatal day, Monday, June 30, 1890, dawned upon him. The facts gleaned are about as follows: Young Lawrence, it seems, was a lover of guns, and had gone to Isaac Brandon's about 9 a. m., to get one, as he said he wanted to go to the woods to kill some birds. He was sternly refused by Olla and Asa Brandon, but after they had gone to work in the fields, Judson went to the residence of Mr. Brandon and persuaded Artie Brandon, about 12 years old, to show him the gun. Artie refused at first, but finally consented, and brought out the shotgun, which had been heavily loaded to kill a sheep dog, and as Judson stood near the kitchen door and about three feet from the muzzle of the gun, it was accidently discharged, the contents of which tore all the flesh off both of the boy's legs from the knees to the ankles. Tom Somers who was passing by, heard the report, and ran in and picked the little lad up and carried him to a shade tree near by, and laid him down in an unconscious condition. Drs. Swarts, Sebring and Casebeer, were called, and gave the little fellow stimulants, but could not revive him, and as no bones were broken, they bandaged his limbs, and did all they could for him, but he never rallied enough so that his wounds could be properly dressed. And from the shock and loss of blood before help arrived, the messenger of death came about 4 p. m., and put an end to all earthly suffering. The funeral took place from the Baptist church, Tuesday at 2 p. m., the discourse being delivered by Rev. T. C. Smith. This should be a timely warning to all the little boys of Auburn, to leave guns alone.

Obituary.

Elizabeth (Marks) Kirkpatrick was born in Richland county, Ohio, April 27, 1832, and died at her home in Richland township, DeKalb county, Ind., June 28, 1890, at the age of 58 years, 2 months and 1 day. She was married to Joseph Kirkpatrick, in the same county, Sept. 16, 1855. To them were born eight children, six sons and two daughters, four sons and one daughter surviving to mourn their loss. Mr. Kirkpatrick died, April 6, 1887. They moved to this county in the fall of 1856, settling on the farm on which they lived till death. Their first cabin stood about twenty rods west of the present residence. A few years later, they built their frame house on the north side, but later, they erected the fine brick residence that has since been the family home, and in which both died. In the winter of 1857, Mrs. Kirkpatrick united with the Methodist Protestant church, and lived in accordance with its teachings, till the Savior called her home. She was a kind and loving mother, and had many warm friends and no enemies. She was laid to rest in the Allen Chapel cemetery near Kendallville, June 29, 1890, Rev. Mr. Bartlett officiating on the sad occasion.

Tramped by a Horse.

Monday afternoon, I. O. Bachtel, proprietor of the East Seventh street flouring mills, sent his horse to John Knoder's blacksmith shop to have its shoes sharpened and reset, and when the work was finished, his little 12-year-old son went over to ride the horse home, and as he was trotting the animal along at a good gait, as he neared the stable door, the horse stopped suddenly, throwing the lad off. The little boy fell on some plank in such a way as to roll back under the horse, which tramped upon him seriously injuring him in the groin of the left leg, and inflicting other serious injuries. Dr. Ford was called, and at once sewed up the ugly wound and otherwise gave him medical aid. Besides the main wound, the lad was hurt on the arm and side. He is at present resting very well, but it will be some time before he will be able to be around.

The Courier wishes them success and prosperity in their new southern home.

Wanted to Stop the Train.

Monday morning as the local freight was coming into town on the Lake Shore road, a little 3-year-old child of Mr. Amos Zerwis walked upon the track at the foot of Seventh street, and sat down between the rails and faced the train. Mr. Amos Miller and Frank Flinke heard the train coming, and in a moment a shrill whistle, when they both started, Flinke getting there in time to lift the child in safety from its perilous situation. When asked why it sat down there the little one replied, "I want to top de train." This was a narrow escape, for the trainmen could not have stopped in time to have saved the child.

Lives Under a Church.

There is agreat deal of anxiety experienced at present by the people living near the Church of God, at this place. The subject of this uneasiness is one of those treacherous, crawling reptiles, commonly called a snake. It is of unusual size and seems to have its abode beneath the church building where it has been sought after for some days. We hope the reptile may be caught without anyone being injured, as we are in no way on friendly terms with snakes of any kind.

Killed by Lightning.

Sunday afternoon during the thunder storm that passed over Franklin township, this county, Edward Mann, a farmer, lost his life from a stroke of lightning. It seems that Mr. Mann had gone out into his milkhouse to find a cool place to read, and ascended to the loft of the same, and sat down upon a board. He had not been there long before the storm came up, and as it was cool there he remained in the loft. During the progress of the storm the building was struck by lightning which killed him instantly. His body was found by his family, and the remains were interred in the Waterloo cemetry on Monday.

Drowned at Spencerville.

The body of Henry Kessler, a young man of about twenty-one, was found floating in the St. Joe River at Spencerville just back of Henry Myers' wagon shop on Monday. It is supposed to be accidental, as he was seen walking along the bank Sunday evening about 9 o'clock, near the place where his body was found. Our correspondent does not give any opinion as to how it happened, but it is surely a sad case and should be a warning to all.

Two Accidents in One Family.

Last Saturday there were two accidents in the family of John Surface, who lives near New Era. One of his children was severely kicked in the breast by a horse, and shortly after another child had one foot cut off and the other terribly mangled by being caught in a mowing machine.

Upon opening a box of envelopes Saturday we found a bullet imbedded in a bunch of the envelopes, and upon examination we found that the ball entered the box from the bottom, and had not injured the envelopes in the least. The Whitney Family parade Saturday was few and far between—about the size of the crowd that witnessed it. The band that headed the parade was far above the average of traveling bands, but its followers were ten men riding those quadrupeds that have risen one degree above the jackass. This constituted the great, dazzling and brilliant street parade.

How an organ grinder can stand in the street all day in the hot sun, grinding away all the time for a few pennies, is certainly strange. We can't say that he is lazy, we can't say that he is not, for it must require considerable grit to stand both the heat of the sun and the bluffs and jeers of passers-by. An organ grinder should seek a more honorable vocation.

The Dispatch insists that Judge McClellan had nothing to do with getting John McClellan's pension." The Dispatch must be grossly ignorant. Next it will say the Judge had nothing to do with getting Mrs. Silver's pension, Mr. Copp's at St. Joe or with getting through both houses, the private pension bill of Mrs. Miner. If the Judge was a republican, the Dispatch would claim he did the whole work.

Our life is made up of mistakes and the greatest one I ever made was in not using Loose's Extract of Red Clover long ago. I suffered two years, scarcely knowing a well day, with rheumatism and indigestion, had arrived at the conclusion that I was nothing but a trial to myself and friends. I commenced taking your fluid extract of Red Clover, in fact arrived at the point where I would take anything any one recommended. Saw your ad. and thought I would try a little newspaper recommendation on my own hook. Like all other remedies the first bottle seemed to do me good. But unlike all other remedies I discovered no bad effects from taking it. I am now on my thirteenth bottle and though perfectly well, go on the supposition that if a little does me so much good, will keep it up.

Very truly yours,

St. Joe News: Mr. and Mrs. J C. Henry, of Auburn, whiled away a few pleasant hours with friends at this place last Wednesday. Mr. Henry improved the time while here in billing the town for the grand celebration at Auburn on the Fourth, and he did his work well, as St. Joe is literally plastered over with hand-bills. He evidently believes in the old maxim, that if a little is good, a good deal is better.

Pat Welch couldn't keep on the sidewalk Wednesday last, consequently he was placed behind the bars for protection. He was taken out by Harley Bumpus and set to work on the foundation of the new M. E. church, but the sidewalk got pretty narrow again Thursday. Pat is a good stone mason, and he should remember that when old age o'ertakes him, his spare dimes will come in handy, for it's a hard road to travel over the hills to the poor house.

We are glad to note that DePauw University, Greencastle, Ind., offers a free scolarship for the entire college course to honor graduates of the commissioned High Schools of the State. The normal school in Auburn begins July 21. No pains will be spared by Mr. Harrison and Mr. Coe to give every student full value for the time and money expended. Both are able instructors and their work is well known. Every young man or woman who can spare the time should attend this school. Those who desire to fit themselves as teachers, should be especially interested. If any find themselves behind the class in some branch, here is the chance to get caught up so as to be able to keep up next year. For information call on Mr. H. E. Coe, of this place.

Laporte Argus: Last week we gave an account of a meeting of the "Indiana Wool Growers' association," which was a meeting of four, and no more, well known republican politicians. The Ohio Wool Growers' association, that we hear so much about, is a similar organization. It is composed of three breeders of fine wool bucks, which they sell at big prices to the sheep ranches of Texas, New Mexico and California, where the sheep are pastured on government lands and herded by a few Mexicans ably assisted by shepherd dogs—all "protected for the benefit of American labor."

Nelson Prentiss, of Albion, who was here at the old settlers' meeting, is the son of a Revolutionary soldier; a brother and sister, being also living, all in Noble county. His father was a waiter for Gen. Putman, when twelve years old. He soon got a job making cartridges, and being large for his age, soon after enlisted as a soldier. He took part in the battle of Bennington and those at Saratoga, and was present at the execution of Andre. Later, he went on board a privateer, and was captured by a British vessel. He was a prisoner in the old "Jersey" prison ship for a long time, and later, was sent to Bermuda, where he was kept till the war was over. About 1830 he was granted a pension of $40 a year, payable every six months. This seems small, now, but he was satisfied. Mr. Prentiss belongs to the society known as "Sons of Revolutionary Soldiers, "though it contains but a few sons," most of the members being of later generations. Mr. Prentiss' life work has been as honorable as his ancestry. He has been a prominent and respected citizen of his county, and has occupied many positions of trust. He has been in the legislature, and for thirty-eight years was school examiner, or county superintendent, and his still strong memory makes him the storehouse of all that pertains to Noble county's earlier, as well as later history. He has many friends here, especially the family of S. W. Ralston, Mr. Swineford, Mr. Forkner, the COURIER folks and others, who always make him welcome.

C. H. Sayler, the blacksmith on the corner of Fifth and Jackson street has been overrun with work lately, and found it necessary to secure the services of Mr. Simon Poorman, of Montpelier, Ohio, to assist him.

A man come here last Saturday, and claimed to be advance agent for John Robinson's big show, which would be here, he said July 4th. He went to Waterloo, and Butler, with the same story. He is evidently a fraud, for it is claimed that wherever he could, he got contracts with butchers, to furnish a big lot of meat, they asking five cents all around while he said the show always paid seven. He wanted to divide this difference, and we are told, he now and then succeeded, so making his expenses.

Elizabeth, widow of the late Joseph Kirkpatrick, died at her home in Richland township' Saturday, June 28, 1890, aged about 58 years. Her disease was dropsy of the heart. The funeral took place at the old home Sunday at 2 p. m. and the remains were interred in the Allen Chapel cemetery, two miles east of Kendallville. Mrs. Kirkpatrick came with her husband from Richland county, Ohio, about 1856, and settled on a farm in Richland township, where they have since lived. Her husband was killed by a runaway team about two years ago. Four sons, John R., Geo. W., Charles and Joseph, and one daughter, Sarah Alice, are left to mourn their loss.

A laughable joke is told on a young couple who were out walking a Sunday or two ago, wheeling their first born in a new baby carriage. They noticed people smile as they passed by and wondered what was the matter. The wife finally said: "I'll walk ahead a little way and you see if anything is wrong with my dress." Nothing to smile at there, and the husband called her back and said, "Now let me walk ahead and you see if my pants are bursted," and he walked on, wheeling the buggy before him. A quiet little laugh brought him to a sudden halt before he had gone twenty feet, and he blushed all over as she pointed to the trademark on the back of the buggy. It read, "Our Own Make." They had forgotten to tear it off when the buggy was unpacked.—Ex.

Millie Sechler, of Newville, will read the COURIER for another year. She called up Saturday and paid a year's subscription in advance. The ladies are not slow when it comes to paying for their reading matter.

At the close of his sermon last Sunday Mr. Sawyers gave a brief account of his work of four years, here and at Waterloo. In this time he had preached fifty funeral sermons, baptized about thirty children and received about 200 into the two churches.

The Whitney Family band marched up to the corner of Seventh and Main street Saturday evening, and gave a band concert to our people. This was a rich treat for our music loving citizens. This band is certainly one of the best that ever played in Auburn. The leader, Mr. Floyd Whitney, won the admiration of all by his fine cornet playing.

Marshal Headley was taken ill Thursday evening about midnight, and started down town to see a physician but when he got as far as Dr. Swartz' he could go no farther nor call for help. Henry Baker found him on the walk, called a doctor, and secured a buggy and took him home. He was suffering from inflammation of the bladder. At last accounts he was recovering slowly.

An exchange has this to say about one of Benny Harrison's lately appointed postmasters: "It is stated that the postoffice department officials were somewhat puzzled by the fact that no mail was being sent out from a country office in Stark county, where a new postmaster had been appointed. On sending an inspector to investigate, it was discovered that he was holding the mail sack until he got it full before sending it."

Rev. H. A. Sawyers preached his farewell sermon, Sunday to a large audience. It was a friendly talk and most affecting as well as interesting. His hearers were strongly moved, and when at the close, the choir sang, "God be with you till we meet again," there were few dry eyes in the room. Mr. Sawyers and his estimable wife have made friends of their people here, as well as of all our citizens. All greatly regret to see them go, and an abundance of kind words and wishes will follow them to their new home.

The Whitney Family's great novelty chestnut, rolled into town Saturday morning, and pitched their tepee on the reservation just across Seventh street bridge in Oklahoma, opened the doors of their wigwam and began to shout the lemonade and peanut racket to about a score of Auburn's industrious (?) kids. The door receipts in the afternoon were not heavy enough to break the ticket wagon down, so they built their campfires in the evening, which drew a goodly number of our citizens across the stream into the new hunting grounds, where they laid down their shekels of silver and gold, walked bravely into the wigwam to look upon the same old quart of chestnuts they looked upon when the bushel was full.

We see by Cal. Husselman's notice in regard to Farmers' Alliances, that he alludes to other similar organizations. We presume he means, the recent attempts of certain parties from Michigan, who are coming over into this state to organize the kind of societies they have there. We would suggest, that too many cooks are apt to spoil the broth. The good that united societies may do, is almost certain to fail if attempted by two or three societies, each working differently. Indiana has a system of her own. If her farmers can accomplish anything by such organization, it can be done best by following the Indiana plan. These Michigan chaps get a certain sum for each lodge they organize, and that is about all they care for. Lodges built up on this principle will fail when the cash stops flowing. There are no institutions as safe as home institutions.

While traveling over the country, one is struck very forcibly with the idea that the "sun-tanned ruralists" are at this time of the year exercising great diligence in getting their farm work done. Here and there the vast area of country is decked with hay fields. Some of them have been mowed and the sweet odor of the new made hay is wafted to the nostrils freighted with a delightful fragrance, that if taken in any length of time creates an enormous appetite for the good things to eat, which are found in an abundance at the country home. Notwithstanding the many hours of ceaseless toil to which the farmer is subjected, there is something in and about country life that is intensely fascinating. Truly the scenes and surroundings of nature presents themselves with a grandeur that cannot be equalled by the greatest artist that ever wielded the "brush" and "palette" in an artistic attempt to color the magnificent splendor of the natural world beneath the silvery rays of a moon-lit sky on canvas.

Charley Smith had more fun last Saturday than Whitney's cage of monkeys had with the country cousin and his best girl while attending the show. Charley walked around town in a bran new suit of clothes, greeting each one of his old friends, and maybe foes, with his accustomed smile, but each one gave him a mysterious look, and even went so far as to refuse the shaking of hands, thinking he was a street fakir, or a confidence man, following up the Whitney show. At anyrate Charley did not get mad and swear about it, but walked off in the style of an "I-will-see-you-later, man. The fact that Charley is now 55 years of age and has lived in Auburn, over 20 years, he was rather abashed at his friends using him so cooly. Charley had not been shaved since he was old enough to vote, and this hot weather induced him to shed his heavy, long gray beard, and hair—except from the top of his head and upper lip. His heavy mustache he had colored a jet black, waxed and curled in the latest style, thus giving him a very dignified appearance. It was some time before his most intimate friends could believe that this was the original Charley Smith, and some one remarked that Charley had to pay for his dinner under his own roof.

GEORGE BIDWELL, the famous ticket-of-leave man who served fourteen and one-half years on a life sentence in British prisons for the great $5,000,000 forgery on the Bank of England, has twenty-five acres of property near Muskegon, Mich., and is there now looking it over. HENRY VILLARD, the eminent financier, is writing his autobiography for the use of his children alone. He was born in Germany, and the story of his early years is written in German, while, having been educated in France, his school-days are described in French. His business and social life in America will be recorded in English.

A CALIFORNIA ranchman was disturbed by the coughing of his cook. He ordered the cook to cease. The cook wanted to but couldn't. The ranchman finally arose and seized the man and held his head in a barrel of water to drown the cough. In so doing he drowned the man and has gone to prison for twenty years.

THE Queen dowager of Portugal on one occasion took home from Paris 1,000 pair of shoes. Subsequently she ordered no less than seventy dresses from Worth, to be delivered together, which on their way home were lost at sea. Her Majesty, no way concerned, sent word to Worth to supply seventy duplicates, and these reached Lisbon safely.

SURGEON T. H. PARKER, who was with Stanley in his last African expedition, vaccinated forty native bearers with the party. An epidemic of small-pox breaking out, thirty-eight of the forty passed quite unscathed, while the unvaccinated natives were dying like sheep around them; the other two, who showed imperfect marks, had slight attacks from which they recovered unharmed.

WORKMEN while excavating in a lot near the McClellan House, Gettysburg, dug up the remains of a Union soldier, several Union buttons establishing the fact. The bones were taken to the National Cemetery for reinterment. A number of teeth filled with gold were also found. It is said that the lot in which the body was buried was occupied at the time of the battle by an embalming establishment.

WHAT a delightful country Germany will be for a German to have anything to do with if General von Caprivi's proposed measure to tax all natives ineligible for army service and all German citizens living abroad should become a law! If he could only persuade this country to execute a treaty authorizing the taxation of all German-Americans, the cup of the Chancellor's ambition would probably be full.

THIS year is the 200th anniversary of the invention of the improved tobacco pipe—the bowl, the tube and the mouthpiece. Up to the year 1690 the only medium of enjoying the fragrant weed was by means of a cylindrical instrument fashioned from the crude clay and smelling of the earth, earthy. The inventor of the present combination pipe was a physician, Dr. Vilarius, of Vienna. The first tobacco pipe manufactory was established in 1690.

THE custom of strewing flowers on the graves of the dead originated among the women of the South, who during the civil war annually decorated the graves of the Confederate soldiers in that way. The beautiful custom was adopted throughout the country, and in 1868 and 1869 Gen. Logan, Commander-in-chief of the G. A. R., appointed May 30 for that purpose, because, it is said, the last soldier enlisted for the war was discharged on that day.

COUNT PUNONROSTRO, a prominent Spanish nobleman, has just died in Madrid. He was called "Count Fist-in-the-Face," and got the name oddly. He was once a game-keeper, and being called a liar by Charles V. for having claimed to have killed a certain bird, he slugged his Majesty in the face. The King doomed him to death, but afterward finding he was correct and admiring his pluck, said: "I not only pardon you, but I attach you to my person and make you Count of Punonrostro (Fist-in-the-Face.)"

VANILLA is produced from a species of orchid that attaches itself to walls, trees and other suitable objects. The plant has a long, fleshy stem, and the leaves are alternate, oval and lanceolate. The flower is of a greenish-white color and forms axillary spikes. The fruit is a pod, measuring, when full grown, some ten or twelve inches in length and about half an inch in diameter. The quality of the pod can be determined by the presence or non-presence of a crystalline efflorescence called givre, and by its dark chocolate-brown color.

EMIN PASHA wrote from Bagamoyo a letter to a lady in England in which he said: "It is quite clear that after fifteen years' service in Central Africa I am not willing to accept of a secondary place at Suakim or Wady Halfa, and another place does not exist for me in Egypt. I always trusted to God, and he will lead me also this time. To Europe I shall not return; if you hear, therefore, that I went back to the people I liked and was forced to leave, do not wonder. My life and my work belong to Africa, and there I shall die."

BY a new method of cementing iron the parts cemented are so effectually joined as to resist the blows even of a sledge hammer. The cement is composed of equal parts of sulphur and white lead, with a proportion of about one-sixth of borax. When the composition is to be applied it is wet with strong sulphuric acid, and a thin layer of it is placed between the two pieces of iron, which are at once pressed together. In five days it will be perfectly dry, all traces of the cement having vanished, and the work having every appearance of welding.

THE famous St. Bernard dogs are very carefully trained. A traveler who visited some of the monasteries of the monks of St. Bernard a few years ago found the monks teaching their dogs from the earliest stages of puppyhood. Not only is physical and mental training included in the teaching, but spiritual culture is by no means neglected. At meal time the dogs sit in a row, each with a tin dish before him containing his repast. Grace is said by one of the monks; the dogs sit motionless with bowed heads. Not one stirs until the "amen" is spoken. If a frisky puppy partakes of his meal before grace is over an older dog growls and gently tugs his ear.

PROF. W. PRESTON JOHNSTON says of General Lee when he was President of the college: "I never saw him take an ungraceful posture. No matter how long or fatiguing a faculty meeting might be, he always preserved an attitude in which dignity, decorum and grace were united. He was a very well built man, with rounded body and limbs, and seemed, without the slightest affectation or effort, to sit, or stand, or walk just as a gentleman should. He was never in a hurry, and all his gestures were easy and significant. He gave a minute attention to the details of his office, and liked to talk about them. I soon perceived that he did not like to discuss the event or incidents of the war."

WOMEN who have no business experience are apt to have very vague ideas of money. For instance, they never appreciate the value of a check until it is cashed. It does not seem like money to them, and I feel certain that if the average woman were offered her choice between five hundred dollars in notes and one thousand dollars in a check, and both were before her, and she had no time to think it out much, she would chose the five hundred dollars, and conclude she had the best of the bargain. There is no exaggeration in the story of a woman who, on hearing somebody say that a diamond cost fifteen hundred dollars, asserted: "Oh, no; I am sure that it cost more than that. I I am sure it was something over a thousand!"

"POVERY saved my life," said a robust, middle-aged man. "I was assistant book-keeper for a wholesale house and earning twelve hundred dollars a year. Something happened, no matter what, and I was thrown out. I was idle for two months and then I went to work for seven hundred and fifty dollars. At that time I was thin and weak, and couldn't walk a mile to save a dollar. At any rate, I thought I couldn't. But when my income was so fearfully reduced I found it absolutely necessary to economize, and I did so by walking home a distance of about five miles. It pretty nearly killed me at first. Then I began to enjoy it. Within three months I was walking both ways, and I've kept it up ever since. Ten miles a day, summer and winter, unless during a hard storm, and look at me! One hundred and eighty pounds, the appetite of an ostrich, and not a day's sickness in ten years. You see, gentlemen, how it was that the cutting down of my salary saved my life."

The Chatelaine Fad.

The best of the new devices of belt and chatelaine show a great deal of antique silver and plenty of pretty ornaments. The chatelaine is a pretty device under any circumstances, and when suspended against the right style of a gown adds a great deal to its appearance. One of these articles is of the ordinary antique silver, and has chains whereby to hang a velvet or leather bag with a silver snap, a note-book, pencil, scent-bottle, and watch. If desired, the bag for holding purse and handkerchief can also be hooked separately on the belt, dispensing entirely with the chain and relieving the wearer from the thumping of a well-filled pocket-book against her leg. Most jewelers keep any quantity of chatelaine attachments, and almost any article of use in the toilet or in needle-work can be carried in them.

HOW WE ARE TAXED.

[From the Chicago Herald.]

The American Economist, the organ of the Chinese-wall tariffites, insists that "farmers should as far as possible diversify their products and develop their raw material into more perfected forms." In illustration, it shows that a bushel of corn delivered at the seaboard is worth only 50 cents, whereas if it is converted into twelve and one-half pounds of pork it will be worth $1.25, or into twenty-three pounds of starch it will bring $1.38, or into four gallons of whisky it will realize $6. "It is true," says this high-tariff organ, "that the cost to the consumer and value of the resultant four gallons of whisky is swelled by the internal-revenue tax of 90 cents per gallon or $3.60 for the four gallons, but if the pledges of the present party in power before election are fulfilled that condition will soon remain only as a matter of history." The lesson of this statement by the American Economist is that instead of shipping 50 cents' worth of corn to the seaboard, farmers should convert it into $6 worth of whisky. Then, the Cleveland Plain Dealer thinks, the home-market theory will come into play, and, to carry it to its logical conclusion, the farmer will get drunk on his own whisky, and so forget the mortgage on his corn-field.

As an offset to the Wool Growers' Association there has recently been formed, in Boston, a Wool Consumers' Association, which has just sent out a circular signed by eighteen of the largest manufacturing companies and firms in New England, and asking the co-operation of all manufacturers and dealers in wool in a protest against any increase in the present duties on wool and in favor of a reduction on the same. The evident object of this new association is to neutralize the influence of the Wool Growers' Association, which has for a long time been the most arrogant and uncompromising of the beneficiaries of protection. The logical result of the demands made in the circular will be the abolition of all duties on woolen goods, and this the manufacturing companies and firms that signed the circular of the association are prepared to face. It is a very significant proof of the break-down of the protection sentiment in what has heretofore been one of its citadels, namely, New England.

Protection, either in the form of a bounty or of an indirect tax upon necessaries, is simply a scheme by which certain corporations or men may be enriched for political purposes at the expense of consumers. It gives rise to a wild scramble on the part of all conceivable industries, each of which is anxious to tap some vein of the public. The latest illustration of this feature of protection is the plea which the seventeen glucose factories in the United States have made for a bounty, in a letter recently sent to Mr. McKinley. There is reason in the plea, too. The glucose men have as much right to bounty as have the manufacturers of cane sugar. Says the letter referred to: "While a bounty on domestic glucose and corn sugar, as proposed, may have little immediate or apparent effect upon the total area planted to corn, yet it will tend to render prices of that cereal more stable, and ultimately to advance the price by enabling manufacturers of glucose and corn sugar from home-grown corn to export more largely and thus increase the home consumption of corn. But, conversely, the farmer who raises the corn which the glucose manufacturers consume would inevitably suffer. The consumption of corn in the glucose factories of the United States for several years has nearly or quite equaled one-half of our total exports of corn. If producers of glucose and corn sugar are denied a bounty, and producers of sugar from sorghum, beets, and sugar cane are granted a bounty, the glucose factories will have to largely curtail or entirely abandon operations, and the farmers will have to find other markets for that which they now consume. From any point of view, there does not seem to be a sufficient reason why the grower of sugar cane, sorghum, and beets should be favored at the expense of the grower of corn. But this is what the billl, as reported, proposes, and such must be its ultimate effect. The grower of corn is not only to be deprived of a large home market for his product, which he now enjoys, but he is to pay a bounty to the growers of beets, sorghum, and sugar cane besides. Surely this cannot be the intent of the bill."

The more the protection business is gone into the more complicated and difficult it gets. Mr. McKinley has evidently forgotten the Western farmer. Possibly, as the glucose makers say in another portion of their letter, through a mere oversight, which will be rectified as soon as attention is called to it. If the bounty is granted, the farmers will be happy. A great industry will spring up which will take all their corn, except that which is made into whisky. The farmers can live on glucose and whisky, and can feel that they are helping to pay the bounties which are benefiting them so whenever they pay their taxes. The whole transaction will be, as it were, right in the family.

It may not be without interest to scan the direction of our foreign trade. By the last report from the Treasury we sold abroad last year of cattle to the value of $25,673,366, of which Great Britain took $24,612,513, and all the rest of the world only $1,060,853. Of canned beef we sold $6,026,970, of which Great Britain took all but $1,289,207; of fresh beef we sold $13,002,713, of which Great Britain took all but $1,053,423; of salted beef we sold $3,899,735, of which Great Britain took all but $1,109,454; of pork products and lard we sold $77,744,381, of which Great Britain took $48,360,408. Those "British paupers" are pretty high feeders and rather good customers.

In recent tariff literature, a little pamphlet of eight pages, entitled "Our Infant Woolens," gives the best presentation which has been offered of the case of this notorious increase of burdensome taxes. The statements of the writer are based upon the official figures of the several tariff laws, beginning with the first legislation on this subject in 1791, showing how this "infant" industry has constantly demanded and received larger tribute from the people as it grew in strength. The first tariff on woolen manufactures averaged 6 per cent; but the new tariff in the bill now pending, increases the tax enormously, as in the case of cheap dress goods, which are to pay 100 per cent, and cheap hosiery and underwear, which are taxed 214 per cent.

It takes 50,000 tons of twine a year to bind the wheat and oats crop of the country. It is worth at manufacturers' price 13 cents a pound, or $260 per ton of 2,000 pounds. The value of the 50,000 tons at the manufacturers' price therefore is $13,000,000—and this is what the wheat and oats crop of the country pays every year for the twine used in harvesting it. The protective duty on this twine is 40 per cent, and on the manilla it is made of 20 per cent—so that it will be strictly within limits to say that one-half the cost of this binding twine is the real value of the article, and the other half is protection—or, to put the matter in a different shape, that the wheat and oats farmers of the United States are made to pay a penalty of $6,500,000 a year for the crime of raising those crops. Estimating the portion of the wheat yield that is bound with twine at 300,000,000 bushels, the cost per bushel is 8 mills. This looks like a thing too insignificant to be talked about, but it helps to tell on a farmer when he gets only 60 cents for his wheat and 12 cents for his oats. And the curious part of the business is that the government which extorts this tax from him has no earthly use for it, since it has more money than it knows what to do with. It wrings the tax from him and hands it over to the twine manufacturer and the hemp raiser to "protect" them in their business. If a farmer raises 1,000 bushels of wheat and oats the penalty is $7. If the farmers of a grain-growing county in Illinois or Kansas raise 1,000,000 bushels the penalty is $7,000. The wheat crop of the State of Illinois in 1888 was 34,000,000 bushels and the oats crop 137,000,000 bushels—total, 171,000,000 bushels—and the cost of the twine used in binding it was $2,394,000—one-half of which, or $1,197,000, was "protection." In other words, the Government of the United States forced the Illinois farmers to pay a penalty of $1,197,000 for daring to cultivate wheat and oats, and handed the money over to the favorite persons engaged in the praiseworthy business of making twine—and this is the policy which the Republican Senators and Representatives in Congress from Illinois favor and support as a means of "protecting American labor and developing American industries."

Blaine's Treachery to McKinley.

The utter incapacity of the present Republican leaders to deal with the evils that beset the country is shown by their divided councils at Washington.

Mr. McKinley, the author of the infamous Chicago platform of 1888, and a hopeful disciple of James G. Blaine, is now in some measure repudiated by his preceptor. Mr. McKinley is openly and defiantly for a robber tariff, just as Mr. Blaine always has been, but Mr. Blaine, more crafty and less troubled with convictions, perceives that the idea which he has represented all along is tottering to its fall, and, while Mr. McKinley seeks to carry out the promises made at Chicago, the Secretary of State attempts, by exploiting his new hobby of reciprocal trade, to gather popularity at the expense of his lieutenant. Mr. Blaine's "discovery" that the McKinley bill has gone too far, and that if we admit sugar free we should compel the countries that produce sugar to admit American products free, is like all the other startling discoveries that this shallow and pretentious party chieftain has made. It reveals merely a glimmer of truth and self-interest. It throws but the faintest ray of light upon the outer edge of a question that demagogues, corruptionists, and ignoramuses have no capacity to deal with. Yet, because of this proposition from a man who has spent his life in obstructing trade, in fostering monopolies, and in propagating economical error, it is boldly proclaimed that Mr. Blaine is becoming a convert to free trade. Nothing could be farther from the truth.

Reciprocity of the sort proposed by Mr. Blaine is merely the fad of a man who is incapable of considering questions of commerce apart from the selfish interests of the combines that make up his chief political backing. He prates of reciprocity with the people of South America, they taking our grain and provisions and we their coffee and woods and dye-stuffs, little thinking that Great Britain, a much better market, is likely to be lost to us because we foolishly raise the tariff wall against it. We cannot hope to do much in the way of exporting bread-stuffs to South America, because that continent is soon to be an active competitor with us in the markets of the world. Free trade with South America would be beneficial to all concerned, but it would be of little account so long as our manufacturers were oppressed by the present unnecessary taxes upon raw materials. Mr. Blaine is not a free trader. He is a protectionist acting as a trimmer. He is playing a treacherous role in his attempt to gain popularity at the expense of McKinley, who is his dupe.

The commerce and the industry of the United States need nothing so much as to be let alone. They have been made the sport of cheap politicians, demagogues and monopolists long enough. McKinley, with his robber tariff, and Blaine, with his subsidies and reciprocity treaties, will have to be sent to the rear before the energies of the people can reach their highest developments.—Chicago Herald.

Federal Control of Elections.

When Speaker Reed was elected to the highest office within the gift of the Republican party, save, perhaps, the Presidency his personal friends did not deny that it was Mr. Reed's avowed purpose to make a record in what was termed "practical politics."

The culmination of Mr. Reed's dictatorial policy is found in the federal election bill which was recently forced through the party caucus of the House of Representatives. The unseating of a few isolated Democrats with the aid of his party followers, or the counting of non-voting members to make a quorum, are mild evidences of dictatorship compared to the party lash which Mr. Reed applied with vigor in securing the party's indorsement of the federal election bill.

In brief, the federal election bill enables a partisan board of federal canvassers to declare who is elected to Congress in each district of the State, and the Clerk of the House can only enroll the names of persons so certified on the roll of the House for organization purposes, under penalty of fine or imprisonment. This board of canvassers is not answerable to the laws of any State. It paves the way for wholesale frauds in the seating of non-elected members, beside which the partisanship of recent contested election cases would pale into insignificance.

It is a sign of the growing discontent among the sober element of the Republican party when protests against this method of controlling elections come from various organs within the party. Almost without exception the independent journals of the country have opposed the federal-election bill. There can no longer be any doubt of the partisan character of the measure, nor can it be doubted that Speaker Reed's purpose in forcing the bill against the protests of many members of his own party is a revolutionary and high-handed one.

Under the manipulations of the Quays, the Dudleys, and the Reeds, who have usurped the seats of power in the Republican party, the federal-election bill would be a dangerous weapon. If the grand old party cannot rule except by fraud and the unblushing theft of elections, even its greatest admirers will admit that it ought to die. The lesson for honest Republicans is, that the abuse of power for personal profit and the perpetuation of officeholders must inevitably disintegrate and ruin the party beyond redemption.—Chicago News, Ind.

The Result of Protection.

France has replied to the McKinley bill by placing a prohibitory duty on Indian corn, and Canada will probably do the same thing. Mexico, also, will levy an export duty on silver and lead ores in order to force the removal of American smelting works to her side of the Rio Grande. The retaliatory legislation commenced by these nations will probably be followed by others, and a concerted effort be made to punish our people for the folly of their legislators. It is the natural thing to do. If England were to prohibit the importation of American wheat there would arise a demand in this country for a retaliatory prohibition of some British article of commerce which finds a market in this country. There would be a war of tariffs which might be followed by a war of arms. One would be almost as destructive as the other.—Macon Telegraph.

SAYS Dr. Bierstedt: "I am in favor of any movement that will shorten the hours of labor. I think no man should work more than eighteen hours a day." Mr. Bystander—You mean eight hours a day. Dr. Bierstedt—No; I mean eighteen. I'm in the drug business.

THE NATIONAL SOLONS.

SENATE AND HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Our National Law-Makers and What They Are Doing for the Good of the Country—Various Measures Proposed, Discussed, and Acted Upon.

THE Senate spent the greater part of the 25th inst. in the discussion of the House bill for the admission of Wyoming into the Union. Mr. Vest opposed the bill on the ground that the population of the Territory was not sufficient to entitle it to Statehood. There were at the largest estimate only 90,000 people there, and they were scattered over an area of 98,000 square miles. Of the 18,000 voters, 6,000 were women, and he was decidedly opposed to woman suffrage. Mr. Platt replied in support of the bill, and without reaching a vote the Senate at 5:40 adjourned. The House adopted the conference report on the naval appropriation bill, and then proceeded to the discussion of the silver bill. The debate was closed by Mr. McKinley. At the conclusion of Mr. McKinley's speech a vote was taken on Mr. Bland's motion to concur in the Senate amendment which declares the silver dollar equal in value to a gold dollar and provides for free coinage, and the motion was defeated—nays, 152; yeas, 135. This was a test vote on the silver bill, and when this amendment was rejected by a yea and nay vote, the other amendments were rejected without division and the bill sent to a conference committee. The Republicans who voted to agree to the Senate free coinage amendments were Anderson, of Kansas; Bartine, Carter, Connell, DeHaven, Dorsey, Featherstone, Hermann, Kelley, Laws, Morrill, Morrow, Perkins, Peters, Post, Smith of Illinois, and Townsend of Colorado. The Democrats who voted against agreeing to the amendments were: Andrew, Buckalew, Campbell, Clancey, Covert, Durgan, Dunphy, Flower, Geissenhainer, Mays, McAdoo, Mutchler, Quinn, Rusk, Stump, Tucker, Turner of New York, and Vaux. Mr. Hitt (Ill.) presented the conference report on the diplomatic appropriation bill, and it was agreed to. Mr. Cannon (Ill.), from the Committee on Rules, reported back a substitute for the resolution introduced by Mr. Lodge (Mass.) setting apart five days of the present week for the consideration of the national election bill. Messrs. McMillin and Blount vigorously attacked the bill, and from this time on there was great confusion on the floor. Mr. Cannon (Ill.) and Mr. O'Neall (Ind.) engaged in a colloquy somewhat personal in its nature, and this added so much to the already existing disorder that the Sergeant-at-arms came forward with his mace of office and restored order. Mr. Springer (Ill.) moved to table the resolution. On a yea and nay vote, this motion was lost—yeas, 116; nays, 132. After arranging to meet at eleven o'clock for the six days during which the debate is to continue, the House adjourned.

IN the Senate, on the 26th, the House bill for the admission of Wyoming as a State was taken up and Mr. Jones (Ark.) addressed the Senate. He declared himself in favor of the admission of Wyoming, but he was unwilling to see Wyoming admitted in the way now proposed. There was no authority for holding a constitutional convention. Mr. Stewart spoke in favor of the bill and Mr. Reagan opposed it. At the close of Mr. Reagan's speech an understanding was reached that the vote on the bill and amendment would begin at 4 o'clock next day. After disposing of some routine business the Senate went into executive session and soon thereafter adjourned. In the House Mr. Lodge, of Massachusetts, began the debate upon the national-elections bill. He proceeded to sketch the plan of the bill in outline. No local machinery was disturbed, he said; ballots were to be cast as at present, and no secret-ballot system was to be interfered with where it now prevailed. Everything that concerned the Government should be open. The assurance of honest elections lay in making public every step and act by which the representatives of the people were chosen to their high office. To secure publicity at every stage of the election, therefore, was the leading principle of the bill. Under its terms concealment became impossible without a resort to violence, and violence itself was publicity. The debate was continued by Messrs. Hemphill of South Carolina and Rowell of Illinois. The latter was frequently interrupted by Southern members, who questioned his statements relative to the alleged suppression of the negro vote in certain Southern States. Mr. Bingham, from the Postoffice Committee, reported the Senate amendments to the postoffice appropriation bill, and on his motion the House non-concurred in them. The consideration of the election bill was then resumed and Mr. Lehlback, of New York (Republican), spoke against the bill. Mr. Tucker, of Virginia, spoke against the bill and then the House adjourned.

IN the Senate, on the 27th, the consideration of the bill for the admission of Wyoming as a State was resumed, and Mr. Morgan addressed the Senate in opposition to it. Messrs. Payne and Gray argued against the bill, and Mr. Platt favored it. The question was taken on Mr. Jones' substitute (an enabling act for Wyoming, Idaho, Arizona, and New Mexico), and it was rejected by a strict party vote—yeas, 18; nays, 20. Mr. Jones (Ark.) then moved as a substitute an enabling act for Wyoming alone, and it was rejected by exactly the same vote. The bill was then passed by a strict party The first section of the bill is as follows: "That the State of Wyoming is hereby declared to be a State of the United States of America, is hereby declared admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States in all respects whatever, and that the constitution which the people of Wyoming have formed for themselves be and the same is hereby accepted, ratified and confirmed." The second section gives the boundaries. The third declares the State entitled to one representative in the LIst Congress. The other sections refer to public lands and to provisions for schools, an agricultural college, a penitentiary, an insane asylum, etc.; also to Circuit and District Courts of the United States. The bill for the admission of Idaho was then taken up and went over as "unfinished business." After an executive session the Senate adjourned. In the House, consideration of the Federal elections bill was resumed, the debate being participated in by Messrs. Haugen (Wis.), Covert (N. Y.), Vaux (Pa), and Kennedy (Ohio). The House in the evening passed 105 private pension bills, including a large number which came over from previous sessions, and at 10:30 adjourned.

NERVOUS DISEASES.

As a cure for every class of Nervous Diseases, no remedy has been able to compare with the Nervine Tonic, which is very pleasant and harmless in all its effects upon the youngest child or the oldest and most delicate individual. Nine-tenths of all the ailments to which the human family is heir, are dependent on nervous exhaustion and impaired digestion. When there is an insufficient supply of nerve food in the blood, a general state of debility of the brain, spinal marrow and nerves is the result. Starved nerves, like starved muscles, become strong when the right kind of food is supplied, and a thousand weaknesses and ailments disappear as the nerves recover. As the nervous system must supply all the power by which the vital forces of the body are carried on, it is the first to suffer for want of perfect nutrition. Ordinary food does not contain a sufficient quantity of the kind of nutriment necessary to repair the wear our present mode of living and labor imposes upon the nerves. For this reason it becomes necessary that a nerve food be supplied. This recent production of the South American Continent has been found, by analysis, to contain the essential elements out of which nerve tissue is formed. This accounts for its magic power to cure all forms of nervous derangements.

CRAWFORDSVILLE, IND., Aug. 20, '86.
To the Great South American Medicine Co.:
DEAR GENTS:—I desire to say to you that I have suffered for many years with a very serious disease of the stomach and nerves. I tried every medicine I could hear of but nothing done me any appreciable good until I was advised to try your Great South American Nervine Tonic and Stomach and Liver Cure, and since using several bottles of it I must say that I am surprised at its wonderful powers to cure the stomach and general nervous system. If every-one knew the value of this remedy as I do, you would not be able to supply the demand.

Mr. Solomon Bond, a member of the Society of Friends, of Darlington, Ind., says: "I have used twelve bottles of The Great South American Nervine Tonic and Stomach and Liver Cure, and I consider that every bottle did for me one hundred dollars worth of good, because I have not had a good night's sleep for twenty years on account of irritation, pain, horrible dreams, and general nervous prostration, which has been caused by chronic indigestion and dyspepsia of the stomach and by a broken down condition of my nervous system. But now I can lie down and sleep all night as sweetly as a baby, and I feel like a sound man. I do not think there has ever been a medicine introduced into this country which will at all compare with this Nervine Tonic as a cure for the stomach."

A SWORN CURE FOR ST. VITUS'S DANCE OR CHOREA.

CRAWFORDSVILLE, IND., May 19, 1886.
My daughter, twelve years old, had been afflicted for several months with Chorea or St. Vitus's Dance. She was reduced to a skeleton, could not walk, could not talk, could not swallow anything but milk. I had to handle her like an infant. Doctor and neighbors gave her up. I commenced giving her the South American Nervine Tonic; the effects were very surprising. In three days she was rid of the nervousness, and rapidly improved. Four bottles cured her completely. I think the South American Nervine the grandest remedy ever discovered, and would recommend it to every-one.

CRAWFORDSVILLE, IND., June 22, 1887.
My daughter, eleven years old, was severely afflicted with St. Vitus's Dance or Chorea. We gave her three and one-half bottles of South American Nervine and she is completely restored. I believe it will cure every case of St. Vitus's Dance. I have kept it in my family for two years, and am sure it is the greatest remedy in the world for Indigestion and Dyspepsia, all forms of Nervous Disorders and Failing Health from whatever cause.

INDIGESTION AND DYSPEPSIA.
The Great South American Nervine Tonic

Which we now offer you, is the only absolutely unfailing remedy ever discovered for the cure of Indigestion, Dyspepsia, and the vast train of symptoms and horrors which are the result of disease and debility of the human stomach. No person can afford to pass by this jewel of incalculable value who is affected by disease of the Stomach, because the experience and testimony of thousands go to prove that this is the ONE and ONLY ONE great cure in the world for this universal destroyer. There is no case of unmalignant disease of the stomach which can resist the wonderful curative powers of the South American Nervine Tonic.

Harriet E. Hall, of Waynetown, Ind., says: "I owe my life to The Great South American Nervine. I had been in bed for five months from the effects of an exhausted Stomach, Indigestion, Nervous Prostration and a general shattered condition of my whole system. Had given up all hopes of getting well. Had tried three doctors with no relief. The first bottle of the Nervine Tonic improved me so much that I was able to walk about, and a few bottles cured me entirely. I believe it the best medicine in the world. I can not recommend it too highly."

Mrs. M. Russell, Sugar Creek Valley, Ind., writes: "I have used several bottles of The South American Nervine Tonic, and will say I consider it the best medicine in the world. I believe it saved the lives of two of my children. They were down and nothing appeared to do them any good until I procured this remedy. It was very surprising how rapidly they both improved on its use. I recommend the medicine to all my neighbors.

Mrs. Ella A. Bratton, of New Ross, Indiana, says: "I can not express how much I owe to the Nervine Tonic. My system was completely shattered, appetite gone, was coughing and spitting up blood; am sure I was in the first stages of consumption, an inheritance handed down through several generations. I began taking the Nervine Tonic and continued its use for about six months, and am entirely cured. It is the grandest remedy for nerves, stomach and lungs I have ever seen.

Ed. J. Brown, Druggist, of Edina, Mo., writes: "My health had been very poor for years, was coughing severely. I only weighed 110 pounds when I commenced using South American Nervine. I have used two bottles and now weigh 130 pounds, and am much stronger and better than have been for five years. Am sure would not have lived through the Winter had I not secured this remedy. My customers see what it has done for me, and buy it eagerly. It gives great satisfaction."

THE DECORATING MANIA.

CHARLES and his city wife came home
About Thanksgiving Day;
She's a smart gal an' all for style,
And style ain't much my way.
She looked about our sitting-room
(I own it's sort o' bare),
And said she soon could give our house
A fashionable air.

"You needn't purchase things," says she,
With a superior smile,
"I'll use your common household goods,
For them are all the style."
And with a little gilt and such,
She fixed us up so fine,
That when I looked about the house
I hardly knew 'twas mine.

Well! pa and me, at first, were pleased,
But pa soon cried in wrath,
"Where is the old snow-shovel gone?
I want to make a path."
And there it was a' painted up
With many a bud and rose,
And hanging on the parlor wall
By sky-blue ribbon bows.

And soon it was my turn to fret
When ironing day came round;
I had two favorite flatirons,
But only one I found.
I went into the sitting-room
And there I found the mate
All gilded up to look like gold,
And made a paper-weight.

And when pa bought a steak, I found
Of broiler I had lack;
The gridiron was fixed to be
A fine newspaper rack.
And all the tins for jelly-cake
Had been well washed from grease,
And painted up like plaques, to stand
Upon the mantel-piece.

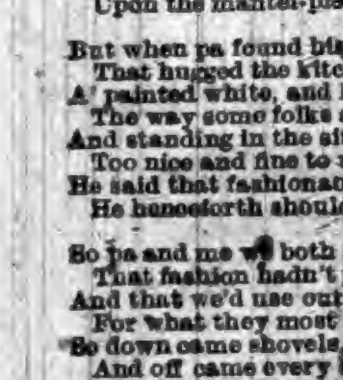
But when pa found his old arm-chair
That hugged the kitchen fire,
A' painted white, and hung with bows,
The way some folks admire,
And standing in the sitting-room,
Too nice and fine to use,
He said that fashionable styles
He henceforth should refuse.

So pa and me we both agreed
That fashion hadn't paid,
And that we'd use our common things
For what they most seemed made.
So down came shovels, down came pans,
And off came every bow,
And things are now more comfortable,
If not so much for show.

ADVENTURES OF A SPY.

A STORY THAT READS LIKE A PAGE FROM A WORK OF FICTION.

The Remarkable Career of Major W. C. Gorman, a Spy in the Service of the Confederates During the War—Thrilling Adventures and Hair-Breadth Escapes.



ONE of the most remarkable contributions to war history made in recent years is that furnished to a correspondent of the Des Moines Register by Major W. C. Gorman, an ex-Confederate spy and at present a resident of Birmingham, Ala. The story of his perilous adventures and hair-breadth escapes reads like a page from a work of fiction, and would scarcely be credited had the narrator omitted to give dates, localities, and the names of the actors in the exciting life drama in which he was an active participator.

After the retreat at Perryville, in 1862, begins Major Gorman, I received orders to report to Gen. Forrest for picket duty on the Cumberland River, between Sparta and Gallatin. I there received orders to report to Gen. Forrest at Murfreesboro, which I did. Gen. Forrest wished me to undertake a commission entirely foreign to the duties of a soldier, being a trip to St. Louis on private business for my commander. I went to St. Louis and returned just prior to the battle of Stone River, in which I participated with my battalion.

Six days later I was ordered to report to Senator Sims at Richmond, Va., for duty on behalf of the Confederate Government. I met Senator Sims, President Davis, Vice President Stephens and Winder in conference, and they unfolded the plans. General Forrest was to make a raid through West Tennessee, and General Marmaduke through Northern Arkansas, the two forces meeting at Springfield, Mo. Scattered through Northern Missouri were 12,000 true Confederates, as yet unorganized, and it was their desire that I should organize those men and march them to Springfield at the appointed time, as a contingent to Forrest and Marmaduke.

This plan was carried out so far as circumstances would permit. I went to Northern Missouri and organized the Paw Paw militia; General Forrest started through West Tennessee and General Marmaduke through Northern Arkansas. I had organized 6,000 men at Blackfeet Hills, ready for marching orders, when I learned of Forrest's defeat at Jackson, Tenn., and Marmaduke's defeat fifteen miles from Springfield, which drove the men back to bushwhacking.

There were a number of incidents on my trip. I returned to General Forrest's command and asked him for a pass. In his gruff way he said: "Go to h—l for a pass; if you can't steal through the Confederate lines, you can't steal through the Yankee lines."

I started on foot from Franklin, Tenn., for Hickman, Ky., making the trip in ten days, and stealing through both lines, the Confederates and Federals being picketed from Gallatin to Memphis.

At Hickman, tired, dirty and ragged from swimming streams and climbing through and over bushes, I went to a hotel and ate supper. That night I heard music in the parlor, and going up I saw two young ladies, one playing the piano and the other singing. I knew that if they were Confederates the ladies would be the truest and best of friends to the soldier boys, so I asked them to allow me to play. They looked surprised, but let me have the use of the piano. I sang "Maryland, My Maryland," which at that time was new. From the effect the song had on them I knew they were sympathizers with my cause, and I asked their assistance to get me a pass by steamboat to St. Louis, as the step-son of Judge Fitzgerald, of West Tennessee, in whose loyalty the Federal soldiers had confidence. The next morning I got the pass and left for St. Louis. I claimed that I was on my way to Kansas to visit relatives, and that I was a Union man. The boat was loaded with Federal soldiers who were going home on furloughs or for the purpose of re-enlisting. I was well supplied with money, and whiled away the time playing poker with the men who, if they had known who I was, would have shot me and thrown my body in the river. My money was that of the Bank of West Tennessee, and was in bills, but in those days a $5 bill could be cut in two and each end was good for $2.50; in fact, change was scarce, and was generally made in that way. Each end of a $2 bill was good for $1.

When I reached St. Louis I had my West Tennessee money and $1,600 in greenbacks. I went to Bingham, Wright & Co., with whom I had transacted the private business for Gen. Forrest on my previous trip. Here I had all of my money changed into gold. The question then was, how to get out of St. Louis—a man could not leave the city nor even obtain work in the city without a certificate that he had taken the oath of allegiance. I was not going to take the oath, and finally devised a scheme. Going down to the levee I met an honest Irishman by the name of Murphy. I got in with him, made him drunk and bought his certificate for $30. Being an Irishman myself I was not afraid of the name. I went to the Wedge house and bought a horse for $650 and left town. When about four miles out I met two young ladies and saluted them. They returned the salute, and I saw that they wore red and white ribbons around their necks. Turning my horse, we went to their home together. That acquaintance was my starting point in Missouri. Their father was Lieut. Col. Kibble, of Price's regiment, and their home was the hot bed of the whole Southern organization in North Missouri.

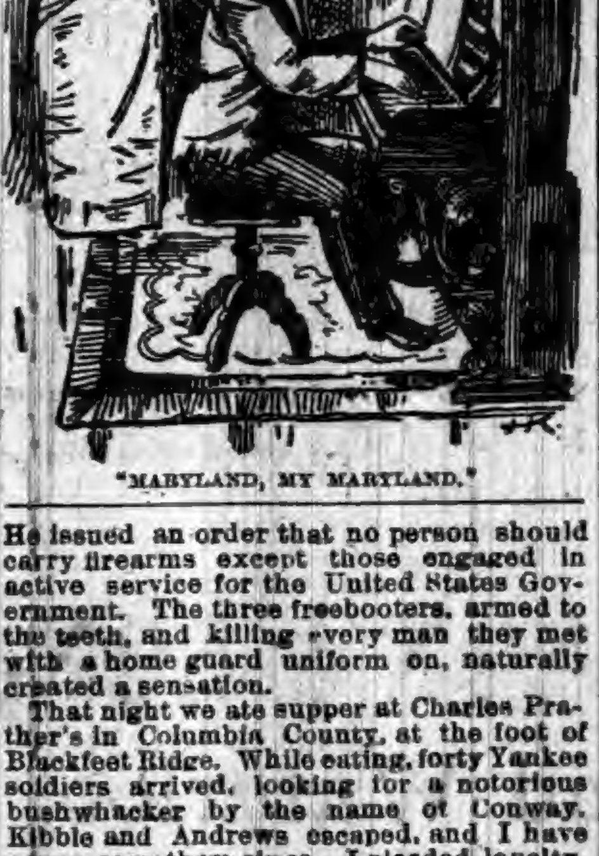
At midnight that night 162 determined Confederates met there, inside the Yankee lines, and within four miles of St. Louis, twenty-eight of them being commissioned officers.

I left the next morning, going through the State on the south of the river, making my reports through the mail at Paris, Ill.

My next experiences of interest were in St. Charles County, where I met with Craighill's Dutch Home Guards. At Warrenton, while eating dinner, twenty-six of them came in to arrest me. I showed my certificate of oath, pleaded Union sentiment, cursed Jefferson Davis and the whole Southern Confederacy as an honest Irishman, but it took five kegs of beer to finally convince them that I was loyal. The English-speaking people in that section were usually friends, but these Dutch were bitter enemies of the South.

I learned that Colonel Kibble had a brother toward Black River. I finally reached there after swimming two swollen creeks and having two battles with Craighill's Dutch. I learned that Colonel Kibble's daughter had married a Sergeant in General Price's command, and that these Dutch troops had dragged her from her bed while in a delicate condition, and had burned the house on the day previous. When I learned this I made up my mind to teach the Dutch a lesson. Taking fifty-two men I went to Warrenton, and we killed every Dutchman we met. This gave Murphy a notorious character, and the quicker I got out of there the better for all concerned. I took two men with me, Cumberland Kibble and John Andrews, and started through the country.

Gen. Odin Guitar was at that time commanding the Department of North Missouri, with headquarters at Columbiaville.

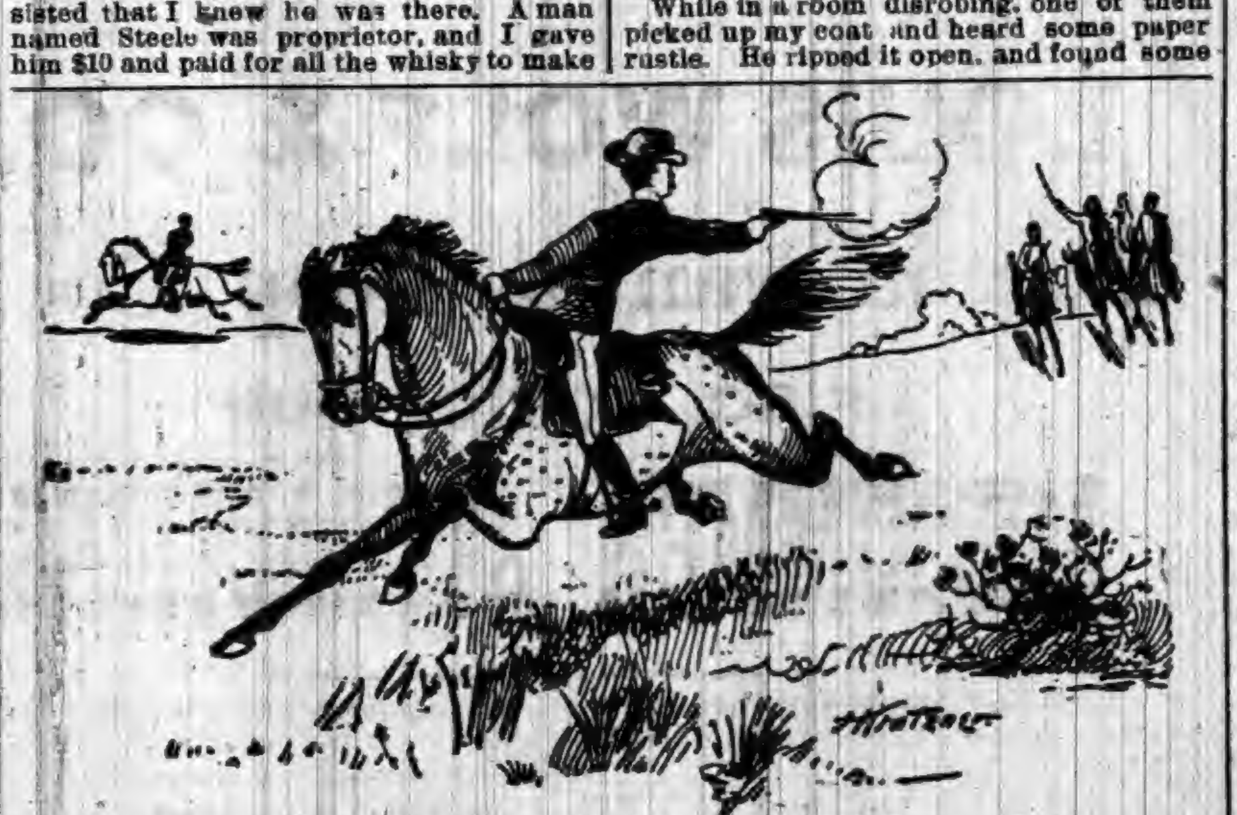


"MARYLAND, MY MARYLAND."

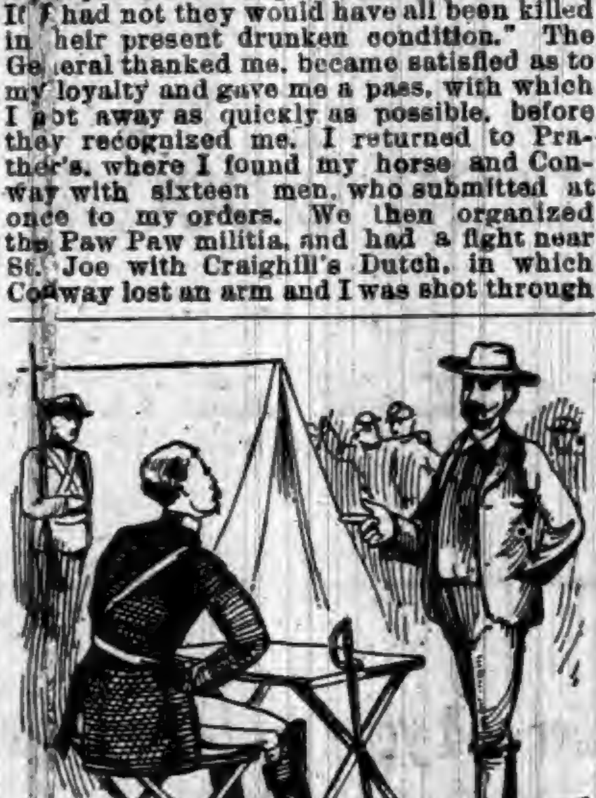
He issued an order that no person should carry firearms except those engaged in active service for the United States Government. The three freebooters, armed to the teeth, and killing every man they met with a home guard uniform on, naturally created a sensation.

That night we ate supper at Charles Prather's in Columbia County, at the foot of Blackfeet Ridge. While eating, forty Yankee soldiers arrived, looking for a notorious bushwhacker by the name of Conway. Kibble and Andrews escaped, and I have never seen them since. I pleaded loyalty, said I was alone and on a pony, and to show my loyalty would assist them in hunting up Conway, who, by the way, had agreed to meet me at Prather's that night. I got on Prather's pony and went with the soldiers to a corner grocery eight miles away, and twenty-two miles from Columbiaville. Here I called for Conway, and insisted that I knew he was there. A man named Steele was proprietor, and I gave him $10 and paid for all the whisky to make the soldiers drunk; then I loaded them up with bottles of liquor and started with them for Columbiaville. Arrived there I took them at once to Gen. Guitar's headquarters, and said:

"General, I am a loyal Irishman. Your men took me prisoner, and, to show my loyalty, I have brought them back to you. If I had not they would have all been killed in their present drunken condition." The General thanked me, became satisfied as to my loyalty and gave me a pass, with which I got away as quickly as possible, before they recognized me. I returned to Prather's, where I found my horse and Conway with sixteen men, who submitted at once to my orders. We then organized the Paw Paw militia, and had a fight near St. Joe with Craighill's Dutch, in which Conway lost an arm and I was shot through the shoulder; nine of the Dutch being killed.



"I HAD A SHARP FIGHT WITH THE YANKEES."



"GENERAL, I AM A LOYAL IRISHMAN."

I then succeeded in getting to Paris, Ill., where Mr. and Mrs. Farrel nursed me back to health, and I returned to Missouri, then to Richmond, where I reported to Senator Sims.

I was then instructed to return, and given the rolls of the Confederates in the North—30,000 in Illinois, 12,000 in Missouri, 26,000 in Indiana, 4,000 in Ohio, and 5,000 in Pennsylvania.

On the 10th of January, 1863, I went to City Point and hired as a roustabout on the United States flag of truce steamboat Gen. Hansell. I was to receive $75 a month. I staid six days, for which the Government still owes me, leaving the boat at Baltimore.

The next morning I was in Washington, where I met United States Senator Powell, of Kentucky, delivering to him a regular commission as lieutenant general in the Confederate army, commanding all the forces north of the Ohio River, and with authority to issue commissions. From him I obtained a map of the fortifications on the Potomac River, the number of men between Washington and the mouth of the river, the condition of fortifications around Washington, and other valuable information.

I left for Cincinnati over the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, and was arrested at Bellaire, being guarded by three Irishmen, John Burke, of Pontiac, Mich.; John Doyle, of 321 Sixth street, Detroit; and another whose name I have forgotten. For $10 and a quart of whisky I bought a Yankee overcoat and got away. I first went to Columbus, Ohio, where I met George Zeney, and going twelve miles out of the city, was introduced to 900 as determined men as ever shouldered a gun. They were the best drilled and best equipped of any of the copperhead organizations, and were sworn Confederate soldiers. I swore them into service with George Zeney as colonel. They afterwards did valiant service in the rescue of Gen. John Morgan from the Ohio penitentiary.

I went to Cincinnati and met one of the truest friends the cause ever had, Samuel P. Thomas, now a dry goods merchant of that city. He was commissioned quartermaster general.

Returning to Washington, I stole a skiff and floated down the river, then stole a horse and reached Richmond safely.

When I reported they wanted me to return, to which I seriously objected, as my description was printed everywhere. The rewards for my capture were large. I had used a dozen aliases, and the police and detectives were scouring the country for me.

General Winder insisted on one more trip. I started, crossing the Potomac half way between Mathias' Point and the mouth of the river. Hailing an oyster schooner I paid them $50 to put me on the Maryland side. Went to Washington and Columbus, and then to Cincinnati, where General Thomas had collected $280,000 in cash, which he gave me, together with maps and plans of the Ohio River between the mouth of the Big Sandy and Louisville. Went to Aurora, Ind., to confer with Senator Huffman, who had organized three regiments—one at Aurora and Lawrenceburg, one at Seymour and one at Madison and North Vernon. I gave him a commission as major general in the Confederate army.

The next stopping place was at Springfield, Ill., where I met Judge Dixon, who was at the head of the movement in Illinois, with a commission as Major General. He had more influence, and afterward, in attempting to release prisoners at Camp Butler, accomplished more than any man in Illinois. This attempt would have been successful had it not been for Colonel Shanks informing the authorities. He was afterward killed at Cheyenne by his own men, on account of this, as I believe.

Going to Carlinville, I stopped with John D. White, a wealthy farmer of Macoupin County. Here I drilled my men openly, until I received information that General John M. Palmer was about to call a regiment of soldiers to arrest me. I called on General Palmer, and told him that we would fight it to the bitter end. I was not arrested, and I have talked with General Palmer since that time, and he said that he concluded that it was best to let me go, as it would have taken five thousand men at that time in that county to arrest me, and would have precipitated the war into the heart of Illinois.

Going to Madison, Ind., where John T. Moore was in command of the copperheads, he told me that everybody was looking for me, and he assisted me across the river, where I found a horse at John Wells'. I rode to Christianburg, then to Versailles, then to Lexington.

In order to understand the subsequent events, we must go back to August, 1862. At that time my battalion was with Gen. E. Kirby Smith, in the battle of Richmond, Ky., and I was assistant provost marshal at Lexington, thus making many acquaintances. I had also remained on the battle-field to bury the dead, impressing the services of citizens, among whom were four brothers by the name of Haley.

On my arrival at Lexington from the Northern trip, I called at the Curd House, which was the rebel soldiers' headquarters, and Miss Nannie Curd was the moving spirit among them. While eating dinner I met Capt. Gwynn, of Gen. Morgan's staff. At that time there were 4,000 Federal infantry at Lexington, 2,000 cavalry at Georgetown, 3,000 cavalry at Frankfort, all under marching orders for Lexington.

I gave Capt. Gwynn this information, and we parted to meet at Tate's Creek ford, four miles from Richmond, at 11 p. m. Provided with a horse and Lieut. Col. Riley's uniform of the Twenty-fifth Michigan, with the post countersign, through the influence of Miss Nannie Curd, at 8 o'clock I started for Tate's ford. After crossing the river I was halted. I gave the countersign, telling them I was Col. Riley of the Twenty-fifth Michigan.

"Get down, Capt. Gorman; we know you," said one of them, and I saw that I was in the hands of the Haley brothers. They treated me kindly, and took me home with them.

While in a room disrobing, one of them picked up my coat and heard some paper rustle. He ripped it open, and found some maps and a lot of letters directed to President Davis, and Vice, President Stevens. Then they knew that they had a prize. The letters were all in cipher, which I could not read myself.

They furnished me with another suit, and laid Col. Riley's uniform, which I had worn over my suit, it being too large for me, away.

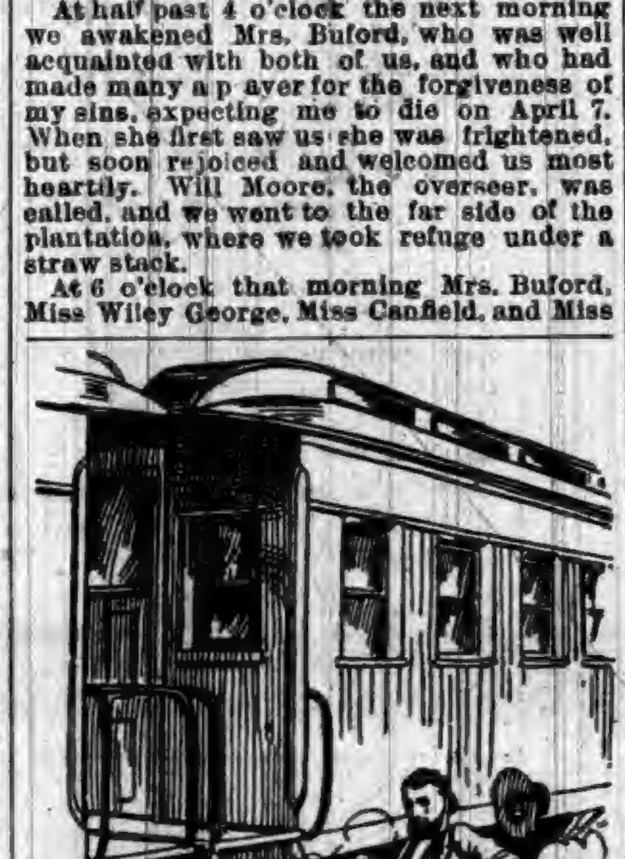
I was taken back to Lexington, where I was tried before Gen. Gilmore, who asked if I could read the letters. I said that I could, and that saved my life. Instead of having me shot the next morning at sunrise, he sentenced me to be shot on April 7, the trial occurring March 7. I was confined in a dungeon in John Morgan's old negro jail on Limestone street, a place with which, as Provost Marshal, I was thoroughly familiar. In the dungeon was Charles Shiver, of Scott's Louisiana cavalry. At first we were suspicious of each other, but through our mutual acquaintance with Miss Nannie Curd, we soon became warm friends.

Our hands and feet were shackled, and then a chain was fastened from the one which bound our hands to the one which bound our feet. We were both to be shot.

I began to figure a way to get out of there, and sent for Father Lynch, a Catholic priest. Through his influence I succeeded in obtaining a call from Miss Curd. I told her to have the girls make love to the guards and sergeants, which they did. She obtained bedding and clothes for me, and in a few days I found a file starched inside of the sleeve of a shirt, so that it would not fall out when the garment was shaken. With this we cut the rivets on our shackles, and with our case knives we began the task of cutting out through the floor. On the 19th of March the hole was large enough for a man to crawl through, and we made our escape that night, eating a hearty meal at Mrs. Myers', next door to the jail. We reached Versailles and went to General Buford's house before daylight, running nineteen miles during the night. On our way to this place we found a farmer in the road resting for the night. We stampeded his horses, and binding him to a tree, left him, wishing him good luck.

At half past 4 o'clock the next morning we awakened Mrs. Buford, who was well acquainted with both of us, and who had made many a prayer for the forgiveness of my sins, expecting me to die on April 7. When she first saw us she was frightened, but soon rejoiced and welcomed us most heartily. Will Moore, the overseer, was called, and we went to the far side of the plantation, where we took refuge under a straw stack.

At 6 o'clock that morning Mrs. Buford, Miss Wiley George, Miss Canfield, and Miss Harris rode out over the plantation on horseback, finally coming to the straw stack and producing from their long riding skirts the best breakfast I ever ate. They had not been gone half an hour when the section was literally swarming with Yankee soldiers, looking for us.



"JUMPED OFF WHILE THE TRAIN WAS IN MOTION."

We had been traced to Versailles, where all clue had been lost. That night it rained very hard, and under cover of darkness we left for Frankfort, where Shivers left me, and I have never seen him since. I heard that he was killed by Jack Goodwin's bushwhackers.

I went to Madison, Carlinville, Springfield, Aurora, Cincinnati, Columbus, and Washington, returning with copies of the communications that the Yankees had captured. I returned to Wall's, opposite Madison, and when going across the river two soldiers followed me in the ferry-boat, which I succeeded in capsizing, throwing the soldiers into the river.

I reached Wall's, where I was given the best horse that I ever rode, and seeing that I was pursued, I went to the top of a hill, where I had a sharp fight with the Yankees, who chased me to Christianburg, where I was far enough ahead to get a lunch at Dr. King's. At the corner grocery I got half a pint of whisky, which I gave to the horse, and another half pint, which I used myself. The Yankees were again in sight, and tired as my horse was I again distanced them, cut the telegraph wires and went on the dead run for Danville, thence to Lebanon. Six miles from Lebanon I turned off the pike and rode up Poke's Creek in three feet of water. I put up at the house of old man Prewitt, having run my horse 104 miles, six of which were in the creek.

The next morning my horse was dead, the noblest animal I ever saw. I was taken sick in this house, and while in bed I was captured. When I became a prisoner the excitement seemed to cure me, and on the train, while being taken to Cairo, I jumped off while the train was in motion. I was not seriously hurt by the jump, and hid out in the woods until night, when I stole a horse from a man named Greer, who, by the way, I have met since and offered pay for his horse, which he declined.

The next morning I was in Glasgow, where I received mail and left, crossing the Cumberland River near Sparta, then to Tullahoma, thence to Knoxville, where I gave my stolen horse to Miss Mattie Love, and took the train for Richmond. After making my reports I declined to return to the North, and again assumed command of my regiment of sharpshooters in General Claiborne's brigade, joining them at Lenoir's station.

In October, 1863, I was taken prisoner, and confined first on Johnson's Island and then at Camp Morton until the close of the war. I was three times offered my parole, Governor Orth, of Indiana, coming specially to see me at one time, but I refused to take the iron-clad oath.

After the war was over I went North and settled in Detroit, where I was elected as a member of the Michigan Legislature, being defeated as a candidate for re-election in 1888. I then came to Birmingham, where I have resided ever since.

A Boston Episode.

This time, Miss Reader, we will not try a spinner; there are no spinners in front of the Vendome. Let us take the more decorous and slower horse-car. And will you tell me, Miss Reader, how the ladies behave whom you meet in horse-cars in Fort Wrangel? There is rather a curious observation made as to the breeding of Boston women. Just read those lines, which I received yesterday from one of the most charming women whom I have the pleasure of knowing: "My experiences with Boston women to whom I have been introduced have been very charming in most cases; but my experience in shops, cars and streets have been otherwise, and would fill a volume. I have been a stranger in New York, San Francisco and Boston, and have lived in the three cities. In the first two I have asked for information, and offered small courtesies to total strangers—women—with the pleasantest results, in no case meeting with discourtesy. But in Boston my experience has taught me never to ask a question, or try to help a well-dressed woman, even when I know her to belong to 'one of the best families!'"

I have these lines in my pocket, as you see, and I read them to you because the last time I was on this line an interesting thing happened. A young woman, a little over-dressed, if you please, stopped the car that she might leave it. She dropped the parcel that she had been down town to buy. I saw it fall and touched her and told her that she had dropped her parcel. But, unfortunately, I had never been presented to her; we had not danced together at Papanti's, nor were we members of the same club. She, therefore, looked at me with the vigorous manner to which our friend alludes in the letter, a good deal as if I had struck her in the face, and in this way expressed her indignation that any man should have addressed her who had not the honor of her acquaintance. I am, however, sixty-eight years old, and I stand such things better than a boy does. So I said, very pleasantly, "You have dropped your parcel, and it is under your feet." Again she resented the insult with a look—not with a word, observe—and swung out of the car, dragging the parcel after her by her dress, so that it fell in the mud in the street. There the next horse that came along trod upon it, I suppose, and I suppose what is left of it is there now. I am free to say I think it was good enough for her.—Rev. E. F. Hale, in the New England Magazine.

Love by Wire.

Said a Maine telegraph operator to the writer the other day: "You wouldn't think that spoony lovers would resort to such public means of correspondence as the telegraph for the transmission of their sweet little messages of love and devotion, would you? They do, just the same.

Very often a certain young man in this place, if he does not regularly receive a letter from the future source of his joy and happiness, rushes here with a crestfallen countenance and files a message like this:

"'My dear, why did you not answer my last letter? Yours devotedly,
'—— ——.'

"Perhaps you don't believe that such a message as this was ever sent, but I would show some of them to you if it wasn't against the rules.

"We fellows on the wire enjoyed quite an amusing incident not very long ago, in which Sophia sort of gave away John's brilliant scheme of popping the question by wire. We surmised that this brace of folly's victims had been conducting a correspondence for some time, which the artful John culminated with the following dispatch, which was evidently intended to draw forth an answer to an entirely different question:

"'SOPHIA: Did you receive my last letter? JOHN.'

"Sophia, in her ecstatic delight, evidently understood the query in a different sense from that which the ordinary reader of the epistle would, and, with joy and exultation depicted in every lineament of her countenance, she proceeded to the telegrapher's sanctum and left the following to be forwarded to the flower of her affections:

"'JOHN: Yes. How about next Christmas? SOPHIA.'

"This gave the thing dead away, and John was much chagrined when he received it. It accomplished its purpose, nevertheless, and now the couple are soaring in the rapturous realms of double bliss."—Lewiston Journal.

A LONDON correspondent says it costs for dress alone "from $500 to $1,000 to have the pleasure of bowing to Queen Victoria." That settles it. We shall never bow to the Queen—unless the game is poker and we draw her when we have the other three in our hand.

MEN are content to be laughed at for their wit, but not for their folly.

Hints and Insinuations.

What a great role the hint and the insinuation play in human life! How much hinting for things there is in everyday life! In fact, all in all the relations of life between husband and wife, parent and child, landlord and tenant, there is a continual hinting going on.

Some hints are very delicate and can scarcely be discerned at all, while others are so broad that it is impossible not to see and feel them.

A Scotch beadle took his sweetheart to a graveyard, and, showing her a dark corner, said:

"Mary, my folks lie there. Would you like to lie there when you die?"

It was a grim way of proposing, but Mary was a sensible Scotch lassie, and accepted him.

When the farmer who is afflicted with a family of talkative girls wants them to stop gabbling, he merely makes a motion to a churn! They take the hint, and partial silence prevails.

The question of the young lady who is weary to the young gentleman who stays late, if he has tested the new sidewalk up the street, also contains a hint of another type, however, than the wink-knowing soda water clerk.—Texas Siftings.

If About to Travel or Emigrate.

The voyager cannot be provided with a safer remedy and protective medicine than Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. Abundant testimony exists to prove that it nullifies hurtful climatic influences and the effects of exposure, that it reconciles the stomach to unaccustomed food, and prevents injurious results from impure water. Mariners, tourists, emigrants, and miners have all contributed their quota of testimony in its behalf, and its protective influence has been most effectually demonstrated in regions and under conditions where, if not really effective, that fact would long since have been exposed. In no class of disorders have its remedial and preventive properties been more conspicuously shown than in cases of malarial fevers, maladies for which it is the most popular specific in existence, both here and in the tropics, where its reputation is scarcely second to that which it enjoys on this continent. It is, moreover, a most agreeable appetizer and nervine.

He Was in No Doubt.

Poots, looking out of the window of his sitting-room, saw a man ascend the steps of his residence whom he didn't wish to receive. To be candid, he was a bill collector. Calling the servant, he bade him tell the man that he (Poots) was not at home.

"Did you tell him I was out?" said Poots, when the servant returned from answering the bell.

"I did, sir."

"Did he appear to be in doubt about it?"

"Not at all, sir; he said it was a d—d lie."—Texas Siftings.

The Reason.

Mrs. Yerger—There is a very interesting article in this paper by Dr. Knowit.

Col. Yerger—What is it about?

Mrs. Yerger—It is about snoring. He explains why we snore.

Col. Yerger—I know that myself. We snore because we can't help it.—Texas Siftings.

Weak and Weary

In summer the warmer weather is especially weakening and enervating, and that tired feeling prevails everywhere. The great benefit which people at this season derive from Hood's Sarsaparilla proves that this medicine "makes the weak strong." It does not act like a stimulant, imparting fictitious strength, but Hood's Sarsaparilla builds up in a perfectly natural way all the weakened parts, and purifies the blood.

SPECIAL TEACHERS' CLASS

This class has been formed for the benefit of teachers and those desiring to prepare themselves for teaching. All the branches in which examinations are held for teachers' license, will receive careful attention. Special instruction will be given on the latest approved methods of teaching, on the organization, management and government of schools. It is the aim to educate and train teachers for their educational work. Other classes will be organized to accommodate those not intending to teach, but who intend to follow other avocations of life. Drill classes in reading, writing, spelling and other practical branches, will receive proper attention.

EXPENSES.

Tuition per term, $5.00, in advance. Board with furnished room in private family per week, from $2.50 to $3.00. Board in clubs, per week, from $1.25 to $1.75. Rooms without board, per week, from 25 to 50 cents. Arrangements also, have been made with parties to cook for students who may desire to furnish their provisions from home, and thus permitting them to attend with very little expense. On information of those desiring to come but cannot on account of limited means, every possible effort will be made to assist them in such ways as will enable them to attend.

BOOKS.

Students coming to the normal will bring the books they wish to study. And those not having books can purchase them at nominal cost. We call special attention to the following fact: That we employ none but the most thoroughly qualified and efficient teachers; that our teachers use no cramming processes, but require the most thorough work of their students; that every student will be called upon for a recitation every day. Many institutions permit students to go three or four weeks at a time without obliging them to make a recitation. We work upon the theory of letting the students recite and not the teacher. If you desire any further information on any particular point, address,

FARMING THAT PAYS.

GRAND EXHIBITION OF THE SUCCESSFUL AMERICAN FARMERS.

A Great Continental Exposition That Will Show Farming That Pays and How to Make It Pay—Also the Grandest General Fair of America—Races, Sports, Spectacles, Concerts, Art, Inventions and Manufactures—The Great Attraction of 1890.

Political journals have in late years made familiar the interesting and really important question: Does Farming Pay? On the one side it has been contended that farming is the worst rewarded and the most toilsome and least progessive of occupations; on the other that it is the best, if not the best rewarded of business, and that the farmer is the freest and most independent of all classes of busy men. One side represents farms generally as all plastered over with mortgages, the majority of which are sure to be foreclosed; the other side presents the farmer as the least indebted and the surest to pay off his obligations.

Whatever may be the truth as regards farming in general, it is an undeniable fact that some farming pays, and that some farmers are conspicuously successful. There are farms and their owners that have wide reputations all over the country. These notable examples are generally known for some specialty, but there are many of them, proving that there are many specialties, and that many branches of farming may be made successful specialties by similar care and methods.

Evidently it is a good thing for all farmers to have an opportunity to became acquainted with these successful men and their methods, and to examine their specially excellent products. Hence local county and state fairs are good things so far as they go.

But there will be, this year, one great International Fair and Exposition that will collect from all the states and territories of the Union, and from all the provinces of Canada, besides from some foreign countries, a grand aggregation of the choicest farm stock of the whole American continent, from the most famous flocks and herds—cattle, horses, sheep, swine, poultry—in all varieties; and will add to these the largest display ever shown in the United States of farming implements and machinery; and the finest collection of fruits of all sorts, large and small grains, grasses, root crops, garden and farm vegetables, cheese, butter, honey, bees and all bee-keepers' tools and methods; and also a vast and costly exhibition of all kinds of machinery, manufactures, rich and valuable wares and goods, gems and jewels, art work, inventions; the largest and costliest picture gallery on this continent; and, in fact, everything that can please or instruct.

This will be the Second Annual Detroit International Fair and Exposition. It offers premiums amounting to three times more than any other association has ever offered in this country, and it is conducted on a scale larger and more liberal than any great fair or exposition in the United States has ever before ventured upon.

Nor will the useful only be amply provided for, but every variety of spectacle and sport, music and art, will furnish charming pleasures for the multitudes. There will be every variety of horse racing and exhibitions—running, trotting, pacing and leaping—by the most famous and costly horses in the world. There will be atheletic sports. There will be regattas, canoe races by Indians, and running matches. There will be balloon ascensions and thrilling drops from the clouds by both men and women.

The best music in America will be furnished in daily and nightly concerts by Cappa's renowned Seventh Regiment New York band, with forty eminent soloists.

The magnificent Art Hall will be filled with 300 of the choicest American and European paintings, statuary and other fine art works, and will also contain the two most famous large paintings of the present age, each costing a fortune—one by the famous Russian painter, Constantin Makoffsky, the favorite of the Czar and the unchallenged king of the great colorists of Europe, represented in his surprisingly beautiful painting of "The Judgment of Paris," costing $300 per day merely for the expense of its exhibition; and the other the grandest religious painting of modern times, the masterpiece of Munkascy, the world-famous Hungarian romancist, "Christ on Calvary."

Every evening there will be the grandest and most startling pyrotechnic and dramatic spectacular exhibition of the age—Pain & Son's magnificent "The Last Days of Pompeii"—in which will be shown the ancient Roman amphitheatre, with its fierce multitude clamoring for throwing Christians to the wild beasts at the gladiatorial games; its splendid view of the city and its temples; the vast volcanic mountain of the sea; the sudden eruption of the volcano, and the terrific scene of the destruction of the city and the frantic rush of the frightened population to escape to the sea; followed nightly by the most rare and magnificent display of fireworks ever shown on this continent. This exhibition has been the most startling sensation of London and New York, and has been secured at an expense of many thousands of dollars.

The Detroit International Exposition last year surpassed all the great expositions on this continent since the Philadelphia centennial world's fair. But this year it will far surpass last year's success. Its grounds are now fully developed, and are the finest fair grounds in the world, with their great water front and artificial lakes. Its buildings are the largest fair buildings in the world. Its race track is now complete, and it is the best in the country, with an immense grand stand and long rows of special stables for racing stock.

This great exposition will open Aug. 26 and close Sept. 5. This will be several weeks earlier than the ordinary fairs of the country, being just in the height of the season when a visit to the cool breezes and beautiful excursions on Detroit river and the lakes are most enjoyable, and when the parks and attractions of the city are at their best.

George Boyer and John Kline have been arrested at Merrill, Wis., charged with blowing up a Chinese laundry.

A peculiar and fatal disease has broken out among the horses in different parts of Allen county, Ohio. The disease resembles la grippe. A large number of deaths have occurred.

CATARRH—CATARRHAL DEAFNESS—Hay Fever—A New Home Treatment

Sufferers are not generally aware that these diseases are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of living parasites in the lining membrane of the nose and eustachian tubes. Microscopic research, however, has proved this to be a fact, and the result of this discovery is, that a simple remedy has been formulated whereby catarrh, catarrhal deafness and hay fever are permanently cured in from one to three simple applications made at home by the patient once in two weeks.

N. B.—This treatment is not a snuff or an ointment; both have been discarded by reputable physicians as injurious. A pamphlet explaining this new treatment is sent free on application by A. H. DIXON & SON, 337 and 339 West King St., Toronto, Canada.—Christian Advocate.

Sufferers from Catarrhal troubles should carefully read the above. ly

Had smothering spells, short breath, fluttering; could not sleep on my left side, had much pain in breast, shoulder and stomach. Ankles swelled. Had much headache and dizziness. Treatment did me no good, until I tried Dr. Miles' New Heart Cure and restorative Nervine. The first bottle helped me, and I was soon virtually cured. For sale at F. E. Davenport's drug store. VANDALS AT WASHINGTON

RELIC HUNTERS DESTROYING NATIONAL MONUMENTS.

Outrages Often Inspired by Malicious Mischief—The Penciling Fiend Gets in His Work—Damage Amounting to Over a Million Dollars.

Vandalism by relic hunters and malicious persons who visit Washington has been carried to such a destructive point that measures of exceptional severity are to be adopted by the department of public buildings and grounds to restrain the evil. The damage that has been wantonly done in this way within the last ten years would, if reduced to dollars and cents, mount up to a frightful aggregate. Many who are in a good position to judge say that it would cost $1,000,000 to repair only such injuries as are actually visible to the casual observer.

To begin with, as you enter the rotunda of the Capitol from the east front, you observe that the beautiful bronze doors, fac-similes of the Ghiberti doors at the baptistry in Florence, have been badly chewed up by iconoclastic visitors. These doors cost the United States government $28,500. At present they would not be worth anything like that amount. The figures on the panels, representing historical scenes, stand out in high relief, and somebody has found no difficulty in wrenching away the sword that Henry VII of England formerly held in his hand. Columbus has lost the reins of the animal he is riding, and his brother Bartholomew has also been deprived of his sword. Balboa's sword has been all bent out of shape by some one who was, presumably, interrupted in an attempt to twist it off.

Two luckless monarchs, King John II of Portugal and King Charles VIII, have both been robbed of their scepters, of which they now retain only the stumps. Just examples these are of the mischief done to these beautiful gates of bronze. To commit them must have required exceptional nerve, situated, as the doors are, immediately outside the rotunda, where there is always a man on guard. It is this latter fact that is accountable for the fortunate circumstance that no damage whatever has been done within the rotunda itself.

Save for the watch kept, the great historical pictures there would have been all cut to pieces long ago. The heads of the Father of his Country and other respectable characters of American antiquity would have been sliced out of the canvases, merely to begin with. For nothing is sacred to the relic hunter; he will not hesitate to cabbage a red hot stove, if opportunity offers.

On the right hand side of the Ghiberti doors, as you go in, is a superb colossal statue of Mars, the god of war. A vandal visitor unknown broke the end of his marble sword off, probably by reaching over the railing and giving it a sharp bang with a heavy stick. The "busted" portion has been stuck on again with glue or something, but the effect is unsightly. On the other side of the doors is a corresponding statue of Ceres, the goddess of the crops. Her left hand was smashed off a while ago, and so a bunch of marble olives has been placed in her grasp to hide the break. Outrages like these, of course, are often inspired by malicious mischief, pure and simple. But the case is rare of an individual who will destroy property in cold blood. just for the sake of destroying. The bulk of the vandalism is committed by relic hunters—people without souls, savages of civilization, who will not hesitate to wipe out in five minutes as much value as the labor of their lifetime will produce for the sake of procuring half a dozen worthless memorabilia.

Such are the persons, doubtless, who have attacked the magnificent bronze doors of the east senate front—original cost, $56,000—on which are depicted in relief scenes in American history. The guns of the soldiers at Yorktown have been wrenched off—those of them that were sufficiently in alto relievo to make it possible—and the reins of Washington's horse, on his journey through Trenton, have disappeared; also the gun in the hands of the woman who looks on upon the combat between the Jersey farmer and the Hessian has lost its barrel.

The president's room has suffered many times, not only from relic hunters, but also from malicious destroyers. The relic hunters have confined themselves here chiefly to cutting the silken tassels from the chairs, though now and then they have sliced a piece out of the handsome red leather coverings of the sofas, and occasionally a strip has been cut off one corner of the costly carpet, made especially to fit the room, just to remember the place by afterward. Tassels, however, are the favorite spoil.

The guard ventured out of the room for less than two minutes one day, and when he came back three tassels were gone glimmering. On an average, the equivalent of a full set of new tassels has to be put on the chairs each year to replace those carried away. Beyond a doubt this room is the handsomest on the American continent. Curiously enough, it is occupied for only one hour in every twelve months. The president always spends the last sixty minutes in it before Congress adjourns the session, so that he may sign bills up to the very stroke of 12 o'clock and save them from becoming void.

Nothing that money could do to make the apartment gorgeous has been left undone, and its more than palatial splendors appear to tempt the destroyers for mischief's sake. At all events the sofas have been repeatedly ripped from end to end with knives, and other such wanton acts of malice have been committed.

The chief damage done in the statuary room at the Capitol is in the shape of lead pencil writings. Potomac marble, of which the great pillars are formed, is of grayish effect, with light colored spots all over it. These spots afford tempting opportunities for scribblers, who delight in writing their names on them, with various remarks on every conceivable subject. The pillars, as far up as the hand can reach, are fairly covered with these grafitti.—Washington Cor. St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

How We Celebrated.

The glorious old Fourth dawned on Auburn, with some indications of rain. But the people began to come in early for all that. They found the town decorated beautifully from end to end and from side to side. Every business place and most of the dwellings were fluttering with flags, and gay with bunting and many sorts of holiday decorations. It would be impossible to describe them all, or to say which was the best. The whole display did infinite credit to the good taste, liberality and partriotism of the people here. Marshal J. C. Henry was out early, and with his assistant, T. P. Scott, kept busy getting things in readiness. At ten a. m. as advertised, he had the procession start at the foot of Jackson street. It was the gayest ever seen in this section. John Kooder had a wagon on which was a forge, and a "for surely" horse, one of Miller's Shetland ponies that he was supposed to be shoeing. Wallace, the tinner had his wagon covered with a tasty tin roof, like a pleasure house. The Auburn Dispatch had a gaily decorated wagon. Rice of the photo gallery, had a fine show wagon to display his work. Harter had the largest display of any store, the handsome lady clerks of his store, furnishing several as good looking goddesses as one could wish to see. One represented a Japanese girl in native costume. The whole display was beautiful. We should have noted, that first in the line, and following Marshal Henry, came the Uniform Rank of K. P. marching in fine order. Then came the town board riding in a fine carriage driven by Gene Trout, who had a full coachman's suit and drove four of his finest horses. Then came the Auburn Band of 18 pieces. Then the fire engine, followed by the hose company and the hook and ladder department. C. C. Shaffer had a large wagon on which he had a big display of fine upholstered goods. The Auburn Woolen Mills, made a splendid showing of their make of cloths. Kessler Brothers had a big flat, on which a dozen or so of men were making cigars. This was made doubly attractive, when they would throw a few choice cigars to the crowd. The Kain Road Cart showed off finely, with two of their vehicles hitched together, with a boy in a hammock, it being called the Hammock Road Cart. The Kichler & Company flour mill had a wagon load of their fine flour, etc, and showed off well. Trentman made a good display of handles and the ash logs from which they are made. George Apple followed with his dairy wagon, decorated for the occasion. C. H. Sailer, the blacksmith, had a forge and a man at work with a live horse to be shod. Shaffer & Berg had the same, and a man forging iron, and they followed this by several of their fine farm wagons, making a really appropriate display. Schaab & Brother showed a buggy full of fine goods, well displayed, and Mrs. Jones & Son had some lovely fabrics on their wagon, both displays calling out praise from the ladies along the line. Potter, the Boot and Shoe man, had a nice rig and kept up with his competitors finely. A nice thing was the display of Picker & Bumpus, the bricklayers. The sides of their wagon were painted to imitate a brick wall, and along the top of this their men were laying up additional lines of brick and mortar, making it more realistic by their hearty shouts of "More mort." They were cheered along the line. The Auburn Windmill Co., had a big flat, on which was a fine wheel, and other specimens of their work. Then came the Auburn Foundry band, neatly uniformed and playing lively airs. Their other display was a vast lot of brass goods, and several of their fine road machines, the latter being in charge of Ex-Treasurer Brandon. The huge display of the line, was the band sawmill, that had an immense oak log with its ends painted red white and blue and supporting one of their great band saws, the whole drawn by twenty fine mules. Robbins & McCord had a big mortar and other suitable displays. A. J. & G. M. Ralston had a nice lot of grocery goods on a neatly trimmed wagon. O. J. Schwarz made a fine display with his two-mule tandem team and decorated wheels. Fred Yesbera had his big clock, and a number of common ones on a nice flat, which was driven by his colored driver. This was one man, who did not need to black his face. G. W. Stahl had a neat wagon with his White sewing machines; E. M. Bishop had a profusion of "the weed" to show for his tobacco store; G. W. McKay & Co, had a tasty decorated rig for their drug business. As elaborate and appropriate a display as was shown, was the neat little cottage of Kuhlman Bros. with its lace curtains, shingled roof and all complete. Rice had a fine wagon for his "Ground Floor Photo Gallery." The Zimmerman factory had a big flat with windmills, tanks and even a stock of water for a fountain, Garrett the uptown grocer, had a suitable display, J. N. Myers had a traction engine, separator, stacker and a binder, J. E. Beugnot had a big wagon with a big driver, who from where we stood looked very much like Joe Rectenwald. Next came the big display of the Mammoth Shoe store, followed by the Auburn Marble Works, with fine specimens of marble work and men at work dressing stone. Hebel Brothers made a fine display of "Good Cheer Soap." Wilson had a big display for his boot and shoe store; Brown & Culbertson followed with a traction engine, tank, separator, stacker, binder, and etc., and the Auburn Drum Corps. Then came the big flat with the 43 little girls, for the 43 states, for the president had signed the Idaho bill the day before, and this gave one new state, and Auburn was probably the first to honor it. The little Misses, and the goddess all looked lovely as they swept past the Courier office, to which all turned their eyes, for they knew we would have a kind, good word for them. It was an aggregate of youthful beauty not seen at any other season except the glorious Fourth. The old vets of the G. A. R. followed looking dignified in their position of honor. Mr. Messe with a display of the "Favorite Washer" came next, and was followed by Mr. Sheffer's display of harness, robes, nets, etc., J. L. Davis had a good display for his hardware, and Ruhl & Son followed with a real house drawn by four horses, to represent his business of moving houses. Rainier & Headley's meat market also had a display wagon in line. Landis, the photographer, showed his work by putting a nice display wagon into the parade. Then came some comic displays, and a line of private carriages closed the procession. It was probably over a mile long, as the last displays were in the way, at the Kiblinger corner, when the head of the procession came from the west on Seventh street. That means, that it occupied the lines from the court house north to Second, west to Jackson, south to Fifth, west to the Jackson depot, south to Seventh, and from there clear back to the court house. The Fire Department then gave a grand display. This closed the forenoon exercises. At one o'clock the bands gave a concert in the public square, and then came the speech by Judge Zollars, which was of course excellent, able and patriotic. The same may be said of the brief speech by Hon. Freeman Kelley, who came next. Both gentlemen acquitted themselves well. Singing by a big company of our local vocalists, was sandwiched in along here. Then came the bicycle race, in which Milo Husselman got the first prize, $5, Frank Eckhart the second, $3, and Ed. Robbins the third, $2. The mule race, Lee Robbins first, $2. In the sack race, Cassius Smith got first, and Charley Foltz second. In the three-legged race, Hugh Robbins and Dan Stahl got first, Roy Hull and Walter Baker second. The game of ball with the Ft. Wayne nine came next, the Ft. Waynes getting it by 8 to 7. In the evening the bands called the crowd together, and then started for the Jackson depot. They came back bringing the fantastic parade. Over fifty took part in this, but we can only give one name, Saxby McIntosh, who was an angel. The others could not be identified, but they all did well, and created much fun. Then came the fireworks, which were sent up from the top of a high platform placed on a wagon. It was a grand success of which the gentlemen in charge have cause to feel proud. This ended the best celebration ever held in the county. The attendance in the evening was fully as large, as in the daytime. Everybody, here and elsewhere, pronounced it a perfect success.

NOTES.

Dr. Johnston made a splendid presiding officer. Doc. never sees the half-way point.

J. C. Henry, C. C. Shaffer and their able assistants deserve great credit for the business-like way the whole thing was managed.

Frank Benedict, John Aber and Sam Buss, who touched off the fire works, covered themselves all over with glory, and powder and such stuff.

Judge Zollars was highly complimented as was also Mr. Kelley.

Hicksville sent up over 100. Good town.

The Auburn Band was splendid, so everybody said. They had been organized but about two weeks.

If we have omitted any one in our description of the parade, it was not intended. The display was enough to rattle anyone.

No drunks to amount to anything the Fourth. Even the habitually drunk editor of the Garrett Windjammer was able to be about. Saloons all closed, you see.

Not many fire crackers burned the Fourth. The town ordinance saved the spectators a vast deal of annoyance.

The decorations on some of the private residences were just splendid and showed taste and patriotism.

The town was full of paper Saturday morning, and everybody had to clean up. Chris. Cloy had a big job on the public square.

Our small luxuries, even, cost money. The "Merry-go-around" west of Davis' hardware, took in $180 the Fourth. Just think of that.

Attention, Soldiers!

All soldiers who are drawing a pension of less than $12 a month, are now entitled to the full $12 under the recent act of June 27. I will assist to secure this increase for any soldier entitled to the same.

DAKOTA'S BLIZZARD.

Latest Reports from Fargo, N. D., More than Confirm the Rumors—Many Lives Lost and Much Property Destroyed.

A reporter of the Record at Detroit, Minn., describes the tornado which struck the city of Fargo, N. D., at 2:30 o'clock Wednesday morning as follows:

About midnight a strong wind prevailed, but no attention was paid to it until half-past 2 o'clock, when in a few minutes the citizens realized that a terrible tornado had veered down upon the city by the Red River, and left a birthmark that will be remembered in years to come. The storm demolished the Manitoba and Milwaukee freight houses, threw down the electric light towers, destroyed the fronts of the Davis block, the Opera House block, the Continental block, the Garfield block, the Webster block, unroofed the Northern Pacific freight depot, also the Republican office and the Chapin hardware store. The court house tower is badly twisted and deposited on the sidewalk on Tenth Street. The Plymouth Congregational Church is destroyed, the Luger Furniture Company's warehouse is damaged, numerous bricks from the Argus brick block lie on the ground. The Deering warehouse is damaged to some extent, as is also Alfstat's hardware store and Vachen's restaurant, and the rear battlements on the bank of North Dakota lies on the ground in ruins. The Keeney block and Exchange Hotel suffered badly. Dozens of smaller buildings and rods of sidewalk are demolished. The saddest of all is the death of the entire family consisting of the mother and seven children of the late Captain McCarthy, which occurred at their residence at the corner of Ninth and Fifth streets. The family had taken refuge in the cellar, and in some manner were caught in the timbers of the falling building and crushed to death. Train No. 1, the Northern Pacific passenger, was caught just as it was departing from Fargo, and was toppled over into a ditch. No one was killed, although the following were injured: Geo. E. Manning, Post Falls, Idaho, knee hurt and badly shaken up; J. F. Roundtree, Pingree, badly bruised and leg hurt; Miss McCabe, sister of Superintendent McCabe, ankle bruised; C. R. Helm, knee hurt and bruised; Victor Montgomery, of Chicago, scalp wound, taken to hospital; Mrs. Nordstrom, en route from Findland to Seattle to join her husband, badly cut in several places and tendon severed and wrist cut; John Richie baggagemaster, cut in head; Albert Lee, express messenger, badly bruised; Mrs C. R. Mann, Milwaukee, arm bruised and shoulder sprained; Addison Augar, Palos City, Wash., face cut; G. A. Mann, St. Louis, temple bruised; Ben Sportsman, porter of Vice President Purdie's car, spine injured and head hurt seriously; Warren P. Purdie, Vice President of the Rock Island Railroad and family, accompanied by Col. R. S. Thompson and wife, were in Mr. Purdie's private car, but none were seriously injured. The train consisted of three baggage cars and nine coaches, also Superintendent McCabe's special car containing a party of Chicago and Northwestern officials accompanying Mr. McCabe. The passengers in the sleepers succeeded in dressing and saving their valuables, although it was difficult in the dark.

A Great Find.

Tincup (Col.) special: An account of what is claimed to be the most wonderful discovery of gold ever known is reported here. The find is six miles from Tincup on Cross Mountain and is owned by McCormick and Lewis. Between the two lines there is a thickness of ten feet, the upper four being gold-bearing quartz, free gold. The lowest assay from this rock is $440 per ton and there are specimens which, put through a common mortar, returns $20,000 in gold to the ton. If this streak is only one yard in depth and extends the full length of the claim, 1,500 feet, there is $563,000 worth of gold in it. If the dip goes down 1,000 feet it is worth $187,479,000. The average value placed is $1,000 per ton. Thousands are rushing to the camp.

Burned with the Boat.

The steambarge Sea Gull, owned by Joe Miller, of Marine City, was discovered on fire at East Tawas, Mich. Maggie Cornett, the cook, was unable to get on shore and was burned to death. The burning steamer after setting fire to the lumber on Emery's dock drifted over to the mill dock of Messrs. Locke & Stevens and was pushed off by men with long boards, but as it passed the last two tiers of piles the fire got between them and the entire dock and the lumber was destroyed.

Two Americans Murdered.

The Department of State is informed by the Minister of the United States to Bolivia that two Americans a Mr. Leonard Thompson, of Ohio, and a Mr. Kedman, of Illinois, while on their way to the mining regions were murdered near Pelechues on May 10th last, by certain revolutionists in arms against the government. Every effort is being made by that government to apprehend the murderers.

Two Children Drowned.

Ira and Doler Ganger, two sons of William Ganger of Waynesboro, Pa., aged 9 and 14 years respectively, were drowned in Antietam Creek while fishing.

The Governor Vetoed It.

Baton Rouge special: Governor Nicholls has vetoed the lottery bill, as expected.

A FATAL FIGHT.

Pugilist Dies from His Injuries.

Chicago special: Billy Brennan, the light weight pugilist of Brooklyn, who participated in one of the preliminary events in the athletic entertainment at Battery D, died from injuries received while boxing with Frank Gerard, of Chicago. Brennan's fatal blow was received in the fourth round. During a clinch he fell, Gerard falling on top of him. The Brooklyn man's head struck the floor with a resounding whack, which could be heard all over the building. Gerard was up on his feet in a moment, but Brennan never moved a muscle, and at the end of ten second the fight was awarded to Gerard. The fallen man's seconds rushed to the middle of the ring and tried to help Brennan up. He was as limp as a rag, and when lifted up would fall back. He was picked up bodily and carried through the ropes outside the ring, where efforts were made to revive him. These failing he was again picked up and carried to one of the battery parlors, where a bed was made of a rug, and the unconscious form was placed on it. Dr. Francis R. Sherwood was hastily summoned and applied restoratives, but in vain. The pugilist lay on the rug, his face as white as marble and the heavy breathing betraying his critical condition. All the symptoms of concussion of the brain were noticeable, and Dr. Sherwood expressed the opinion that Brennan had received such an injury.

INNOCENTS KILLED

By a Terrific Powder Explosion—Little Hands, Feet, and Bodies Burned and Mutilated.

A keg containing fifty pounds of powder exploded in August Smith's grocery store at Industry, near Scott Haven, Pa., completely wrecking the building and injuring seven children, four of them fatally. The explosion was caused by sparks from a Jackson cracker, which exploded prematurely in the hands of August Smith, jr., aged 11 years. The store was a resort for children, and at the time of the accident a large number were present firing crackers. The powder exploded with terrific force, lifting the building, which was a two-story structure, from its foundations and wrecking it completely. Young Smith's body was burned to a crisp and he was otherwise terribly mangled. John Branner, aged 10 years, had the soles of both feet torn off, was frightfully burned about the body and both eyes were blown out. George Kohler, aged 8 years, was badly burned about the body and the flesh was torn from his limbs. Emma Smith, aged 9 years, Mary Smith, 19 months, and Charlie Shoul, 8 years, were all badly burned, but will recover. The first four named are still living, and everything possible is being done to alleviate their sufferings, but death is expected any moment. The ruins took fire, but were extinguished before the flames had gained much headway. Several kegs of powder were stored in the cellar, and a more horrible calamity was averted by the prompt and heroic work of the neighbors in extinguishing the fire.

PENETRATED THE PIT.

Rescuers Break Into the Hill Farm Mine but Are Driven Back by Fire Damp.

A special from Dunbar, Pa., dated the 2, inst., says: The rescuers dug through into the Hill Farm Mine at 3:30 o'clock this morning, but before they had gone far fire and black damp were encountered, and the men quickly made their way out of the dangerous pit. The fans were then started, and at 9 o'clock this morning nine selected men, including the three mine inspectors, District Master Workman Watchorn and Superintendent Hill, started on the search for the thirty entombed men. At 11 o'clock nothing had been heard from them. There is scarcely any hope that any of the imprisoned men are alive. The exploring party were driven back by smoke after advancing ten feet in the Hill Farm Mine. Another attempt will be made this afternoon.

2 p. m.—It is certain now that the Hill Farm Mine is full and has been full of smoke and the deadly black damp. There seems to be no doubt that the entombed miners are all dead, and it is now a question whether their bodies can be recovered. At 2 o'clock this afternoon preparations were being made for another descent into the mine. A car-load of coffins arrived this morning. The question now is: "Will they be used?" The work of rescue has been abandoned. Two dinner buckets and coats were found by the party. Thirty-one men are in the slope and were unfortunately burned to death.

A FURIOUS MOB

Attacks Kansas Whisky Sellers and Breaks up an "Original Package" Plant.

Ottawa, (Kan.) special: Another sensation was created here over the "original package" question. At an early hour two agents of a Kansas City house made their appearance in Ottawa and employed a dray to carry their goods from the Santa Fe to 121 Main street.

This fact had no sooner been noised about than the church bells began ringing and hundreds of the citizens were to be seen rushing pell mell toward the spot. The "original package" men were already there, and on being confronted by the infuriated mob and asked to return to Kansas City, they refused. While thus parleying a dray load of packages arrived, which had the effect of exciting the crowd to fury. They accordingly attacked the wagon, unhitched the horse and rushed down a back alley with the dray and its contents. They had not proceeded far until the wagon containing "the packages" broke down and scattered the packages about upon the ground. A convenient wagon was brought into service and the "packages" conveyed to the Santa Fe Depot and reshipped to the firm at Kansas City. The package men with their attorney, J. W. Deford, left on the afternoon train for Topeka, and their final action will, no doubt, determine the course of the Ottawa citizens. Public feeling, while opposed to the opening of the "original package" house, is not at all one-sided, and a great riot may be the outcome of another attempt to start one in this city.

A LAMP EXPLOSION

Throws Flaming Oil Upon Two Children and Fatally Burns Them.

Greensburg (Pa.) special: By a lamp explosion at the house of Adam Steinler, a butcher at Badenville, a few miles east of this place, a son and daughter of Mrs. Steinler, aged 3 and 6 years respectively, were burned to death. Mr. Steinler received burns from which he will probably die, and his wife was also seriously burned. Mr. Steinler was in bed, suffering from fever, and the children were in the room playing. The mother had gone out, when suddenly the lamp, which was sitting upon the table, exploded, and the burning oil was thrown over the room and the children's clothes took fire. The father and children called loudly for help, but the mother did not hear. Mr. Steinler jumped from his bed and made an effort to save the little ones, but he fell exhausted to the floor, and when the mother returned a moment later she found them all in the condition described. The children were literally roasted. The cries of Mrs. Steinler brought the neighbors to her assistance and the flames were extinguished.

Burned to Death.

Three men met their death by the burning of the 2,000 ton steamer Iron King and a portion of the Columbus and Hocking Coal Company's docks at Ashland, Wis., and four others probably fatally injured. W. S. Staunton, a tailor, was burned to death. John Prothers cannot live through the night. An unknown man jumped down twenty-five feet in a perfect sea of flame, and perished before the eyes of those who were powerless to aid him. J. J. Moore will die from his burns.

The fire started in the Iron King while that boat was discharging coal. The boat machinery and upper decks were totally destroyed. The flames leaped to the coal dock and on top of the great heaps of coal a dozen firemen were stationed plying streams of water on the coal. The flames beneath generated a gas and a terrific explosion occurred. The firemen ran into the flames like frightened sheep and one of them was burned to death. His name was John Sheehan. The other firemen were nearly all fataly burned.

Fell to Death.

A dark shadow was cast over the events of Friday's celebration at Beardstown, Ill., by a fatal accident occurring to Professor Sam Black, who made a baloon ascension at 5:30 o'clock. The æronaut left the ground in what appeared to be fine style. Everything seeming in good condition when at a distance of four hundred feet, he waved his hat to the crowd to intimate that he was about to make his decent. Instead of descending immediately as was expected, he seemed to have some trouble in releasing the parachute from the balloon. A few minutes later a thin stream of smoke was seen issuing from the top of the parachute, which in a few seconds burst into a flame, severing the parachute from the baloon and the æronaut was seen falling through the air at a frightful speed. Half an hour later he was found horribly mangled about two miles from the scene of ascent.

Will Need Our Grain.

London special: England is likely to require all the cereals that America can send it this year, for continued wet weather and cold, blighting winds are rapidly destroying our own crops. Hay is rotting on the ground, wheat is mildewed, the fields are being turned into ponds and nothing is ripening. As for fruit, nearly all we get comes, like most other things, from abroad. We are more and more dependent on foreign supplies for provisions and delicacies of every kind. Every year makes the prospect worse and worse for the English farmer. Fortune seemed likely to be more favorable the present season, but rain set in and the good prospect has rapidly changed. Since the beginning of June the country has been wrapped in gloom. The absence of summer is also dealing a heavy blow at trade of all kinds.

Blew It Up.

For a long time there has been a bitter war between the Prohibition people and B. J. Misamore, at Rawson, Handcock County, Ohio. The saloon has been wrecked once or twice by the Prohibition element, and Misamore arrested several times. Some time ago Misamore leased his building to another party to run a saloon, but the man moved out. The other night some unknown parties exploded a dynamite cartridge under the building, completely wrecking it and destroying the saloon fixtures. The explosion broke a number of glasses in the hotel building of J. G. Kelly near by and tore up the sidewalk in front of the building. There is no clew to the perpetrators.

A Serious Wreck.

Conflicting orders caused a serious wreck about two miles north of Bay View, Mich. Freight train No. 10 collided with the dummy train from Bay View to Odin. Miss S. Weller, of Detroit, received serious internal injuries, and will probably die. Wm. Gregg, of Harbor Springs, Mich., had his right leg broken and badly crushed below the knee. Jay L. Newberry, of Petoskey, and Edith and Katie McArthur, of Bay View, were severely bruised, and half a dozen others were slightly injured by jumping from the open car. The dummy locomotive was demolished. The freight engine was badly wrecked and three freight cars were piled on the track.

Nitro-Glycerine Combine.

Findlay (O.) special: The manufacturers of nitro-glycerine used in shooting oil and gas wells have formed a combine by the High Explosive Company (limited), of Brandford, Pa., buying out the Rock Glycerine Company, with factories near this city and Lima, thus putting the entire control of the nitro-glycerine business of Ohio and Pennsylvania in the hands of the High Explosive Company, which will hereafter have a monopoly of the manufacture and sale of this product in the two States where its use is essental to oil and gas developers. The President of the new trust is William Warmcastle, of Bradford, Pa. The terms of the sale have not been made public.

Seeking Revenge.

A dispatch from Springfield, Ill., says: In the United States District Court Dr. William H. Pierce, of Hoopeston, Vermillion County, was on trial for selling liquor without a license. A year ago last spring the doctor was elected Mayor on the Prohibition ticket and closed up all the saloons. The charges were that he and his partner, McCarthney, ran a big store and have been selling whisky on the prescription plan. Recently, he closed up a club-house for gambling, and some of the members who have had prescriptions from him have had him arrested for selling liquor without a license.

Big Money Lost.

Joseph Shannon, a wealthy farmer, aged 63 years, was swindled out of $9,000 by two sharpers. The game played was the time-worn one with cards. A man named Harper and his confederate induced Shannon to pick out a card, and then told him he had won $9,000, but before this money would be paid over he must produce that amount to prove that he could have paid if he had lost. Shannon went to the bank, drew the money and returned with it. The sharpers then took the cash from him and skipped out. The victimized farmer has offered $5,000 for the apprehension of the two men.

Killed by a Rapist.

If the crowds scouring the woods in the vicinity of Plainville, Ga., can find Richard Curtis there will be a lynching. Curtis is colored, and has for about a year been in the service of Capt. R. G. Collins. While at work in the field Curtis was ordered by Collins to go to the house on an errand. After about five minutes' silence the report of a shotgun was heard from the house, and immediately after Curtis was seen making for the woods. Inside the house Mrs. Collins was found dead with a bullet through her brain and evidence of resistance of a personal assault.

Woman's Feet Mowed Off.

Mrs. Maggie Miller, of Mercersburg, Franklin County, Pa., had both her feet cut off by a mowing machine. Henry Miller, her father, stopped his machine near the house and was attacked by the swarm from a dozen hives of bees. He called for help and his daughter came out of the house to his assistance. She was trying to unhitch the horses from the mower when the animals jumped forward and the knife of the machine cut her feet off at the ankles. Miller is in a serious condition from the bee-stings and the horses will both die from their attacks.

A Town Gutted.

The business portion of Livermore, Iowa, was destroyed by fire. The fire started in the St. James Hotel from some unknown cause and spread rapidly to the adjoining buildings. Before the fire could be got under control it had totally destroyed the bank, six stores, two implement houses and several private dwellings. Loss $100,000, partly covered by insurance.

Gored by a Bull.

M. C. Herdman, of Cardington, O., was terribly gored and bruised by a cross Jersey bull, on the Morse dairy farm, just outside of Hartford City, Ind. Herdman was handling hay when the bull attacked him. He would doubtless have been killed outright had it not been for the fact that he grabbed the bull's nose ring, which caused him to desist long enough for Herdman to get over the fence. The wounded man is badly hurt internally, but will probably recover.

Fight with Moonshiners.

Louisville special: Conflicting reports of a bloody encounter between revenue officers and moonshiners in Rowan County have been coming in here. All accounts agree in one particular, namely, that three men were killed, but whether they were officers or shiners is not known. There has been an intense feeling against the revenue men ever since the raid of six weeks ago, and it is feared here that the government force has been led into an ambuscade.

Hoist by His Own Petard.

Hugh Gilmore was killed by an explosion of dynamite at Ouid, Ind. His father, himself, and a railroad hand were endeavoring to blow up a dam that prevented the C. W. & M. road building a bridge over the Fall Creek of that place. The owner of the dam, John Forney, would not sell, so the three at a late hour placed a gas pipe filled with dynamite under the dam. A premature explosion killed the boy and wounded the old man seriously.

World's Fair.

Chicago special: The directors of the World's Fair have decided to recommend to the national commission the selection of both the Lake Front and Jackson Park as the site for the Columbia exposition, with the main exhibit at the former place. Michigan Avenue property owners have given notice of their intention to ask an injunction the moment any move is made toward carrying out the proposed plan.

Bank Cashier Missing.

Charles Benson, of the Scandia Bank of Minneapolis, is missing. On the evening of his disappearance, just as the safe was being locked he entered it and took a package containing $4,500 in bank notes. He has not been seen since. He was a much respected man, having been employed in the bank for six years as a bookkeeper. He was of good habits and the cause of the deed is unknown. He left a wife and two children and a comfortable home.

The Fatal Electric Current.

Edward Deubler, a clerk in a grocery, at Lima, Ohio, while cleaning the pavement preparatory to closing up, leaned against an electric light post, which was bound with wire, to rest. Immediately on touching the post he gave a scream and fell back, and when assistance reached him he was dead. It seems that a guy wire, joined with the post, was charged, and communicated the electricity to the wire about the post.

World's Fair Site.

Chicago special: Mr. Martindale, of Indiana, submitted a resolution at the meeting of the World's Fair Commissioners, calling for the selection of a World's Fair site. After a long and animated discussion on the part of several commissioners as to where the location should be, it was finally voted to accept the lake front and Jackson Park site, as proposed by the local directors.

He Found the Leak.

Welham Saunders lit a match in David Ferguson's cellar, at Rushville, Ind., to find a natural gas leak. He found it, but the gas exploded, tearing out the entire foundation of the house, letting it down to the ground. The explosion was heard for half a mile. Saunders luckily escaped, minus his whiskers and hair.

Killed by the Cars.

Gust Bayless, a prominent business man and Odd Fellow, of Fort Wayne, attended the unveiling of the Hendricks Monument at Indianapolis. On his return home he got off the cars at the depot and started to walk down the track to his home, when he was run down and killed by a train. He leaves a family.

Cloud Burst.

A special from Coshocton, O., says: A cloud bursted over Coshocton County, which caused a loss of thousands of dollars. The Pan Handle and Coshocton railroads were badly washed out. The Ohio Canal is broken in several places, and the water has damaged crops and drowned stock.

Death of a Noted Michigan Man.

Dexter Mussey died at his home in Armanda, Mich., aged 89 years. In 1837 he located in Macomb County and has resided there ever since. He was a Representative in the Legislature from 1855 to 1862, being Speaker in 1861-'62.

Mangled in a Wreck.

A train on the Northern Pacific road plunged down an embankment near Drummond, Mont., and one woman was killed and twelve other persons were badly injured.

HENDRICKS' MONUMENT.

A SPLENDID MEMORIAL TO THE DEAD STATESMAN.

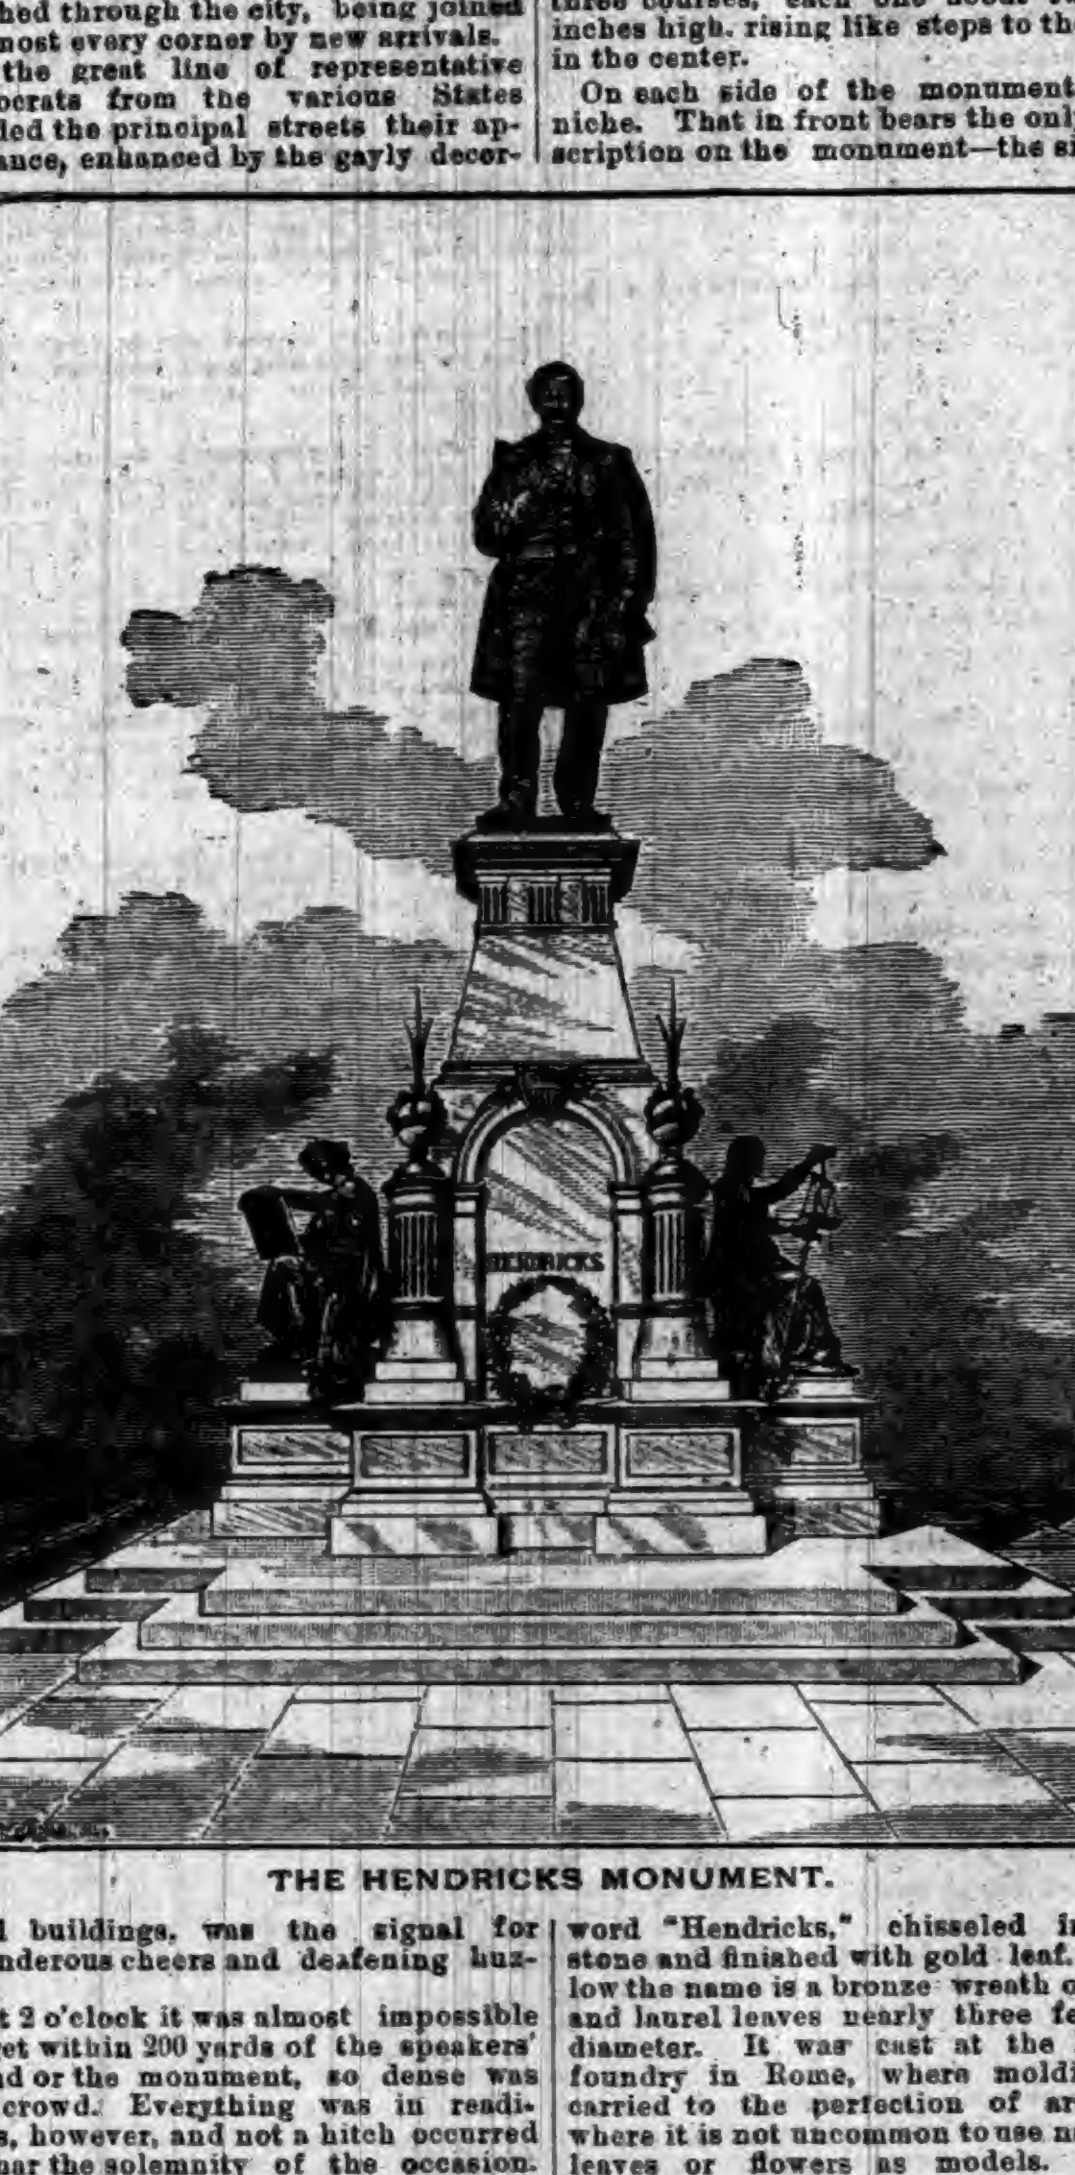
Unveiling of the Statue at Indianapolis—A Vast Concourse of People Witness the Ceremonies Attending the Event—A Grand Day for Indiana.

A special from Indianapolis says: Not less than 50,000 people witnessed the unveiling of the monument of Hoosierdom's favorite son, Thomas A. Hendricks.

Long before the hour set for the ceremony immense throngs of visitors who had been pouring into Indianapolis for the last twenty-four hours gathered about the square in which the monument is located.

Democratic clubs from all parts of the United States were present. Those who arrived first marched and countermarched through the city, being joined at almost every corner by new arrivals.

As the great line of representative Democrats from the various States paraded the principal streets their appearance, enhanced by the gayly decorated buildings, was the signal for thunderous cheers and deafening huzzas.



THE HENDRICKS MONUMENT.

At 2 o'clock it was almost impossible to get within 200 yards of the speakers' stand or the monument, so dense was the crowd. Everything was in readiness, however, and not a hitch occurred to mar the solemnity of the occasion. Mrs. Hendricks, widow of the dead statesman, pulled the cord, and the magnificent piece of bronze was exposed to the view of the thousands present.

Indianapolis never before witnessed such a grand and enthusiastic demonstration, and when the covering gracefully unfurled a cheer went up that was never heard before at Indiana's capital.

The entire city was dressed in holiday attire. Flags and bunting were flying from every top-mast, and pictures of the dead statesman were visible in almost every residence and business house of the city.

The visitors numbered three Governors—Hill, of New York; Campbell, of Ohio, and Francis, of Missouri. Gov. Francis arrived during the night and did not leave his car until morning. At 1 o'clock the firing of the salute by German veterans started the great procession, the Chief Marshal being Gen. Frederick Kriefler, a leading Republican. The chief of staffs were evenly divided as to politics, and the entire affair was on an unpartisan basis. The line of march ended at the State House grounds, the site of the monument. The chorus, "The Model Republic," sung by 500 children, opened the exercise. Gov. Hovey delivered the address of welcome and installed Frederick Rand, President of the Monument Association, as Master of Ceremonies. President Rand gave the history of the monument after an invocation by the Rev. J. L. Jenckes, rector of St. Paul's (Hendricks') Church. Mrs. Hendricks at a signal amid music and cheers pulled the chord, revealing the handsome proportions of the monument. Gen. Lew Wallace read an ode written for the occasion by James Whitcomb Riley, and Senator Turpie delivered a scholarly oration eulogistic of the late Vice President.

His concluding words were: "He had genius—the genius of statesmanship alike befitting the majestic assemblies and the highest council of a free people. To genius belongs the hereafter. In the vast halls of the future its greetings are heard, its audiences are heard, its prosperity throngs to the reception. In their midst it moves clad with radiant halo of glory, nor neither time nor chance nor change, nor things past or present, nor thing to come of whatever moment may dim or tarnish its unfading splendor."

A male chorus rendered a hymn, "The True Patriot," and a chorus of school children sang the "The Star Spangled Banner." The benediction closing the exercises was impressively pronounced by Bishop Chatard, of the Catholic diocese of Vincennes.

DESCRIPTION OF THE MONUMENT.

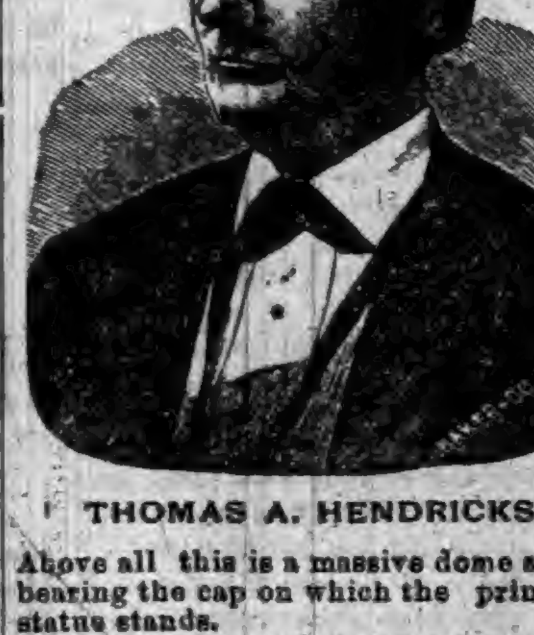
The statue of the late Thomas A. Hendricks is a remarkable work of art and a superb superstructure for the monument.

The work has been two years in progress, $40,000 having been subscribed and paid in to defray its cost. The sculptor is R. H. Parks and the result of his work is more than satisfactory. The statue is of bronze, fourteen and one-half feet high, and cast in a single piece. Figures of History and Justice adorn the pedestal. The process of wax molding in a single piece is an ancient art, lost three centuries ago, and only rediscovered within a generation. Now it is only practiced at the Royal foundry in Rome, where this statue was cast, and at a foundry in Florence. The clay model, which was the work of five months, weighed when completed 13,000 pounds, and the statue weighs more than twice as much. Four months were consumed in the process of casting. The pedestal is of granite, imported from the Bavano quarries in Italy. This stone is of a light coral tint and has been used for some of the famous statues in Europe. The base is twenty-nine feet long by twenty-one feet wide, and is laid in three courses, each one about twelve inches high, rising like steps to the die in the center.

On each side of the monument is a niche. That in front bears the only inscription on the monument—the single word "Hendricks," chisseled in the stone and finished with gold leaf. Below the name is a bronze wreath of oak and laurel leaves nearly three feet in diameter. It was cast at the Royal foundry in Rome, where molding is carried to the perfection of art, and where it is not uncommon to use natural leaves or flowers as models. This particular wreath was exhibited in Paris, where a gold medal was awarded it, and where Mr. Parks bought it for the decoration of this monument. Above the niche which is thus adorned is a United States shield in bronze, with a spray of laurel falling across it.

In the niches to the north and south are the figures already mentioned of History and Justice. They are about two feet in height and, like the statue which stands between and above them, they are the work of Mr. Parks, and were cast by the wax molding process in Rome.

At the four corners of the pedestal are fluted columns, each surmounted by a globe with bronze ornamentation.



THOMAS A. HENDRICKS.

Above all this is a massive dome stone, bearing the cap on which the principal statue stands.

The monument occupies a position in the southeast corner of the new Capitol grounds, facing Washington Street, the principal thoroughfare of the city, and is approached from front and rear by a cement walk leading from the Capitol to the street.

The figure of the great statesman faces the southeast, looking down the walk which leads to the State House. He is represented as standing firmly on his left foot, with the right slightly advanced. His right hand is thrust into his unbuttoned waistcoat and in his left hand is a parchment roll. On his face is an expression of concentration, and he has the appearance of being about to address an audience. The likeness is pronounced remarkably accurate by those who knew him in life. In his modeling, which took him five months, the sculptor worked with the "death mask" constantly before him.

An Indian Robin Hood.

Jhunda, the dacoit, who was recently killed in an encounter with the Indian police, appears from the accounts of his life given by the papers, to have been a kind of Indian Robin Hood. He began his career in the native army, but soon left the service for the more congenial occupation of robbery. In 1874 he was captured and sentenced to fifteen years' imprisonment. After breaking his arm in an attempt to escape he remained at Meerut prison till 1888, and became the most expert carpet weaver in the prison. On his release he collected a band, which soon became the terror of Meerut and the adjoining districts. His usual course of operations was to pounce upon a village and call upon the local shroff—banker—to produce his bonds and receipts, which were then publicly burned, while the shroff himself was plundered. This style of proceeding made Jhunda popular with the indebted classes, who form a large proportion of the rural population, and by their aid he succeeded in defying the police for the last two years. Like his English prototype, he is also said to have been very charitable to the poor. There was at first some doubt as to whether he was actually killed; but his identity has now been placed beyond question.

The Inutility of Grammar.

In a locality near Dawson there recently existed a flourishing school, taught by a lady. The teacher, wishing one of her pupils to study grammar, told the child to get one, whereupon the mother sent the following note to the teacher:

"I do not desire for Lula shall ingage in grammar as i prefer her ingage in yuseful studies and can learn her how to spoke and write properly myself. I have went through two grammarf and can't say as they did me no good. I prefer her ingage in german and drawing and vokal music on the piano."—Dawson News.

HOW WE HAVE GROWN.

GREAT GAINS SHOWN BY THE CENSUS JUST TAKEN.

Figures from the Chief Cities—The Total Population of the United States Estimated at 64,500,000—Chicago in Second Place—Growth of Urban Population.

The period for taking the census ended on the 30th of June. A Washington dispatch reports Superintendent Porter as saying that information received from all portions of the country indicates that there has been no serious hitch. All the returns are not yet in. In some of the sparsely settled sections it takes several days' traveling to get one name. Where enumerators have been delayed by sickness and other causes, they will be allowed an extension of time. Mr. Porter estimates that of the 43,000 enumeration districts into which the country is divided 90 per cent. have been completed.

Some semi-official statistics of the census have been furnished by Mr. Porter, who estimates the population of the United States to be in round numbers 64,500,000. The returns from the cities given below have been announced in a semi-official way thus far:

HISTORICAL.

A TAX was levied on funerals in England in 1793.

THE granting of licenses as a mode of levying money was introduced into England by Richard I., about 1190, but was then confined to such of the nobility as desired to enter into the lists of tournaments.

LUSTRUM was an expiatory sacrifice made for the Roman people at the end of every five years after the census had been taken, beginning 472 B. C. Every fifth year was called a lustrum. The last lustrum took place A. D. 74.

THE "great conduit" was the first waterway of lead created in the city of London, being built in 1285. Stow says: "At the procession of Anne Boleyn, June 1, 1533, on the occasion of her marriage, it ran with white and claret wine."

THE English "clearing-house system" originated in 1775, in London, when a building in Lombard street was set apart for the use of bankers as an exchange depot. The New York clearing-house, the first in the United States, was established Oct. 1, 1853.

THE Gesta Romanorum is the title of a collection of popular tales derived from Oriental and classical sources, written in Latin by an unknown author, about the middle of the fourteenth century. These tales were largely drawn upon by the early English poets and dramatists, including Shakspeare.

LINES TO MY LOVE.

BY ARTHUR E. SMITH.

As spring is the gayest of seasons,
And the present the best of all times,
So I send thee, my love, as heart-offerings,
These few unpoetical rhymes!

Oh, no, I'll not "soar to the stars, love"
For a lay that would melt thy dear heart;
But simply I'll sing how I love thee,
And how dear to me ever thou art!

"As the bee loves the sweets of the blossom"—
The blossom the light of the sun—
So love I "thy smiles like the morning,"
And the blush on thy cheeks, darling one,

Wherever thou goest, my darling—
To lands of the Orient sun,
Or Occident—gladly I'll follow
If only thou biddest, sweet one.

CHAPTER XII.

DISHONORED.

The President of the Atlantic National Bank, in which Eugene Cleveland had been assistant bookkeeper, and in which Ray Fielding was still employed, was Sidney Leland, Esquire, a near neighbor of the Hon. Sherwood Elliston, and a very wealthy and important personage, indeed.

He had married young, and had two grown-up children—a son and a daughter. The son, Warren Leland, was not far from twenty-eight years of age. The daughter was some years younger.

On leaving his uncle's house that eventful afternoon Eugene walked slowly toward the next corner, lingering for a stage to overtake him.

As he arrived opposite the Leland mansion the door opened and a young man issued forth. He was not only strikingly handsome but very stylish-looking, and had that indescribable air of the elite which, without words, proclaimed to all the world how exceedingly well satisfied he was with himself and his position in life.

An unaccountable feeling of aversion seized Eugene, and he experienced a sensation such as one is said to feel when an enemy walks upon his grave.

"Warren Leland," he muttered, as he passed on. "Wonder what he's up to now? Some deviltry, I'll be bound.

Leland, after a nod of recognition, walked slowly down the street.

Presently a cab approached. He signal d the driver, and, as it drew up to the sidewalk, said:

"Grand Central Depot," and sprang inside

On reaching the depot, he bought a ticket for Bedford Park, and a little later landed at that station.

He made his way to one of the most attractive streets of the village on foot, and presently stopped before a gate upon which a gentleman, a little older than himself, was leaning.

This man, Hobart Brownell, had been his classmate and chum at Yale. He loved Leland, and trusted him.

He had been poor, but now was a successful civil engineer, and likely, in the near future, to be very rich.

His family consisted of his wife, a very beautiful lady some years younger than himself, and her mother.

Leland, since leaving college, had lost sight of Brownell, and had only recently met him again and become acquainted with his wife.

But since he had first seen her, his visits to Bedford Park had been quite frequent, and had resulted in seriously disturbing Amy Brownell's peace of mind.

At first she had only been dazzled by the elegant Warren Leland; but soon, without herself really knowing it, this man had taken possession of her very soul.

He, seeing clearly the situation, was a little disquieted at the course things were taking, and made some slight effort to divert it.

But men, who in fencing wish to spare their adversary, often find habit too strong for them, and lunge home in spite of themselves.

Besides, he began to be really interested in Amy Brownell—in her unsophisticated ways, at once artful and simple, provoking and timid, suggestive and reticent—in short, charming.

And so it was he was now standing at the gate facing her husband.

"My friend," said the latter, "as you are here you can do me a great favor. A telegram calls me suddenly to Chicago. I must go on the instant. The ladies are feeling quite blue; pray stay and dine with them! I can't tell what the deuce ails my wife. She is weeping half the time. My mother-in-law has a headache. Your presence will cheer them. So stay, I beg of you."

Leland refused, hesitated, made objections, and, of course, consented. He went in, and his friend presented him to the ladies, whom the presence of the unexpected guest seemed to cheer a little. Brownell started for the depot, after receiving from his wife an embrace more fervent than usual.

The dinner was really cheerful.

In the atmosphere was that subtle essence of coming danger of which both Leland and Amy felt the exhilarating influence. Their excitation, as yet innocent, employed itself in those lively sallies—those brilliant combats at the barriers—that ever precede the more serious conflict.

About 9 o'clock the headache of Amy's mother became more violent. She declared she could endure it no longer, and must retire to her chamber. Leland wished to withdraw, but the elder lady insisted he should wait until it was time for the next train.

"Let my daughter amuse you with some music until then," she added.

Left alone with her guest, the younger lady seemed embarrassed.

"What shall I play for you?" she asked, in a constrained voice, taking her seat at the piano.

"Oh, anything. Play a waltz," answered Leland, absently.

The waltz finished, an awkward silence ensued. To break it she arose hesitatingly, then, clasping her hands together, exclaimed:

"It seems to me there is a storm coming. Do you not think so?"

She approached the window, opened it, and stepped out on the veranda.

In a second Leland was by her side.

The night was beautifully clear. Before them stretched the somber shadow of the trees, while nearer trembling rays of moonlight slept upon the lawn.

Their trembling hands met and for a moment did not separate.

"Amy!" whispered the young man in a low, broken voice. She shuddered, repulsed the arm he passed round her, and hastily re-entered the room.

"Leave me, I pray you!" she cried, with an impetuous gesture of her hand, as she sank upon the sofa and buried her face in her hands.

Of course Leland did not obey. He seated himself by her.

In a little while Amy Brownell awoke from her trance.

How bitter was that awakening! She measured at a first glance the depth of the awful abyss into which she had suddenly plunged. Her husband, her mother, all whom she loved, whirled round like specters in the mad whirlpool of her brain.

Sensible of the anguish of an irreparable wrong, she rose, passed her hand vacantly across her brow, and muttering: "Oh, God! Oh, God!" peered vainly into the dark for light, hope, refuge. There was none.

Her poor soul cast itself utterly on that of her lover. She turned her swimming eyes on him, and said:

"How you must despise me!"

Leland half kneeling on the carpet near her kissed her hand indifferently and half raised his shoulders in token of denial.

"Is it not so?" she repeated. "Answer me, Warren."

His face wore a strange, cruel smile.

"Do not insist on an answer, I pray you," he said.

"Then I am right? You do despise me?"

Leland turned himself abruptly full toward her, looked straight in her face, and said, in a cold, hard voice:

"I do."

To this frightful speech the poor woman replied by a wild cry that seemed to rend her while her eyes dilated, as if under the influence of strong poison.

Leland strode across the room and through an open doorway, slamming the door behind him, and so disappeared.

Amy, who had listened, motionless and pale as marble, remained in the same lifeless attitude, her eyes fixed, her hands clenched, yearning from the depths of her heart that death would summon her.

Suddenly a singular noise, seeming to come from the next room, struck her ear. It was only a convulsive sob, or violent and smothered laughter.

The wildest and most terrible ideas crowded to the mind of the unhappy woman; the foremost of them, that her husband had secretly returned, that he knew all—that his brain had given way, and the laughter was the gibberish of his madness.

Feeling her own brain begin to reel, she sprang from the sofa, and rushing to the door threw it open.

The next apartment was the dining-room, dimly lighted by a hanging lamp. There she saw Leland, crouching upon the floor, sobbing bitterly, and beating his forehead against a chair which he clutched convulsively.

Her tongue refused its office; she could find no word, but seating herself near him, felt the beating of his heart and wept silently.

He dragged himself nearer, seized the hem of her dress and covered it with kisses; his breast heaved tumultuously, his lips trembled, and he gasped the almost inarticulate words: "Pardon! Oh, pardon me!"

This was all. Then he rose suddenly and rushed from the house.

He hurried to New York.

Bitter weariness, disgust of life and disgust for himself, were no new sensations to this young man; but he had never experienced them in such poignant intensity as at this cursed hour, when flying from the dishonored hearth of the friend of his youth. He knew he had trampled all honor under foot. Like Macbeth, he had not only murdered one asleep, but had murdered sleep itself.

His reflections became insupportable. He thought successively of joining Stanley in Africa, of enlisting to fight Indians, and of getting drunk ere he reached the Hoffman House.

Chance favored the last design, for as he alighted in front of the hotel he found himself face to face with a pale young man who smiled as he extended his hand. Leland recognized an old friend.

"The deuce! You here, Charley? I thought you in Europe."

"I only arrived this morning."

"Quite well, I hope?"

"Yes, and anxious for one of our old times. How are all our fast friends?"

"About as usual, I think. And if you are really anxious for a time, so am I. The truth is, I am a bear, a savage, a ghost! Assist me to return to life. Let us go and sup with some of these sprightly people whose virtue and temperate habits are extraordinary."

"Agreed, with all my heart."

Half an hour later Warren Leland, Charley Raymond, and a half dozen guests of both sexes took possession of an apartment, the closed doors of which we must respect.

Next morning, at gray dawn, the party was about to disperse, and at the moment a rag-picker, with a gray beard, was wandering up and down before the hotel, raking with his hook in the barrels and piles that awaited the street scavenger.

In closing his purse with an unsteady hand, Leland let fall a shining gold piece, which rolled into the mud at the edge of the sidewalk. The rag-picker looked up with a timid smile.

"Ah!" he exclaimed; "what falls into the gutter should belong to the gleaner."

"Pick it up with your teeth, then," answered Leland, smiling, "and it is yours."

The man hesitated, flushed under his sunburnt cheeks, and threw a look of mortal hate upon Leland and the laughing crowd round him.

Then he knelt down, buried his chest in the mire, and sprang up the next moment with the coin clenched tightly between his sharp, white teeth.

The crowd applauded. The rag-picker smiled a dark smile, and turned away.

"Hold on, my friend!" cried Leland, touching his arm; "would you like to earn ten dollars more? If so, strike me in the face; that will give you pleasure and do me good."

The man turned, looked him steadily in the eye, drew back a little, and raised his fist to strike, and then, letting it fall, exclaimed:

"No! Keep your money, and I'll keep my wrath. We shall meet again." And he walked away.

CHAPTER XIII.

AT THE OPERA—THE FATAL KISS.

On reaching the counting-room at the publishing house, Eugene found himself in no mood to work.

His mind was eternally dwelling upon Cora Elliston.

"Who is this woman and what does she want of me? Is it love or vengeance which inspires her with this fiendish coquetry?"

These were the questions he asked himself.

But whatever it was, Eugene was not such a novice as not to perceive clearly the yawning abyss under the broken ice. He resolved sincerely to reclose it again between them forever.

The best way to succeed in this, avowedly, was to cease all intercourse with Clara.

But how could such conduct be explained to his uncle without awaking his suspicion and lowering his wife in his esteem?

So this was impossible.

He armed himself with all his courage, and resigned himself to endure with resolute soul all the trials which the love, real or pretended, of the siren reserved for him.

Some little time before this his name had been proposed in a body of a certain powerful secret organization which had for one of its prominent objects the maintenance among its members of all the fixed points of honor in their strictest form.

Indeed, the members bound themselves to observe, in their reciprocal relation, the rules of the purest honor. These rules were specified in their code.

This night he was summoned to appear for initiation.

He presented himself, was received in due form, and was astonished to find in the head of the order no less a person than his own uncle.

"Now," he thought, with a sigh of relief, "I am safe. We are members of the same order. He is my superior. Henceforth his honor is sacred to me."

The next night he went to the opera. It was an impassioned play, and the house was crowded. Cora Elliston occupied her own box.

After the first act Eugene attempted to go to her, but meeting several acquaintances in the passage, was prevented from doing so.

While he was talking with these, Warren Leland and Charley Raymond passed them, and the thought that they might be going to Cora irritated him.

At last, after the fourth act, he went to visit her in her box, where he found her alone, his uncle having gone out for a few moments.

He was astonished at entering to find the traces of tears on her cheeks. Her eyes were even moist.

She seemed displeased at being surprised in the very act of sentimentality.

"Music always makes me nervous," she said.

"Indeed!" said Eugene. "You who always reproach me with hiding my merits, why do you hide yours? If you are still capable of weeping, so much the better."

"No! I claim no merit for that. Oh, my God! If you only knew! It is quite the contrary."

"What a mystery you are!"

"Are you very curious to fathom this mystery? Only that? Very well, be it so! It is time to put an end to this."

She drew her chair from the front of the box out of public view, and, turning to Eugene, continued:

"You wish to know what I am, what I feel, and what I think; or rather, you wish to know simply if I dream of love? Very well, I only dream of that; and what is yet more, if I have or have not lovers, or if I never shall have a lover, it will not arise from virtue. I believe in nothing, but self-esteem and contempt of others. These little intrigues, these petty passions, which I see in the world, make me indignant to the bottom of my soul. It seems to me that women, who give themselves for so little, must be base creatures. As for myself, to commit a sacrilege I would wish, like the vestals of Rome, a love as great as my crime, and as terrible as death.

"I wept just now during the fourth act. It was not because I listened to the marvelous music; it was because I admire and envy passionately the superb and profound love represented. And it is ever thus—when I read of such things I am in ecstasies.

"How well the people of the sixteenth century knew how to love and how to die! One night of love—then death. That is delightful.

"Now, my friend, you must leave me We are observed. They will believe we love each other, and as we have not that pleasure, it is useless to incur the penalties. Good-night."

"I thank you very much," replied Eugene, taking the hand she extended him coldly, and left the box. He met his uncle in the passage.

"Ah! my dear fellow," said Mr. Elliston, seizing him by the arm. "I must tell you an idea that has been in my mind all the evening."

"What is it, uncle?"

"Well, there are here this evening a number of charming young girls. This set me to thinking of you and your loneliness, and I even said to my wife, that we must marry you in due time to one of these young ladies!"

"Oh, uncle!"

"Well, why not?"

"It is such a serious thing. If one makes a mistake in his choice——"

"Pshaw! it is not so difficult to avoid that. Take a wife like mine, who has a great deal of religion, not much imagination, and no fancies. This is the whole secret. I tell you this in confidence, my dear fellow."

"Well, then, uncle, at the proper time I will think of it."

"Do think of it," said the other, in a serious tone; and went to join his young wife whom he understood so well.

Eugene left the opera in a peculiarly disturbed state. His mind still dwelt upon his fair connection. He felt, however, more sure of himself, since he had bound himself by the strictest obligations of honor.

He abandoned himself from this moment with less scruple to the emotions and to the danger against which he believed himself invincibly protected.

He did not fear oftener to seek the society of his beautiful connection, and even contracted the habit of repairing to her house almost every day.

Whenever he found her alone, their conversation invariably assumed on both sides a tone of irony and raillery, in which both excelled. He did not forget her reckless confidence at the opera, and willingly recalled it to her, asking her if she had yet discovered that hero of love, for whom she was seeking.

At last the night of the ball came. Cora's parties were justly renowned for their magnificence and good taste. She did the honors with the grace of a queen.

This evening she had a very simple toilet, as was becoming in the courteous hostess. She wore a long dress of dark velvet; her arms were bare, without jewels; a necklace of large pearls on her rose-tinted bosom, and a rich coiffure was placed on her fair hair.

Eugene caught her eye as he entered, as though she were watching for him. He had seen her on the previous evening, and they had had a more lively skirmish than usual.

He was struck by her brilliancy—her beauty heightened, without doubt, by the secret ardor of the quarrel, as though illumined by an interior flame, with all the clear, soft splendor of a transparent alabaster vase.

When he advanced to join her and salute her, yielding, against his will, to an involuntary movement of passionate admiration, he said:

"You are truly beautiful this evening Enough so to make one commit a crime."

She looked fixedly in his eye, and replied:

"I should like to see that," and then left him with superb nonchalance.

Mr. Elliston approached, and, tapping the young man on the shoulder, said:

"Eugene, you are to spend the evening with me, you know. Let us retire to the snuggery."

"Willingly, sir," and traversing two or three apartments they reached the retreat.

It was a small, oval room, very lofty, tapestried with thick, red silk, covered with dark flowers. As the doors were removed, two heavy curtains isolated it completely from the neighboring hall. It was here that Mr. Elliston spent the greater part of the time during his parties and balls.

After an hour or so spent in talking, Mr. Elliston threw himself on the divan and Eugene took up a book.

Little by little the elder gentleman fell into a doze, his head resting on his chest. Eugene threw down his book, and, starting up, placed his back against the mantelpiece.

He listened vaguely to the music of the orchestra, and fell into a reverie.

Through these harmonies, the murmurs and warm perfume of the ball, he followed, in thought, all the evolutions of her who was the mistress and queen of it all. He saw her supple and proud step; he heard her grave and musical voice; he felt her breath.

He was not positively in love; but his imagination had roused itself all inflamed, before this beautiful, living, and palpitating statue. She was really for him more than a woman—more than a mortal. The antique fables of amorous goddesses and intoxicated Bacchantes, the superhuman voluptuousness unknown in terrestrial pleasures, were in the reach of his hand, separated from him only by the shadow of this sleeping old man. But this shadow was ever between them—it was honor.

His eyes, as if lost in thought, were fixed straight before him on the curtain which was opposite the chimney.

All at once this curtain was noiselessly raised, and Cora presented herself under the pile of curtains, her brow surmounted with her rich coiffure.

She threw a rapid glance over the room, and after a moment's pause let the curtain fall gently, and advanced directly toward Eugene, who stood stupefied and immovable.

She took both his hands, without speaking, looked at him steadily, throwing a rapid glance on her husband, who still slept, and, standing on tiptoe, offered her lips to the young man.

Bewildered utterly, and forgetting all else, he stooped down and imprinted a kiss on her lips.

At that very moment her husband made a sudden movement and waked up; but the same instant she was standing before him, her hands resting on a little card table, and smiling upon him, she said:

"Good-morning, my dear!"

He murmured a few words of apology, but she laughingly pushed him back on the divan.

"Continue your nap," she said. "I have come in search of Eugene. I want him to conduct a little party through the garden."

Her husband obeyed.

She passed out through the hall. The young man, pale as a specter, followed her.

Passing under the outer curtain, she turned toward him with a wild light burning in her eyes. Then, before she was lost in the crowd, she whispered, in a low, thrilling voice:

"There is the crime?"

CHAPTER XIV.

IN WORDS OF BLOOD.

Eugene did not attempt to rejoin her, and it seemed to him that she also avoided him. A quarter of an hour later he left his uncle's house.

He returned immediately home.

A light was burning in his chamber.

When he saw himself in the glass in passing, his face terrified him. This exciting scene had shaken his nerves.

He could no longer control himself. He saw clearly that Cora, having determined on her course, would go to any length to carry out her purpose.

The fact itself did not surprise him. Woman is more exalted than man in elevation of morals. There is no virtue, no devotion, no heroism in which she does not surpass him; but once impelled to the verge of the abyss, she falls faster than man. This is attributable to two causes; she has more passion, and she has no honor.

For truly honor is a reality and must not be underrated. Honor is a noble, delicate, and salutary habit. It elevates manly qualities. It is the prudery of man. It is sometimes a force, and always a grace. But to think that honor is all-sufficient; that in the face of great interests, great passions, great trials in life, it is a support and infallible defense; that it can enforce the precepts which come from on High—in fact, that it can replace God—this is to commit a terrible mistake.

It is to expose one's self in a fatal moment to the loss of one's self-esteem, and to fall all at once and forever into that dismal ocean of bitterness, where Eugene Cleveland at that instant was struggling in despair, like a drowing man in the darkness of midnight.

He abandoned himself, on this evil night, to a final conflict full of agony; and he was beaten.

The next evening at 6 o'clock he was at his uncle's house. Mr. Elliston was in Washington. He found Cora at home, surrounded by all her regal luxury. She was looking a little pale and fatigued. She received him with her usual coldness and self-possession.

"Good evening," she said. "How are you?"

"Not very well," replied Eugene.

"What is the matter?"

"I fancy that you know."

She opened her large eyes wide with surprise, but did not reply.

"I entreat you, Cora," continued Eugene, smiling, "no more music; the curtain is raised, and the drama has commenced."

"Ah, let us see that!"

"Do you love me, as you once told me you did?" he went on, "or were you simply acting, to try me, last evening? Can you, or will you tell me?"

"I certainly could, but I do not wish to do so."

"I had thought you more frank."

"I have my hours."

"Well, then," said Eugene, "if your hours of frankness have passed, mine have commenced."

"That would be compensation," she replied.

"And I will prove it to you," continued Eugene.

"I shall make a fete of it," said Cora, throwing herself into an easy chair, like one who was making herself comfortable to enjoy an agreeable conversation.

"I love you, Cora, and as you wish to be loved. I love you devotedly and unto death, enough to kill myself, or—you!"

"That is well," said the lady softly.

"But," he continued, in a hoarse and constrained tone, "in loving you, in telling you of it, in trying to make you share my love, I basely violate the obligations of honor which you know of, and others you know not of. I put away from me tender memories, both sweet and sad. It is a crime, as you have said. I do not try to extenuate my offense. I see it, I judge it, and I accept it. I break the last moral tie that is left me. I leave the ranks of men of honor, and I leave also the ranks of humanity. I have nothing human left except my love; nothing sacred but you; but my crime elevates itself by its very magnitude.

Ben Butler's Wealth.

Any list of Boston millionaires would be incomplete without the name of Benjamin F. Butler, who is estimated by close observers to be worth between $5,000,000 and $6,000,000. He is really more identified with Boston than with Lowell, though he has his magnificent residence in the latter place. His law offices in Ashburton place, Boston, are the finest in the city, and there he may be found early and late when not in court or traveling, for, unlike most of the lawyers of Boston, he has a large practice in New York, Washington and Chicago, where he has copartnership offices. His law practice is worth $100,000 a year. He lives well, is very generous, and his famous yacht America is one of the finest. The bulk of his fortune has been make by investing in manufactories.—Boston Letter to Richmond Times.

Two Kinds of Coats.

"You see this coat?" he queried of the proprietor of an establishment on Champlain, street as he stood in the door.

"Vhell."

"I paid you $5 for it, and the sleeves have shrunk six inches."

"I see."

"What are you going to do about it?"

"My frendt, it vhas your own mistake. We haf coats dot der sleeves shrink six inches, and odder coats dot der sleeves grow a foot. You vhas in a hurry and you doan' say which kind you want. You should always take time in buying a coat. In sooch a case as dis you should go by some machinery and have your arms pulled down."—Detroit Free Press.

THE Germans are said to be much interested in M. Paul Giffard's repeating air rifle, well-named "the miracle gun." It uses a steel cartridge about a foot long and as thick as a man's thumb, which is charged with liquefied air and contains three hundred shots. The shots are expelled with great force and accuracy, and without flash or smoke. The weapon is very inexpensive.

VERY dry weather reported in Illinois and west of there.

MONDAY morning about three o'clock, a great cyclone swept North Dakota. The city of Fargo was ruined, and eight lives lost, besides many injured. A large section was affected.

HARRISON signed the bill for the admission of Idaho, on Thursday, July 3. Had he waited till next day, the forty-third star would not have been added to the flag till after the next Fourth of July, that being the rule in such cases.

THE democrats of Pensylvania, last week nominated ex-Governor Pattison for governor, while the republicans put up Delamater. In Maine the democrats have put up a new man, W. R. Thompson. Francis Hill, the one nominated a month ago, died suddenly.

THE republican state convention, that was to be held soon, has been put off till after the democrats hold theirs. The change was made at Harrison's request, as he thought the administration would be more popular a few weeks later. Besides, they would know, who the democrats put up. The "grand old party" is tricky, but not courageous.

THE legislature of Louisiana passed the bill last week that is to renew the life of their great lottery. The lottery folks are to give the state a million and a quarter every year. Thus will the lottery fools in Indiana help to pay the running expenses of the state government in Louisiana. Just like the Indiana farmers helping to make eastern capitalists rich, by paying big tariff duties.

LEMON, the publisher of the National Tribune, the paper he runs as an advertisement of his business as pension agent, has conquered again. The authorities at Washington stopped his sending them out free in the mails, as they were mere advertising matter. He went to Wanamaker and got permission, and 800,000 copies went free, contrary to express law. But Wanamaker bought his place, and he is going to run it to suit him, law or no law.

DUDLEY, the blocks-of-five saint, of the Indiana republicans, last week "influenced" the administration to wipe out a Virginia postoffice, Grange Camp. A farmer's paper, the "Farm and Fireside" was published from there, and because it advocated the "Compound lard bill," the great lard men at Chicago got Dudley to use his influence to have the postoffice discontinued. There is nothing this administration fails to do to injure the farming interests. Four or five wealthy lard makers can thus override the wishes of half a million farmers. No wonder the farmers are rising against the republican party.

What Might Happen.

[Cleveland Plain Dealer.]

In case the tariff tax on tin plates is adhered to as it is in the McKinley bill the British tin-workers who will be thrown out of situations will come to this country and throw an equal number of men out of work here. Our people at large will be taxed $10,000,000 a year more than now for articles of tin, men will come from England to take the bread out of the mouths of Americans and a handful of manufacturers will become enormously rich.

Purdue University.

President James H. Smart, sends word to Supt. Merica, that DeKalb county is now entitled to another free scholarship in the University at Lafayette, and that he hopes our quota will be kept full. These students are selected by the county commissioners. Students who desire to secure the place, should confer with the commissioners and with Mr. Merica. An examination will be held by Mr. Merica, under the direction of the officers of the University on the last Saturday of August, and if any student contemplates entering the examination, Mr. Merica should be notified at an early date.

Notice.

There will be an election of a board of trustees for the Rehoboth Methodist Protestant church, Jackson township, DeKalb Co., Indiana, 7:30 p. m. July 24, 1890.

S. S. STANTON, Pastor.

Normal at Spencerville.

I will commence a normal at Spencerville, July 21, to the patronage of which I solicit all of my friends. School is to continue eight weeks with an intermission for our county institute. Tuition same as last year.

Very truly,
A. C. KOPPE.

At Indian Springs.

The state democratic editorial association held their summer meeting this year at Indian Springs, a health and pleasure resort in the hill country of Martin county. The distance from Auburn by the route necessarily traveled is nearly 300 miles, a pretty long ride in such terrible heat as we had June 26. The route lay over the Wabash to Logansport, then by the Vandalia to Terre Haute, then over the Terre Haute and Evansville line to Elnora, and then east over the Evansville & Richmond to the Springs. The last named is a new road, only freights having gone over it before. It runs through a wild country of rocky wooded hills, and the small valleys were not much cultivated. The hills are full of good building stone, that would be valuable up here, but of little use there as they have too much of it. The springs are about a mile from the railroad and are reached by hacks belonging to the hotel. But with a train load of about 200, such as we had, the most of them had to walk. The hotel is very large, the two main wings are 200 feet, and 170 respectively and three stories. A double veranda runs along both wings. It is on a lovely hill 87 feet above Sulphur Creek, which flows at its foot. This stream is quite small now in the dry season, especially above the springs, but in wet seasons, is given to big overflows. The springs are six in all, five of them being fitted up. Three are most in use, Nos. 2, 3 and 4. All are very strong with sulphur, magnesia, lime, soda and various carbonates and sulphates, traces of salt, and other minerals. They bubble up with great force in stone and cement basins, and flow off into the creek through holes in the stone walls. The water is quite cold and not so very unpleasant till one takes the cup away, when the last taste, settles about everyone at the first. They soon get used to it, and many like it. It is the rule to drink a big goblet twice full before each meal, and several others between times. It is quite a sight to a new comer to see old and young start down the big hill for the springs as soon as they are dressed each morning. The waters are said to cure many diseases, especially those of the kidneys. One must stay several weeks to root out a well settled disease. These springs have a building over them, and a steam pump forces the water from No. 1, up the hill into the hotel, where are extensive bath rooms, so that patients can try the waters externally. One goes up from the spring house over the creek bridge, then up the rocky hill, several paths being made under the trees that cover the entire face of the grounds. Here we see catalpas, chestnuts, trumpet vines, etc., growing wild, while some old proprietor has planted an abundance of evergreens and locust trees. Down one side of the hill is quite a cave in the rocks, and this is used for a cellar, it being very cool in the hottest weather. The hotel is beautiful, and will accommodate about 300 guests, and is well patronized. It was first started about forty years ago, but has made its best strides within a few years. The springs have been used since 1814. Besides the hotel, the small area at the top of the hill has a store and postoffice, a building in which patients can play billiards and tenpins, stables and other needed buildings. Trees come right up to the verandas, and make shade all the day. There is no good farming land in sight, but the hills about the place have plenty of timber, mostly oak. Shoals, the county seat, is about eight miles away, and two miles distant is what is known as Trinity Springs, said to excel even Indian Springs, but they are not yet improved.

Our stay at the springs was as pleasant as could be during the terrible heated term, which was then at its worst. But one can rest, that is certain, for he is cut off from the outside world completely, and we have no doubt, but it is rest and an utter absence of outside cares, to which we must attribute a part of the benefits that are no doubt derived from a stay at the springs. Here were congregated many of the leading democratic editors of the state and their families. They had a deliciously pleasant visit, one that will not soon be forgotten. We were joined at Terre Haute by Ex-Senator Joe McDonald, and Green Smith, and here, too, we were put under the charge of Mr. Holtman, of the Brazil Democrat, to whom the party owe much of the enjoyment of the trip. He and Mr. Louthain, of the Logansport Pharos, were tireless in their efforts to make the trip a success. On Saturday the regular exercises were had. Mr. Louthain, the president of the "Association of Indiana Democratic Editors" made his annual address, and then came the regular speech, made by Mr. Baker, of Cincinnati. Both were able and eloquent. Then came short speeches by others, including Senator McDonald, Green Smith, Ex-Speaker Niblack, Col. Matson, Judge Nelson, of Logansport, and others. On Sunday, in place of regular religious services, Mr. Daily, of the Jeffersonville Democrat gave a lecture on a religious subject, which was followed by singing. On Monday, the association adjourned to meet in Indianapolis, Jan. 8. The meeting was the largest and most enjoyable the society ever had, and those so fortunate as to be present will long remember it.

A Young Man Cured.

Mr. John W. Webster, of Atlanta, Ga., says: I was confined to my bed with rheumatism for a month, part of the time I was unable to move myself, nor could I be moved by any one without severe pain. Hunnicutt's Rheumatic Cure was recommended to my father. He bought me one bottle, and when I had taken about half of it I was sound and well, and am still so, and heartily recommend Hunnicutt's Rheumatic Cure. For sale by druggists at $1 per bottle. A Picnic in S. Dakota.

CHAPELLE, SO. DAKOTA, June 29, '90.

The settlement of a country now is rapid in comparison with what it was years ago, as much more as the locomotive has improved upon the stage coach in the line of travel and transportation. It is not long since, that the first furrow of South Dakota soil was broken and the smoke from its first cabin curled to the astonished clouds. Where are located thrifty towns and cities, and over the prairie where railroads are constructed, only a few years ago the red man roamed at his will in complete posession and hunted the wild beasts for amusement. Every new country has to wrestle with doubts and difficulties. The people who came here were generally of moderate means, and came for the purpose of building a home and acquiring a competence. The first acts of settlement are liable to absorb the little they brought with them. So the first settlers here struggled for a time with hardships and even for the necessaries of life. At this period everything looks brighter. The climate is more moderate and rain plenty. The surface is generally rolling prairie with occasional bluffs. The greatest objection I have found is the hot summers intermixed with an innumerable quantity of mosquitoes, that with their melodious hum, keep time with the frantic gestures of your arms in the vain endeavor to dislodge them from their fleshy throne. We started at 5 in the morning, fully equipped, for a journey of sixty miles to one of the Indian stations. Striking across the prairie, the thick fog not enabling us to see more than one hundred feet ahead, we traveled for six miles southeast. Here we struck a stage road which led direct to the station. We traveled on for ten miles or more, seeing not a sign of civilization, the land being just lately opened for settlement, but not yet surveyed. Now and then a flock of prairie chickens flew up before us, a jack rabbit crossed our path and a wolf sneaked along the side of a bluff. We soon came to the mission, a Catholic school for Indian children, whom we found camped out on the prairie about the school, taking this mode of habitation in preference to the rooms offered them inside the school. A mile beyond the road, we stopped an old buck with his squaw hauling wood, and asked the road. He not being able to talk, motioned us, grunted and drove on. After a long journey we came in sight of the muddy Missouri. Here began high bluffs and deep lake beds, the former so steep it was almost impossible to ascend them. All about us for miles in all directions we could see Indian wigwams, twenty or thirty in a group, composing their villages. Through some of these we had trouble in passing. Dogs of all shapes and kinds ran out and snapped at the horses' heels, Indian boys ran after the wagon trying to play a trick on us. A dog, a horrible monstrosity, ran out among the rest to greet us, its two hind legs in one. Arriving at the Fort we pitched our tents in the government grove and watered our horses in the Missouri. I, not knowing how to put up a teepee (a small tent of the Indian style) asked or rather motioned to one of the many Indians standing by watching us curiously, to help me pitch it, and used as a persuader some tobacco I had with me for such emergencies. He set to work, and took the "toboc" as they call it, with a grunt. This ration station was one of the many the Government has all along the Missouri, at which the Indians receive their rations once a week, at the hands of an agent. Military stations are also located between these, along the reservation to guard against uprisings. In the evening the Fort Tompson Indian school had their commencement. It was very amusing to see the little Indian boys and girls recite and sing. The government seems to be doing its best to educate these red skinned infants. At night lying in my little tepee, I did not sleep much on account of the rain, and very frequently during the night I would see a curious red face peering into the tent in hope of something to steal. I visited some of the wigwams in the morning, where they were busy making pipes and tanning skins. My friend of the night before whom I chanced to run across motioned me to sit down among a circle of bucks who were smoking. The pipe passed around in silence and I in my turn took it and went through the act of smoking and passed to the next the long pipe. After this they had their bread and coffee. They would take a piece of bread as large as a fist, put it all in their mouth at once then lay back and chew like a cow. The Indians now have only a tract of land ten miles in width up and down the river, all the rest being opened for settlement. Surely the march of civilization even in the last decade is wonderful; and the world gazes in admiration at the magnificent strides which the Anglo-Saxon race has made.

One by one, our ties are broken
As we see our love decay,
And the hopes we fondly cherish
Brighten, but to pass away.

'Tis hard to break the tender cord
When Love has bound the heart.
'Tis hard—so hard—to speak the words,
"We must forever part."

A Trust on its Knees.

It takes Indiana democrats to bring a trust to its knees. Indiana seems to be the only state, whose legislature dares to attack a monopoly, and even here, the republican members generally sided in with the trust. We allude to the great school book fight. The old book houses, that have been getting rich off the people, claimed they could not sell books any lower than they were already doing. The democrats in the last legislature, said they could, and passed a law fixing a reasonable price to be paid for any book purchased. The republican allies of the great book monopoly fought hard for the old houses, but failed. The bill became a law, and a part of the school books were contracted for and put into schools at about half the old prices. Now, the old houses have got down on their knees and say that they are ready to reduce prices. They have united to form one big book trust under the name of "The American Book Company," composed of all the leading ones of the old firms. This action of the democratic legislature, has not only saved a million or two for Indiana, but the people all over the Union will be saved millions of dollars. They should all unite, and build a monument to the members of the Indiana legislature of two years ago. And we must not forget that Mr. Kelley worked for that law.

We add as a clincher, what the Indiana School Journal says:

"The American Book Company has announced a general reduction in the prices of books from 20 to 33⅓ per cent. It proposes to make the wholesale price the retail price and print the price on the book, and thus protect the purchaser against the local dealer. It agrees to sell direct to school board 20 per cent. under present wholesale prices. This is the first time in the history of the world that a "trust" has made its bow to the public by a sweeping reduction of prices. Rather a strange proceeding for a so called "syndicate" is it not?"

ALBION.

(Finished next week.)

JUDGE McCLELLAN, should have all praise, for being the one man with the courage to stand up and fight for a tax on the incomes of the rich. Our farmers will see that there is one man who will demand justice for them. This law should be enacted. It never should have been repealed. The wealth of the country should pay its share of the taxes. Let the farmers talk about this, and work for it.

THE NATIONAL DEMOCRAT, published at Washington, D. C. has Judge McClellan's speech in full in its issue of June 28. It gives the speech a strong endorsement, and in an editorial says:

"We publish in full this week the speech on the tariff, delivered in the House of Representatives by Hon. C. A. O. McClellan, of Indiana. It is a long speech, but very carefully prepared, and it presents the facts in regard to the McKinley bill in a way to reach the minds of the people most effectively. Such a speech as this is a powerful campaign document, and our readers will thank us for publishing it in full."

Kendallville News: Judge McClellan, our popular congressman, is rapidly coming to the front as an able and fearless advocate of democratic principles upon the floor of the House. His able address upon the tariff, in opposition to the unreasonable and exorbitant demands of the McKinley bill, delivered on the 22nd day of May, is having a wide circulation and is meeting with approbation among democrats on all hands. It has even been translated into the German language, as we learn from a German citizen of this town, who informs us that he read the address in his German paper, the New York Staats Zeitung.

Columbia City Post: It may astonish some of the critics of the 12th congressional district to know that Congressman McClellan's speech on the McKinley tariff bill was published in full in the last issue of the National democrat, indicating that our congressman's views are considered sound and logical upon the most important question of our time. In speaking of the matter editorially the Democrat says: "We publish in full this week the speech on the tariff, delivered in the house of representatives by Hon. C. A. O. McClellan, of Indiana. It is a long speech, but very carefully prepared, and it presents the facts in regard to the McKinley bill in a way to reach the minds of the people most effectively. Such a speech as this is a powerful campaign document, and our readers will thank us for publishing it in full." It is highly gratifying to the constituency of Congressman McClellan to learn of the high favor in which his great tariff speech is held by leading democrats at Washington. It is seldom that a first term congressman ever makes any impression on the public as he is always kept in the back-ground.

Save Your Hair

BY a timely use of Ayer's Hair Vigor. This preparation has no equal as a dressing. It keeps the scalp clean, cool, and healthy, and preserves the color, fullness, and beauty of the hair.

"I was rapidly becoming bald and gray; but after using two or three bottles of Ayer's Hair Vigor my hair grew thick and glossy and the original color was restored."—Melvin Aldrich, Canaan Centre, N. H.

"Some time ago I lost all my hair in consequence of measles. After due waiting, no new growth appeared. I then used Ayer's Hair Vigor and my hair grew Thick and Strong.

It has apparently come to stay. The Vigor is evidently a great aid to nature." —J. B. Williams, Floresville, Texas.

"I have used Ayer's Hair Vigor for the past four or five years and find it a most satisfactory dressing for the hair. It is all I could desire, being harmless, causing the hair to retain its natural color, and requiring but a small quantity to render the hair easy to arrange."—Mrs. M. A. Bailey, 9 Charles street, Haverhill, Mass.

"I have been using Ayer's Hair Vigor for several years, and believe that it has caused my hair to retain its natural color."—Mrs. H. J. King, Dealer in Dry Goods, &c., Bishopville, Md.

Why Does the Earth Quake?

The earthquake theory which seems most probable, and the one which has the most adherents, is the one which tells us that the "quake" is caused by an effort of internal heat to make its escape through a weak part of the surrounding earth crust. How thick the earth's crust is would be a hard matter to find out for a certainty. The German government is now at work upon a shaft (if it has not been recently abandoned), near Schladebach, with the object especially of obtaining trustworthy data concerning the rate of increase in the earth's temperature as it nears the interior. The last statement the writer read concerning this shaft said that it was at that time 1,392 meters in depth. The temperature was about 48 degs. centigrade, equal to about 120 Fahrenheit. If it increases uniformly as the depth increases, as it has heretofore, the boiling point of water will be reached at about 3,000 meters (providing the shaft could be sunk to that depth), which is equal to about two miles.

At this rate of increase the point at which platinum melts would be found to be at a depth of forty-five miles.

According to these figures the earth's crust cannot be more than one-ninetieth of its radius.

Professor Newcomb, connected with the naval observatory at Washington, said at the time of the August earthquake in 1884: "The only common sense explanation of an earthquake, to my mind, is that down in the bowels of the earth, say from 20 to 100 miles beneath the surface, there is fluid matter, boiling at a white heat, which as it gradually becomes cooled, contracts, leaving a space between it and the solid parts, and the heavy weight of the earth above the vacant place causes the earth to sink, then you have your earthquake."—St. Louis Republic.

A Monkey's Weakness for Sweets.

One of the attractions at a church fair recently held in this city was a lottery conducted on a small scale. Ten persons contributed ten cents each. Each subscriber drew a slip of paper from a hat. The slips were numbered from one to ten. The papers were then placed in another hat, and a monkey was allowed to pick one out. The person who at the first drawing had obtained the slip selected by the monkey was entitled to ninety cents, ten cents going to the fair fund. After each drawing by the monkey the slips were destroyed. One night a young man won over $20 at this little game of chance. Nearly every time the monkey drew the slip this young man was selected at the first drawing. Those present marveled at the young man's luck, and but for an accident they never would have ascribed his winnings to any cause but good fortune. Every slip of paper the young man drew he rubbed with a piece of lump sugar. Of course the monkey's weakness for sweets led him to pick out the sugared slip. The young man dropped the piece of sugar while he was rubbing it on a slip, and then his smart little game was discovered.—New York Press.

The Shah as Sovereign.

As a ruler the shah possesses many excellent qualities. Firm, fairly just and diligent, he is in his own person the sole arbiter of Persia's fortunes. All policy emanates from him. He supervises every department with a curiosity that requires to be allayed by periodical gratuities, and his attention to affairs of state is constant and unremitting. There is a consensus of opinion in Persia that he is the ablest man in the country and the best ruler that it could produce. Nor will any one deny him the possession of patriotism and of a genuine interest in the welfare of the nation. He is, however, placed in a most unfortunate situation by the rivalry of Great Britain and Russia, while he is further impeded by the intriguers that swarm about the court and person of the monarch, by a tendency natural to humanity and particularly to a man who has passed the middle of life, to let things abide in his time, and by a sense of powerlessness against the petrified ideas and prejudices of an oriental people.—Chicago Herald.

Hypnotism.

Hypnotism literally means a condition resembling sleep, artificially produced; that is, not by drugs, but by the magnetic (?) effect of one mind upon another. That condition of mind, however, to which you doubtless refer as "hypnotism" is a different condition entirely. It is not connected with sleep at all, but could be defined to be that condition of mind in one person (called the subject) set up by the attractive or impulsive power of one or more minds, and in which the subject, by the power of "suggestion," is made to obey the behests or commands of his operator or operators. This power can be exerted at a distance, and the operator need not be known to the subject. The operator is not legally responsible for the acts of his subject, not being personally concerned.—Answers in Herald of Health.

Jotham Woolsey, a former well known citizen of this county, writes from his present home at Straubville, Dakota, that his people are in good health. He adds: "The past winter and spring were mild, pleasant and very dry. No rain to amount to anything for nine months prior to the 1st of June, since which time more rain has fallen than for two years before. During the 30 days of June this portion of the country has been transformed from an almost barren waste to a magnificent verdure. The vast grainfields, although somewhat late, present a most beautiful appearance. The fears and apprehensions of the people have been changed to hope and confidence."

Will Thomas met with no small accident on the Fourth at Auburn. Will is a baker at Garrett and formerly worked for Mr. Sherm Hollister in Auburn, and as he was over here that day he was helping Mr. H. to lower his awning in front of the hotel when his finger ring caught in the ropes, pulling and lacerating the flesh very badly. Will, the baker, will not roll doughnuts with comfort and ease for a few days.

Among those who have added their names to the Courier's list of honor we see that of E. F. Sopher. This gentleman is now representing a paint for shingle or tin roofs. It is said to be one of the best compositions made for that purpose, and is fully warranted. Anyone wishing to prove the merits of Black Rubber Excelsior Slate Paint can rest assured that it will be applied by Mr. Sopher himself, thus avoiding the usual unnecessary carelessness of uninterested persons, or agents.

Dr. Allen, of South Main street seems to exhibit a great deal of pride in keeping the beautiful lawn which surrounds his spacious residence closely cut, and the nice trees, delicate flowers and twining vines give the place a very pleasant appearance. The clematis clambering up the threaded lattice work with various colored blossoms. The honeysuckles are freighted with a sweet fragrance and make the passer-by feel and know how manifold are the works of nature, and with what force a natural effect can be brought to bear upon the minds of all beholders when in the hands of a skilled workman.

Charles Mathews an active young democrat from Angola, was here Friday. He says the farmers up there are getting tired of republican rule, and will unite with the Farmers' Alliance, believing that will finally assist them to lower the tariff burdens, that this administration is adding to what they already bear. He also admits that republican misrule, incompetency, or worse has made their county burdens too great for even the republican rank and file, to bear longer. It is as we have always said that a set of democratic officers will always be found cheaper, and more economical than republican officers. This fact should be remembered by the people of DeKalb county when they go to the polls this fall.

It is laughable to see republicans going back on the officers they paid out so much money to elect in 1886. Yet they would do the same thing over, if they could. The safe way, is to elect democrats, which we believe the people have concluded to do. How much better it would have been to have elected the excellent men on the democratic ticket in 1886.

The St. Joe News is a little slow. It has just found out that "Auburn wants another railroad. Auburn has been talking this matter up for about five months. Two or three months ago, we raised and paid in, money to have a survey. Now, the survey is done and paid for. Auburn don't wait for the whirligig to come around. She just takes hold and makes it come.

Samuel Pepple came home last week after an absence of several years in Mexico. He is the same jolly chap, as of yore, and for a wonder, has remained single in spite of the fact that Yankee boys are great favorites with the dark eyed beauties down in Mexico. But we suppose the cares of running an engine and looking after his mining interests, have kept him too busy for anything else.

A look through the Auburn Foundry & Machine Works will convince anyone that it is a great institution. It is quite a sight to see all the machinery in motion, and turning out all kinds of brass and iron work. The men are kept very busy as they have a large number of orders to fill, besides many thresher engines to repair. This is one of the most prospering institutions in this part of the country.

Steuben Republican: C. C. Boyer, of DeKalb county, had one of his new farm gates on exhibition here last Saturday, and an investigation of it, we believe substantiates all that is claimed for it. It is very simple of construction, and, having the right, any farmer can make it. It will open either way, does not pull on the post, can be opened and shut by a child of five, and can be raised any height to pass over obstacles, or to allow small stock to pass under it. Where Mr. Boyer lives and the gate was first introduced, hundreds of them are being sold.

On Friday evening while driving down Main street mid the whirl and bustle of a 4th of July celebration, whose principal ceremonies had been seen, a young horse became frightened by a big horse fly alighting on its rump, causing the animal to jump and kick at a fearful rate, breaking the shafts and otherwise demoralizing the buggy. The young man displayed excellent courage in handling the beast, but the lady who was with him showed genuine pluck, inasmuch as she did not take on the color of a bleached muslin sheet until the thing was all over. It is hoped that the pleasures of that young couple may never be so dangerously interrupted again. This evidently is a 4th of July they will not soon forget.

Somewhere there has been rain, as it is cooler since Tuesday.

J. L. Davis' horse got out of the barn Monday evening and wandered to the north end, and in some way got its foot cut just above the hoof. But for the timely finding of it, and the help of Dr. Adams, it would have bled to death.

Lyman Lockwood put into the barn eighteen acres of heavy clover Tuesday. He had a hay loader that took it from the wirrow and put it on the wagon, and at the barn, they had two hay forks, that made short work of putting away a load. It beat the old style all hollow.

The L. L. C. last Saturday elected officers: Mrs. Zimmerman, president; Mrs. Emanuel, vice-president; Mrs. Schaab, secretary; Mrs. Houser, treasurer, and Mrs. Ralston, critic. A new member was admitted, Mrs. Cal. Husselman. The club will take a vacation till the first week in September.

Misses Ida and Rose Blair of Waterloo were here the Fourth. Their little nephew, Harold, son of F. P. Blair of Laporte came over with them. Child-like he got stuck on Lafe Miller's little Shetland pony, and after looking it over critically, concluded to buy it. He said he had $7 and was greatly surprised to find Mr. Miller would not sell "so small a horse" for that much money. He took the matter under advisement, however, and said he would see Mr. Miller again before long.

There was a serious runaway Tuesday evening. A horse and cart belonging to J. A. McClure, hitched opposite Trout's livery barn, became frightened and broke loose. A man trying to hold it, was considerably bruised up, and the horse got away. It then ran down South Main street, and when near Dr. Allen's came near dashing into Herb Weaver's buggy in which were several ladies. But just here Mr. Moody caught the horse and turned it enough to save the party, though he was somewhat hurt. The horse seemed frantic and dashed on down the street, where a young man named Hartman caught it. The cart was utterly ruined and some of Dr. Allen's fine maples were injured, but it might have been worse.

Another Death From Drink.

Churubusco, Ind., July 4, 1890.

Ed. Courier:—A young man named John Julian, about 25 years of age, and noted for his appetite for "fire-water," came to town on the evening of the 3rd, for the purpose of celebrating the glorious Fourth in his usual manner, got drunk, of course, and remained so all night. About 4 o'clock this morning he started west on the railroad, and had gone about a mile, when it is supposed, got "tired" and sat down to rest on the end of a tie with his back to the west, and while in this position, an east-bound freight came along and struck him on the back of the head on the superior occipital protuberance, smashing that region of the skull and knocking him off the track. It seems that he was unnoticed by the trainmen of the freight, who came on and switched off here for the passenger train which came along in a few minutes, and noticing him they stopped, picked him up and brought him to the depot here. The coroner was called and found upon his person about $8 in money, one full bottle of whisky, and a broken bottle, a good silver watch, and in his coat pockets two stones, one about the size of a hen egg and the other the size of a goose egg, the object of which can only be conjectured. This man was married about a year ago, they agreeing so well that she left him in about six months. No censure to the railroad company.

James W. Squires.

Stand by Home Industry.

An able man, county superintendent of Sullivan county, is a candidate for State Superintendent of Public Instruction on the democratic ticket. We have some acquaintance with him and know him to be honest and competent. But he sent us a letter on a finely lithographed letter head made by Burford, at Indianapolis. That gives him away. Why did he not get his work done at the office of his home printer? The Sullivan Democrat office can do work fit for any county officer. Mr. Merica, in this county, gets his work all done at home. We don't care to help into office any man who will then turn around and get his work done abroad. We can, and so can several other offices in this county, do all ordinary work, good enough for any county officer. If our help is worth so much before election why forget us afterwards? We shall keep watch of such men and hope every other printing office will do the same. Just now we are in a situation to bring them to a sense of duty. If any candidate has made up his mind that as soon as he gets his office, he will fill it up with stationery made abroad, now is a good time for him to come around and say so.

From West Virginia.

Clarksburg, W. Va., July 4, 1890.

Ed. Courier:—As I promised to let you hear from us, I will do so briefly. We left Auburn Junction all right on Tuesday, July 2. When we arrived at Newark, we found a very heavy rainfall, the water raising three feet in 40 minutes, causing a washout in railroad, delaying our train about eight hours. Upon arriving at this place, we found it to be a live city, with a population of 5,000, and have electric lights, water works and fire department. Coal sells at $4 per 100 bushels delivered in coal shed. Wheat 90 cents, corn, 45, and oats 30. Our horses arrived two days before we did. We had our household goods transfered to the narrow guage railroad, and expect to leave here for Buckhannon at 12:15 to day. This is surely a good country. There is no such thing as mosquitoes, and they have no use for screen doors. It is so cool here that we have to keep our coats on.

Respectfully yours.
Ade Mader.

New Paper in Auburn.

On the 15th of July, Geo. T. Weeks, formerly associate editor of the Bristol Banner, but now a resident of Auburn, will commence the publication, at this place, of a monthly, six column, eight page paper, devoted to the Grand Army, Sons of Veterans and Woman's Relief Corps. It will also be run largely as a story paper, so that it will not be alone of interest to members of these patriotic orders. It will be a paper calculated for general, as well as local circulation, and should receive the support and encouragement of the people of Auburn, particularly, where every new enterprise, or anything tending to the growth or advancement of our little city, is gladly welcomed. The subscription price will be 75 cents a year.

Evergreen Cemetery.

All those interested in having the new iron fence painted will please call before July 19th and deposit one dollar with the treasurer who will see that the fence is properly painted.

THE Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Tokio, Japan, now meets once a month and has taken up twelve departments of work. Miss Ackerman's recent visit greatly strengthened the organization. During her stay a new temperance society of young men was organized, 400 of whom signed the pledge through her influence.

A LARGE Belgian poodle dog astonished promenaders in the corridors of the Fifth Avenue Hotel, New York, the other night by strolling leisurely up and down and puffing with apparently intense satisfaction at a small pipe, which he held tightly in his mouth. Max Somerville, a wealthy Philadelphian, bought the animal in Paris several years ago.

THERE is standing on the banks of the Augusta, Ga., canal, in a somewhat dilapidated condition, the house where George Washington was entertained on the occasion of his visit to Augusta over one hundred years ago. There is said to be a negro woman in Jefferson County who was in Augusta when the visit was made, but was too young to remember anything about it.

A STORY comes from China that the people of Soochow are greatly alarmed by atmospheric phenomena. They appear first over rivers and creeks in the form of a black cloud which bears some resemblance to a boat, which gradually becomes a ball of fire, and after a time bursts into a myriad of starry flashes of light that float about in the air for a while to the great terror of the beholders.

IT is now believed that the mammoth abounded to as great an extent upon the east as on the west coast of Behring Sea. In fact mammoths have already been discovered in Alaska, and news comes that a syndicate has been formed for the purpose of procuring their ivory tusks, which are now of great value, and which will undoubtedly continue to be more valuable as the elephant is being exterminated.

BRUNO GANSEL of Chicago, has the sleigh in which Napoleon made his flight from Russia in 1812. It is an ancient and worm-eaten affair, little care having been bestowed on it of late years, and attached to it are three little silver bells. Napoleon rode in this vehicle to a little Silesian town, where he exchanged it with Gansel's father for a light traveling coach. Gansel has documents attesting the genuiness of the sleigh.

MISS STEWART, a Scotch girl, of Cincinnati, was a few years ago superintendent of the restaurant department of the Woman's Exchange at a small salary. She and two sisters are now running a restaurant of their own in the Chamber of Commerce Building, where they earn $10,000 a year. They furnish but one meal a day, from 12 to 3 p. m. It is a business man's lunch, and their success shows the weakness of the average man for "home cooking," which is their specialty.

A GEORGIA colonel named Scott has attracted considerable attention by his determination, that the wealth which he devotes to public and philanthropic purposes shall be applied during his lifetime. Having recently come into possession of $250,000, he has bestowed liberal gifts upon educational institutions, and declares that he intends to leave his heirs only a merest competence. Colonel Scott deserves the praises that are given him. His head is level and his heart is in the right place.

SOME very interesting facts of crime are revealed by a Scotch sheriff. He knew of one woman who, between the years 1844 and 1865, was committed 167 times for being drunk, and when drunk her invariable practice was to smash windows. A man when drunk stole nothing but Bibles, and was transported for his seventh theft. Another man stole nothing but spades; a woman stole nothing but shoes; another nothing but shawls; but the queerest thief was one who stole tubs, and was sent to penal servitude for his seventh tub.

VICTOR BOULET, a poor workman at Keenville, N. Y., has made a lucky find. The path from his house to the gate had worn so that some stones in it became troublesome. One morning he took a crowbar and began prying them up. He found that they were cobblestones that had been driven into the ground forming a circle. Beneath them was a large flat stone. His curiosity was excited, and he pried up the latter, when he discovered beneath it a brass kettle full of money, but whether gold or silver is not stated.

A QUAINT love feast was celebrated recently by the Pennsylvania Dunkards. After the night services of three hours' duration loaves of bread and tin dishes, containing soup made of rice and beef, were placed on the table and all the members partook of the Lord's supper. Every set of four brethren and every set of four sisters ate soup out of one dish, two sitting on each side of the narrow table. The salutation of the holy kiss followed the supper, when each imprinted a kiss on the lips of the member next to him. Communion service, the breaking of unleavened bread and the drinking of unfermented grape wine were also a part of the services.

A FOOLISH young fellow at Albany, while riding in an electric car a day or two ago, took a costly gold watch out of his pocket, and just for the purpose of showing that he "dare" do it laid the watch on the floor of the car just over the motor. Of course it became heavily charged with the electric fluid and stopped. After it had laid there perhaps ten seconds he picked it up and it began running again. Some one in the car remarked that he might do it once, but it would not be a safe experiment to try it very often. He scouted the idea of danger, and to show that no harm could come to a watch under the circumstances he placed it upon the floor again, letting it remain a minute. The works became thoroughly magnetized, would not go, and a watchmaker tells him they are ruined.

A POLL-PARROT under the influence of "a jag" was witnessed by several persons in the Mercy Hospital, Pittsburg. It escaped from its cage, and found a cup of alcohol in the drug-room. Of this it drank until it staggered. About this time one of the house physicians entered, and the depraved bird swore at him with frightful vehemence, and bit him in the hand. Then, half flying, half leaping, Polly commenced to make for the entrance hall with unsteady gait, swearing in a manner that caused the waiting visitors to stop their ears. Just then one of the sisters arrived, and found this frightful example to all birds blaspheming in the center of the hall, while the visitors were retreating in all directions. Aid was promptly furnished. Polly was removed into a room where she could sober up.

Transplanted Greatness.

It was Daniel Webster who, when called upon at a Philadelphia banquet for a toast to Pennsylvania's illustrious sons, responded: "I drink to the health of the great men of Pennsylvania. Here's to Benjamin Franklin of Massachusetts and Albert Gallatin of Switzerland." The jest was not relished by Pennsylvania, who could have retorted in like manner upon Massachusetts, for the great orator and statesman of whom she was so proud was a son of New Hampshire.

But nothing more illustrates the cosmopolitan character of our civilization, and the kindness of each State to those who are her sons by adoption as those who are by birth, than the fact that so many of our illustrious men are not born in the community with which they are identified. The death of Senator Beck affords a striking instance. Since childhood he has been in thought, feeling and action a thorough Kentuckian, yet he first saw the light in cold and foggy Scotland. But no one could ever think of him as other than a Kentuckian, and he was never anything else. Thus Henry Clay was born and reared in Virginia, and George D. Prentice was a Connecticut Yankee, but there have been no better Kentuckians than these.

And while Kentucky has drawn some of her great men from other States she has given many in return. Illinois is justly proud of Abraham Lincoln, but he was born on Kentucky soil. Jefferson Davis was a Kentuckian by birth, but in history is a Mississippian.

Examples multiply with respect to other States. General Grant was credited to Illinois, but he was born in Ohio. Andrew Jackson, the great Tennessean, was long the disputed product of North Carolina and South Carolina, though we believe the latter State has established the better claim. The brilliant Sargent S. Prentiss of Mississippi, the perfect type of a Southern orator, flowery and impulsive, was cradled among the snows of Maine. And thus the list could be continued indefinitely.—Courier-Journal.

HOW WE ARE TAXED.

[From the Chicago Herald.]

That Mr. Blaine's "reciprocity" idea upsets all of his previous claims respecting the tariff, the Boston Post proves by quoting various utterances of the gentleman himself. In the famous Paris interview of Dec. 7, 1887, in reply to the tariff reform message of President Cleveland, Mr. Blaine said:

"I should seriously object to the repeal of the duty on wool. To repeal that would work great injustice to many interests and would seriously discourage what we should earnestly encourage, namely, the sheep culture among farmers throughout the Union. To break down wool growing and be dependent on foreign countries for the blankets under which we sleep and the coat that covers our backs is not a wise policy for the National Government to enforce."

Such was Mr. Blaine's view of the question of free wool two years and a half ago, and it was in accordance with this view that the Republican platform was drawn, and that the Republican tariff bill has been prepared. At that time, also, Mr. Blaine predicted the effect of free wool upon our export trade. He was asked if this trade would not increase if Mr. Cleveland's recommendations were adopted, and he replied:

"Possibly in some few articles of peculiar construction it might, but it would increase our import trade tenfold as much in the great staple fabrics in woolen and cotton goods, in iron, in steel, in all the thousand and one shapes in which they are wrought. * * * The moment you begin to import freely from Europe you drive our own workmen from mechanical and manufacturing pursuits. In the same proportion they become tillers of the soil, increasing steadily the agricultural product and decreasing steadily the large home demand which is constantly enlarging as home manufactures enlarge. That, of course, works great injury to the farmer, glutting the market with his products and tending constantly to lower prices. * * * The enlarging of the home market for the American farmer being checked, he would search in vain for one of the same value."

The great change in Mr. Blaine's expressed belief is shown by the picture which he draws of the effects of free trade upon the export business of the United States and upon the "tillers of the soil" as he sees it under the new light of to-day. In his letter, which Mr. Harrison has sent to Congress, Mr. Blaine writes:

"The increased exports would be drawn alike from our farms, our factories, and our forests. None of the Latin-American countries produce building timber; the most of them are dependent upon foreign markets for their breadstuffs and provisions, and in few is there any opportunity or inclination for mechanical industry. The effect of such reciprocity would be felt in every portion of the land."

This is all true; but its truth was equally evident at the time when Mr. Blaine denied it and maintained the contrary. It is a sign of progress that he now acknowledges the falsity and the humbug of the "home market" idea, which, more than any other one man, he aided in fastening upon his party.

A correspondent of the New York Evening Post was enabled the other day to look over the spring samples of a well-known Scotch mill. To his astonishment the prices asked were about what an American manufacturer would ask for the same goods—that is, for a 6-4 16-ounce per yard cassimere, made from a fair Michigan or Ohio wool, 7s. 6d. ($1.75.) Added to this price, duty, freight, etc., would bring the cost of the Scotch goods up to over $3, and this was the cheapest this mill was selling. It may be asked if it is possible that American people will pay so much more for foreign goods than for domestics, and, if so, what is the reason? It is not far to seek. The foreign goods have a style, originality of design, coloring and softness of texture for which we look in vain to the domestic article. Why this should be it is not the writer's province to discuss here, but it is so, undoubtedly. It is, therefore, not a question of price so far as high-class goods go that enables so many foreign manufacturers to ship their product here, but of manufacture. If, therefore, our mills, with the best machinery and the much-lauded intellectual superiority of the American workman, cannot, after being fostered with care and subsidised by a high tariff for many years, produce goods for which Americans themselves will pay as much as for the foreign, something is radically wrong?

Somebody has proposed in the British Parliament to enact a retaliatory tariff against the products of the United States, but the British people are too sensible to adopt any such policy. They want the markets of the whole world to buy in as well as to sell in. Of our more than $700,000,000 exports England buys more than half, and she would buy even more, thus extending the markets for the products of American labor, but for our medieval tariff laws. Already Great Britain has cut the price of American wheat 50 per cent. by developing a grain belt in India—something she did only as a retaliation against our tariff.

Four car-loads of tin-plate came into Buffalo from Canada Friday, paying a duty of 1 cent a pound, says the Courier. This, perhaps, indicates that somebody is stocking up to make a handsome turn on "McKinley prices," when tin-plate will be taxed 2.2 cents a pound. The speculators may or may not have noticed that by the bill as McKinley reported it the increase of the tin-plate tax does not take effect till July 1, 1891.

In figuring on tariff legislation it is, however, best to be prepared for anything. The clause deferring the operation of the tin-plate tax may be amended out of the bill while on its passage, and too late to enable speculators to take advantage of the rise.

Not only in tin-plate, but in Canada barley, in wool and woolen goods, and in many other things the McKinley job affords opportunities to moneyed men to import at the present tariff, and by and by sell at the increased prices caused by the McKinley tariff. From whatever point of view you look at Republican tariff legislation you find schemes to further enrich the rich at the expense of the poor.

The following stray scrap is a sample of the tariff arguments that have been industriously circulated during the preparation of the tariff bill now before Congress, says the Western Stockman and Cultivator:

"The combined product of iron and steel in this country is not equal to that of hides of animals and their products. The largest consumers of leather are the farmers who furnish the hides (the raw material) for leather. For some years the foreigner has controlled the price of hides in this country. This takes money out of the pockets of every farmer and stock-raiser. The new tariff bill proposes a duty of 15 per cent. on hides. This will be of material benefit to every farmer in the nation. If you are interested in getting more money for every animal you raise, write a letter to your member of Congress and United States Senators at Washington, favoring the proposed duty."

We cannot give space to a full analysis of the false logic of this statement. It is enough to say that whatever increases the cost of hides to the tanner increases the cost of leather to the shoemaker and the cost of shoes to the wearer. If "the largest consumers of leather are the farmers," the farmers will therefore be fleeced more than any other class by a tax on hides. "This takes the money out of the pockets of every farmer," whether he is willing or not, as we must all wear shoes and use harness; and, what is worse, it takes the money out of the pockets of the poorest people in the land as well as out of the pockets of the rich.

The Boston Commercial Bulletin, a protectionist paper and a trade journal of marked ability and high standing, points out that under one paragraph there would be imposed on nearly all the carpet wool brought into the United States "a duty ranging from 8 to 24 cents a pound." Here are the Commercial Bulletin's comments:

"This duty might encourage the raising of carpet wools in this country, but it would put carpets out of the reach of the ordinary citizen. Is it not a disgrace to the United States that a man of Senator Sherman's reputation will stoop to such silly and transparent political tricks? The outrageous wool schedule of the McKinley bill has offered a tangible excuse for an increase in the duty on woolens. That on women's cloths reaches, in some instances, 150 per cent. The wool legislation is admittedly a political dodge contrived by a set of Ohio convention-workers who do not know carpet wool when they see it. The woolen schedule has been necessarily marked up in geometrical ratio till the charge of special legislation in behalf of one or two favored manufacturers gives ample ground for effective stump speaking, if not for calm debate. Yet, in the old days, Honest John Sherman was hailed as a statesman, and many people regretted that he was not President!"

But it is the avowed purpose of the Wool Growers' Association by tariff legislation to raise the price of the very small quantity of coarse and cheap carpet wool grown in this country to the price of the finest clothing wool! There is no secret about this.

In 1867 the corn crop of the United States covered 32,520,249 acres and amounted to 768,320,000 bushels, of a total value of $610,948,390. Corn averaged 80 cents per bushel in that year and the average value of the crop per acre was $18.27. In 1887 the acreage had increased to 75,672,763 acres and the crop to 1,587,790,000 bushels, while the aggregate value had only risen to $677,561,580. During this period the value of corn had shrunk from 80 cents to 38.1 cents per bushel, and the acre that earned $18.87 in 1867 yielded only 8.82 in 1887. Likewise with wheat. In 1867 the area devoted to wheat was 18,321,561 acres, and the crop amounted to 212,441,400 bushels, valued at 421,786,460. The acreage in 1887 was 37,641,783 acres, and, although the crop had more than doubled, to 456,329,000 bushels, its value was only $385,248,030, or $36,548,430 less than the crop of not half the size in 1867. The average value of the wheat crop fell from $1.98 per bushel in 1867 to 87.3 cents in 1887, and the value of the crop per acre decreased in the same period from $23.05 to $10.30. Rye, oats, barley and buckwheat make a similar, though even worse, showing, but corn and wheat as the largest crops, are sufficient to show that the American farmer has been going down-hill, in spite of his tariff protection, at a more rapid pace than the most rabid protectionist would care to predict as the result of a partial removal of onerous tariff taxes.

Quay on Quay.

Pennsylvania is wedded to its idol. It arises solemnly in Republican convention to declare its attachment to St. Quay. Its initial profession relates to him, "For the Chairman of our National Committee, Mr. Quay, we feel a lasting sense of gratitude for his matchless service in the last Presidential campaign, and commend his bearing under the slanders which his successful leadership of our party has purchased for him." Quay, then, is the leader of "our party." It is not Harrison or Blaine, Don Cameron or Morton, but just Matt Quay, the renowned discoverer of Wanamaker as a statesman, the patron of Dudley of the blocks of five. Pennsylvania Republicans are all attachment to Quay. "As a citizen, as member of the General Assembly, as Secretary of the Commonwealth under two successive administrations, as State Treasurer by the overwhelming suffrages of his fellow-citizens, as Senator of the United States, he has won and retains our respect and confidence."

The time has not been of late years when anybody entertained any other idea than that the Republican machinery of Pennsylania was in the hands of Quay. Who is it swings this censer? Quay himself. Who is it indorses Quay and commends his silence under serious charges? Quay, no other than Quay. With the assistance of Harrison in the distribution of spoils, he holds the Republican party of Pennsylvania in the hollow of his hand.

What are the charges he commends himself for not answering—for not noticing in any way? They are serious and well authenticated. When Secretary of the Commonwealth he gained an ascendency over the State Treasurer which enabled him to command the State funds for his own use, and he employed large sums in personal and Stock Exchange gambling. These resulting disastrously a deficit was created, which, to save the party from a blighting scandal, Don Cameron privately made good. On the heels of this proceeding Quay had himself elected Treasurer. The State moneys used by Quay under these circumstances yielded a profit and he was enabled this time to make his diversions good without an appeal to Cameron. The average American looks upon such conduct as forfeiting public confidence, but Quay refusing to answer procures his indorsement by henchmen assembled in the name of the Republican party at Harrisburg.

Quay has spoken for Quay, but appeal lies to the electors of Pennsylvania. They do not to a man feel the unbounded confidence in Quay which Quay expresses in himself, and may conclude to administer their chastisement this very fall.—Chicago Times.

Secretary Blaine's Conversion.

If Mr. Blaine has not become a convert to the principle of free trade, his views have at least undergone so serious a modification that he can no longer be classed among the ultra-protectionists. Free trade means unrestricted commerce between nations. Protection means little less than the prohibition of foreign commerce. The ostensible purpose of a protective tariff is to stimulate home industry, and to create a home market for the consumption of home products. In other words, it is designed to make the nation sufficient unto itself.

The proposal which Mr. Blaine has made to the President, and which the President has transmitted to Congress, contemplates the employment of protective means for the accomplishment of a free-trade end. Mr. Blaine protests against the reduction or abolition of the duties on certain foreign products without consideration; he wishes the present duties maintained, so that in negotiating reciprocity treaties this country may have something to concede. Senator Hale's amendment to the pending tariff bill, authorizing the President to open the ports of the United States to all countries on the American hemisphere on their agreement to receive certain of our staples free of duty, is the embodiment of Mr. Blaine's idea.

Of course, if this country, through its State Department, is to go in for the opening up of foreign markets, the home-market theory—the essence of the protective doctrine—must be abandoned; the home market must be left to take care of itself. This is precisely what the free-traders believe is the right thing to do. They and the Secretary of State are certainly "getting together."—Chicago News.

THE SENATE AND HOUSE.

WORK OF OUR NATIONAL LAWMAKERS.

Proceedings of the Senate and House of Representatives—Important Measures Discussed and Acted Upon—Gist of the Business.

THE Idaho admission bill was passed by the Senate without division on the 1st inst. The conference committee on the legislative appropriation bill reported that the House refused to agree to a Senate amendment and declined further conference. The only alternative being failure of the bill, or a recession on the part of the Senate. The Senate finally refused to recede. This means that unless the House or Senate reconsiders its action the legislative bill will fall and a new legislative bill will have to be prepared and passed. Mr. Reagan addressed the Senate on his bill to prevent transportation of merchandise in bond through the ports and territory of the United States into the Republic of Mexico, and to restore the privilege whenever the Zona Libre has been abolished. The Senate then went into secret session, and at 5 o'clock adjourned. The House resumed the consideration of the Federal election bill. Mr. Lodge offered an amendment providing that as soon as the certificate of the board has been made public any person who was a candidate for election may, by motion before the United States Circuit Court having jurisdiction in the district, contest the correctness of the certificate made by the board, and demand an examination and compilation of the returns. The returning officers shall produce before the Circuit Court all returns, reports, tickets, and all evidence on which it acted in advance in awarding the certificates. The Circuit Court shall thereupon determine and certify the person shown entitled to the certificate. Also an amendment providing that if there shall be an appeal from the decision of the United States Board of Canvassers to the Circuit Court, the Clerk of the House of Representatives shall place on the rolls as the Representative elect the name of the person certified by said court as entitled to the seat. The amendments were agreed to. Mr. Buckalew (Pa.) then moved to strike out section 38, which changes the law so as to place the selection of jurors in the hands of the clerks of courts. After debate Mr. Buckalew's amendment was adopted—yeas, 140; nays, 134. At the evening session Messrs. Dockery (Mo.), Kilgore (Tex.), Hooker (Mo.) and Carleton (Ga.) spoke in opposition to the bill, and Messrs. Kelley (Kas.), Sweeney (Iowa), and Mudd (Md.) advocated it.

IN the Senate, on the 2d inst., Mr. Hiscock called up his motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate had refused to recede from the amendments to the legislative appropriation bill in reference to the pay of Senators' clerks and committee clerks. The motion was agreed to—yeas, 26; nays, 21. After debate the Senate receded from the amendments and the legislative bill now goes to the President for his signature. Mr. Cockrell offered a resolution (which was agreed to) calling on the Secretary of the Interior for information as to the number of pensioners borne on the list of each pension agency on the 1st of June, 1890, and as to the amount appropriated for clerk hire at each agency. After a short executive session the Senate adjourned. The House resumed the consideration of the federal election bill. Mr. Rowell (Ill.) offered an amendment making it the duty of the Circuit Judges in each circuit, within one month after the passage of this act, to open a special term of the Circuit Court in their respective circuits, and said Judges shall appoint for each judicial district three discreet persons of good character and standing, who shall be known as United States Juror Commissioners. It shall be the duty of such commissioners to organize as a board, and from time to time make from the qualified voters a list of persons who, under the laws of the United States and of the State, shall be eligible for jury duty without respect to race or color. Adopted—yeas, 150; nays, 144. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Speaker declared the previous question ordered on the bill and pending amendment. Mr. Springer moved to lay the bill on the table. Lost—yeas, 148; nays, 156. Mr. Springer made a number of dilatory motions which were lost. The bill was ordered engrossed and read a third time by a vote of yeas, 155; nays, 148. The question then recurred on the passage of the bill. As the call was in progress the greatest interest was manifested on both sides of the House. As Mr. Coleman (La.) cast his vote with the Democrats he was greeted with applause from that side of the house, and the applause was re-enforced with cheers when Mr. Lenlbach (N. J.) also cast his vote against the measure. The Republicans retaliated in kind, and as the Southern Republicans, Messrs. Houk, Taylor (Tenn.), Waddill, Mudd (Md.), and Wilson (Ky.) recorded their votes in the affirmative cheer after cheer was given. The bill was passed—yeas, 155; nays, 149. The House then at 9:35 adjourned.

Illusions.

The fact of our having two eyes makes some strange illusions possible. Let a paper tube be placed to the left eye and the hand be placed by the right side of it, and a hole will appear in the middle of the hand. This property of the brain of combining the images of the two retinas is occasionally of use in tracing the form of an object under the microscope without the aid of a drawing prism. That our judgment of distance depends largely upon our having two eyes may be shown by trying to thread a needle with one eye closed. Pictures must be classed as optical illusions, for all artists attempt to make objects on a flat surface appear to have three dimensions. So well is this done at times that we think the eyes of a picture follow us as we move about the room. The effect of neighboring forms in misleading the judgment may be shown by placing two exactly equal, somewhat horseshoe-shaped pieces of cardboard with the narrow part of the one opposed to the broad part of the other, when the latter will always look larger. How big does the sun look? is a question which would get various answers. It is difficult to estimate the size of an object when there is nothing to compare it with. When we see people walking on the top of a small hill, the summit of which is sharply defined against the sky, they appear gigantic. The "Specter of the Brocken," a shadow cast by the rising sun, may also be mentioned. An amusing error of judgment is often made when one attempts to show the distance from the floor a hat on a gentleman's head would reach. If a square is divided in one direction by parallel lines, it appears elongated in the direction of the lines; in dress this is useful, for vertical stripes make a lady look much taller and thinner.

A Shower of Rice.

They were trying hard not to look like a bride and groom, but an incident happened that gave them clean away. They stepped out of the Ebbitt House for a walk. The young man looked at the threatening sky, and then, with the solicitude peculiar to young husbands, concluded that he had better raise his umbrella, and then his beloved would be protected when the rain did come. So he unfastened the band of his natty umbrella, gave it a little flirt, and raised it. About a pint of rice showered down on his head and scattered over the pavement. The spectators roared, the bride giggled nervously, and the young man beat a hasty retreat into the hotel to get the rice out of his hair.—Washington special.

Prescriptions in English.

It is rather a serious piece of professional conventionalism which compels a parent to stand beside the thin veil that separates his child from eternity with medicines in his hand of the character of which he knows nothing, except that they were called for in Latin and Greek hieroglyphics, and furnished by some druggist of whose competency he may also know nothing. A drop too much, an innocent oversight in the method of application, or any other mistake growing out of an ignorance of what he is handling, may be sufficient to decide the chances of life. People have the right to know what they are administering to their loved ones.

NERVOUS DISEASES.

As a cure for every class of Nervous Diseases, no remedy has been able to compare with the Nervine Tonic, which is very pleasant and harmless in all its effects upon the youngest child or the oldest and most delicate individual. Nine-tenths of all the ailments to which the human family is heir, are dependent on nervous exhaustion and impaired digestion. When there is an insufficient supply of nerve food in the blood, a general state of debility of the brain, spinal marrow and nerves is the result. Starved nerves, like starved muscles, become strong when the right kind of food is supplied, and a thousand weaknesses and ailments disappear as the nerves recover. As the nervous system must supply all the power by which the vital forces of the body are carried on, it is the first to suffer for want of perfect nutrition. Ordinary food does not contain a sufficient quantity of the kind of nutriment necessary to repair the wear our present mode of living and labor imposes upon the nerves. For this reason it becomes necessary that a nerve food be supplied. This recent production of the South American Continent has been found, by analysis, to contain the essential elements out of which nerve tissue is formed. This accounts for its magic power to cure all forms of nervous derangements.

To the Great South American Medicine Co.:

DEAR GENTS:—I desire to say to you that I have suffered for many years with a very serious disease of the stomach and nerves. I tried every medicine I could hear of but nothing done me any appreciable good until I was advised to try your Great South American Nervine Tonic and Stomach and Liver Cure, and since using several bottles of it I must say that I am surprised at its wonderful powers to cure the stomach and general nervous system. If every-one knew the value of this remedy as I do, you would not be able to supply the demand.

J. A. HARDEE,
Ex-Treas. Montgomery Co.

Mr. Solomon Bond, a member of the Society of Friends, of Darlington, Ind., says: "I have used twelve bottles of The Great South American Nervine Tonic and Stomach and Liver Cure, and I consider that every bottle did for me one hundred dollars worth of good, because I have not had a good night's sleep for twenty years on account of irritation, pain, horrible dreams, and general nervous prostration, which has been caused by chronic indigestion and dyspepsia of the stomach and by a broken down condition of my nervous system. But now I can lie down and sleep all night as sweetly as a baby, and I feel like a sound man. I do not think there has ever been a medicine introduced into this country which will at all compare with this Nervine Tonic as a cure for the stomach."

A SWORN CURE FOR ST. VITUS'S DANCE OR CHOREA.

CRAWFORDSVILLE, IND., May 19, 1886.

My daughter, twelve years old, had been afflicted for several months with Chorea or St. Vitus's Dance. She was reduced to a skeleton, could not walk, could not talk, could not swallow anything but milk. I had to handle her like an infant. Doctor and neighbors gave her up. I commenced giving her the South American Nervine Tonic; the effects were very surprising. In three days she was rid of the nervousness, and rapidly improved. Four bottles cured her completely. I think the South American Nervine the grandest remedy ever discovered, and would recommend it to every-one.

My daughter, eleven years old, was severely afflicted with St. Vitus's Dance or Chorea. We gave her three and one-half bottles of South American Nervine and she is completely restored. I believe it will cure every case of St. Vitus's Dance. I have kept it in my family for two years, and am sure it is the greatest remedy in the world for Indigestion and Dyspepsia, all forms of Nervous Disorders and Failing Health from whatever cause.

INDIGESTION AND DYSPEPSIA.

The Great South American Nervine Tonic

Which we now offer you, is the only absolutely unfailing remedy ever discovered for the cure of Indigestion, Dyspepsia, and the vast train of symptoms and horrors which are the result of disease and debility of the human stomach. No person can afford to pass by this jewel of incalculable value who is affected by disease of the Stomach, because the experience and testimony of thousands go to prove that this is the ONE and ONLY ONE great cure in the world for this universal destroyer. There is no case of unmalignant disease of the stomach which can resist the wonderful curative powers of the South American Nervine Tonic.

Harriet E. Hall, of Waynetown, Ind., says: "I owe my life to The Great South American Nervine. I had been in bed for five months from the effects of an exhausted Stomach, Indigestion, Nervous Prostration and a general shattered condition of my whole system. Had given up all hopes of getting well. Had tried three doctors with no relief. The first bottle of the Nervine Tonic improved me so much that I was able to walk about, and a few bottles cured me entirely. I believe it the best medicine in the world. I can not recommend it too highly."

Mrs. M. Russell, Sugar Creek Valley, Ind., writes: "I have used several bottles of The South American Nervine Tonic, and will say I consider it the best medicine in the world. I believe it saved the lives of two of my children. They were down and nothing appeared to do them any good until I procured this remedy. It was very surprising how rapidly they both improved on its use. I recommend the medicine to all my neighbors."

Mrs. Ella A. Bratton, of New Ross, Indiana, says: "I can not express how much I owe to the Nervine Tonic. My system was completely shattered, appetite gone, was coughing and spitting up blood; am sure I was in the first stages of consumption, an inheritance handed down through several generations. I began taking the Nervine Tonic and continued its use for about six months, and am entirely cured. It is the grandest remedy for nerves, stomach and lungs I have ever seen."

Ed. J. Brown, Druggist, of Edina, Mo., writes: "My health had been very poor for years, was coughing severely. I only weighed 110 pounds when I commenced using South American Nervine. I have used two bottles and now weigh 130 pounds, and am much stronger and better than have been for five years. Am sure would not have lived through the Winter had I not secured this remedy. My customers see what it has done for me and buy it eagerly. It gives great satisfaction."

Dolly's Lessons.

I want to teach my dolly—
Her ig'rance is obsurd,
I really hate to 'fess it,
But she cannot spell a word.

Tho' I give her short examples
She never gets them done,
For she doesn't know her tables
As far as one times one.

She pays the best of 'tention,
And p'r'aps I am too strick,
But sakes! she tries my patience
When she studies 'rilm'tic.

She's careless 'bout her writin',
She scratches like a hen,
And now she's sprained her thumb
so bad
She cannot hold a pen.

She ought to have a lib'ary,
But what would be the use
To get her books of pokry
When she can't read Mother Goose?

She must have a ed-ju-ca-tion,
For her mamma'd die of shame
If dolly should be lost some day
When she couldn't spell her name.

True to His Word.

Giving advice is one thing and feeling the effects of having it followed is quite another thing. Prof. Julius Eichberg, the well-known violinist, says that he once had as pupil a promising little fellow of some 8 years, who would not study. As the boy was about to set out with his family for the country, where they were to pass the summer, Mr. Eichberg asked him what he should do there.

"Oh," said the boy, "I shall play, and pick flowers, and have good time."

"Yes, but suppose you made up your mind to get up an hour earlier every morning to practice? You would still have time for sport, and in the fall you would be able to play those sonatas you admire."

The result of the conversation was that Otto flung himself upon the neck of his teacher, of whom he was very fond, and promised to do what was asked of him.

A few weeks later, as Mr. Eichberg was driving through the mountains with his family, he was one day delayed, so that the hotel where they were to pass the night was reached at a late hour of the evening.

The accommodations were poor and the night was warm, and it was near morning before the travelers fairly got to sleep, and it seemed to Mr. Eichberg that he had scarcely closed his eyes before he was aroused by the doleful sound of a violin in a room overhead, where some one was at work upon an exercise with which the listener was only too familiar.

For an interminable hour he tossed about, hoping that the noise would cease; then he rose and dressed and hastened to the office of the hotel to protest.

"Yes, it is something of a nuisance," the clerk answered coolly, "but we are used to it here. The boy has played every morning this summer, and it was in the bargain when they took the rooms that he should be allowed to do it."

It was evidently of no use to complain to the clerk, and Mr. Eichberg relieved his mind by declaring that he should at least like to see the player of the violin.

"Oh, you can see him if you want to," the clerk said. "He has just gone down-stairs. You will find him outside there."

Away hurried the guest, the more irritated by the way in which his remonstrance had been received, and before the door on the lawn stood a trim little lad with his face turned away.

"Are you the boy," demanded Mr. Eichberg, sternly, "that has been making such a noise on the violin for an hour?"

The boy turned and looked at him, at first with an expression of fright; then, with a cry of joyous recognition, little Otto flung himself impulsively into his teacher's arms.

"Oh, my dear Mr. Eichberg!" he cried, "I am so glad to see you. I have got up and played every morning just as I promised."

Toot's Mistakes.

My name is Toot, and I am five years old. My real name is Susan, and first, when I was little, they called me Susie, but when Freddy, the baby, you know, began to talk and he tried to say Susie he said "Toot." And now every one calls me Toot.

Oh, dear, this is the most mistaken world! I am always making mistakes, and when they laugh at me it makes an ache in my stomach, and a big lump comes up in my throat and I almost cry, and sometimes I do.

Now, the other day papa was going away with the horse and buggy, and mamma said: "It is going to rain and you had better put the top up and take the boot." And papa said: "Toot, run into the woodshed and bring out the boot." But I couldn't see any boots in the woodshed except the hired man's rubber boots, so I took one of them up in my arms and carried it out and said: "Here is one, papa; I'll go and get the other." And then papa laughed, and so did mamma, and mamma went and got a black thing like oil cloth, and papa spread it over his lap and drove off, laughing; but just as he was going through the gate he turned around and said: "I'll bring you some candy to-night, Toot."

Then the other day Minnie was practicing her music lesson, and I kept playing on the other end of the piano, and she said, "Stop, Toot," two or three times, and I didn't stop, and she turned around and slapped me in the face, and I cried and cried, and mamma took me on her lap and kissed the place; and I said, "Mamma, won't you whip her?" And mamma said, "Wouldn't you rather heap coals of fire on her head? The Bible says if any one is bad to you, and you are good to them, that is heaping coals of fire on their heads. Now you go and kiss Minnie and put coals on her head." Then I jumped off her lap and ran and kissed Minnie as quick as I could, and went out in the kitchen and told Mary mamma wanted the fire-shovel, and took it in the parlor and said: "Here it is, mamma," and she said, "Why, what are you doing with that shovel, Toot?" and I said, "Put the coals in it for Minnie's head." when mamma began to laugh, and Uncle Jack hollered right out, and I began to cry and threw the shovel as hard as I could, and it went over by the window and hit mamma's calla lily, and broke off that bud she had been watching so long. She stopped laughing pretty quick when she saw the bud on the floor, but Uncle Jack said, "Toot, you're a brick!" and picked me up and put me on his shoulder and galloped out of the front door and played riding a horse all over the front yard.

That afternoon Minnie had a headache and was lying on the lounge in mamma's room. I looked at her long curls on the pillow, and kept thinking how mad she would have been if mamma had put the coals on her head, and what a smell her hair would have made. Did you ever smell hair burning? It smells awful funny. Then I went into the dining-room and took a cup and spoon off the table, and carried them into the kitchen, and opened the stove hearth, and filled the cup with ashes—there wasn't any fire in the stove or I would have taken coals—and walked softly back to mamma's room again and poured the ashes on Minnie's head. She screamed and screamed, and cried some. But I laughed and said: "Will you slap me again, cry baby?" But, don't you think mamma, after she said put fire on her—and I didn't put anything but ashes—took her slipper and whipped me! But I wish you could have seen the ashes fly when mamma combed Minnie's hair.

One day the minister came to see grandma. She is sick with roomticks. Mr. Smith is a good man and I like him, so I went in grandma's room and said: "How do you do, Mr. Smith? That was a buful apple you brought me the other time you came here." And he said: "How do you do, Toot? I have brought you two apples this time." And I was so pleased I said loud as I could, like Uncle Jack: "You're a brick, Mr. Smith!" You ought to have seen how funny the corners of his mouth jumped up when I said that! He looked just like Freddy's Jack-in-the-box, and I told him so. Then mamma said: "Toot, don't you want to go and pick me a nice bouquet of dandelions?" And I went and picked it.—Detroit Free Press.

Be Right for Right's Sake.

We are in receipt of a letter asking us, "What makes people do right?"

How under the sun does the writer of this epistle suppose we know what causes influence people in doing right?—if, indeed, anybody does do right, which we might be seriously inclined to doubt if we "took stock" in the universal cry about the wickedness of this day and generation.

We have asked some people of our acquaintance the question, and find that most of them do right because they expect to be rewarded for it. At least they have quoted to us innumerable texts of Scripture bearing on that point, and all pointing toward the rewards of the just.

Now it strikes us that this is an infinitely selfish way of doing things. If you feed Mrs. A., who is starving, because you expect, either in this world or the next, to be rewarded for it, you are only selling your good deeds for a price. You are not pitiful of her sufferings, you are not charitable toward her because it is your duty, but simply because you expect that you will realize benefit from your benevolence.

Is this true charity? Is this love toward your neighbor? Is this the spirit of the Divine Master, who taught us to do unto others as we would they should do unto us?

It seems to us that the only true way of doing right is for right's sake. Without an eye to the rewards, or to the punishments, which may await us, to deal justly and mercifully with every living thing, to do no act of malice, to wound the feelings of no one intentionally, to let no selfish love of ease, or pleasure, deter us from what we deem is right. Yes, that is our idea of the way to do right.

We may be in error, but it strikes us that it is rather a little soul which is continually looking out for rewards, or dreading the punishments.

It is like making a bargain, and saying, if I will be good you will reward me, thus and so; and if I am bad, then I must look out for chastisement.

We do not like that kind of doctrine. We want to do right, not because it is respectable; not because we shall fare better for so doing in this world; not because we shall be happier hereafter for it; not because people will talk about us if we do not; not because we belong to the church, and our minister preaches it, but because it is right to do right, and because God has commanded us to do it.

And to the man properly constituted there is no happiness like that which comes from right actions, guided by right motives. And whatever may be that man's theology, he is on the right road if he does right for right's sake.—Kate Thorn, in New York Weekly.

Hatching Butterflies.

John Maier is of Teutonic extraction, and he is a tailor. Whenever he can he devotes his time to catching butterflies. This is his hobby. What does he do with them? He simply chloroforms them and frames them by thousands. About the walls of his store are six such collections, averaging about two and a half feet square.

Mr. Maier has certainly done some wonderful work in gratification of his whim. Take any one of his collections. It contains at least 500 butterflies of all shapes, sizes, colors, and shades, and these are arranged in circles and crosses, and all sorts of figures. The largest and rarest are placed in the center, and the lesser lights around them. All are placed with wings outspread, perfect specimens.

During the spring and summer months, Mr. Maier uses a net in collecting specimens, and in the fall and winter months he puts in his time climbing trees and obtaining butterflies in chrysalis form. To-day in his store there is a regular butterfly hatchery. He has fully 2,000 cocoons. They are divided according to their size and are now resting peacefully in shallow boxes about a foot square. The boxes are supplied with covers, and in consequence act just as do incubators, and scores of the chrysalides are daily expanding into beautiful butterflies. Alive, they float about the store and sun themselves until Mr. Maier is ready to put them to sleep.

To do this he has a novel arrangement. This consists of two narrow smoothed pieces of wood sloping toward each other in a gentle angle, yet not connecting, a sort of trough separating them. The whole is about eighteen inches long and the trough about half an inch wide. The body of the captured butterfly is placed in the trough, his wings are spread out on the sloping wood on either side, and then the restless little insect is sent on his long journey to the happy hunting ground of butterflydom by the administration of just a little chloroform. The wings are then pinned to the wood to insure their holding their perfect form, and when the arrangement is full of dead butterflies it is relieved of its cargo, and the pretty, gauzy little fellows are tucked upon the background of the coming addition to the collection. Mr. Maier has been doing this sort of thing for six years.—New Haven Palladium.

Was It a White Cap Affair?

Will Hinshaw, a man about twenty-eight years of age, who has of late been in the agricultural implement business at Winchester, was murdered by unknown parties, near Lynn, thirteen miles north of Richmond, while returning from the home of his sweetheart, Miss Mamie Bond, daughter of William Bond, a prosperous farmer living near Johnston's Station. Hinshaw's body was discovered by a friend, Tom Norton, who was returning home about midnight. He at once gave the alarm and the murdered man was taken to Johnston's Station, where it was found that he had been shot twice, once through the head and once through the abdomen. After the murder Hinshaw's clothing had either caught or been set on fire, and the right side of the body was burned to a crisp. There is no clew to the murderers and their motive is a mystery. The body had been robbed of a gold watch and finger ring, and an amount of money the murdered man is known to have had was also taken. This gives credence to the theory of robbery as the sole cause, while the fact that a few weeks ago Hinshaw received a regulation White Cap letter warning him to cease his visit to that part of the country throws another light on the matter. The murdered man was well known and liked, and the tragedy is a peculiarly sad one.

No Land on Which the Sun Shines
Possesses greater natural advantages than our own, but there are portions of the great grain-bearing West and fertile South where atmospheric influences prejudicial to health militate against them, in some degree, as places of residence. Heavy rainfalls and the overflow of great rivers, which upon their subsidence leave dank vegetation exposed to the rays of the sun, there beget malarial fevers, and there also the inhabitants are periodically obliged to use some medicinal safeguard against the scourge. The most popular is Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, a preventive that has for over a third of a century afforded reliable protection to those whom experience in the futility of ordinary remedies for fever and ague, has taught to substitute for them. Whether intermittent or remittent, miasmatic fevers are conquered and averted by the superb anti-periodic and fortifying medicine as they are by no other preparation in use. Use it, and abandon impure local bitters.

GRANDMOTHER'S KITCHEN

WONDERFUL THINGS THAT INVENTION HAS DONE FOR OUR HOMES.

How Art and Science Have Elevated and Softened the Lives of Women—The Luxuries, Elegancies and Comforts of Modern Life—Where to See All These Beautiful and Useful Things.

Much as invention and progress in manufactures have done for man, it is probable that they have done still more for woman within the last fifty years. Although the inventions for the household and for woman have not been great ones, except the sewing machine, and therefore are not comparable to the telegraph, telephone, thrashing and mowing machines, phonograph, typewriter, electric lights, and other wonderful inventions that have revolutionized modern life and business for man; yet the host of comparatively lesser inventions and improvements in woman's household realm have really ameliorated her life and elevated the condition of society more than the grander achievements of science.

It was only about fifty years ago that the blessed genius of invention first turned its serious attention to improving woman's utensils and inventing new comforts and labor saving devices for household use. But in that period what an enormous advance! The invention of the sewing machine was one of the early great advances that has caused an immense progress in elevating woman from the position of an overworked household drudge; but the lesser inventions have done still more.

ASK YOUR GRANDMOTHER to describe minutely her kitchen and her household furnishings of sixty years ago. Possibly you remember how grandma's pies, or cookies, or doughnuts were the delights of your childhood. But now, taking a calm business view of it, with your wife's assistance, you will be astonished to think how grandma managed to keep house at all, much more to cook anything beyond the barest necessities, with her meagerly furnished kitchen, pantry and house.

Your grandmother had no stove, nor any of the convenient pans, pots, kettles, and other furnishings that go with a stove. Just think of that as a starter—cooking and keeping house without any stove! Your grandmother had no roller process nor any other process fine flour. The poorest and coarsest grade of flour you can possibly find anywhere now is better than the best flour your grandmother had. Your grandmother had no good sugar. She used a quality like our cheapest brown sugar—such as your wife probably never uses, and wouldn't have in the house. Sometimes, "for company," grandma brought out "loaf sugar," white but "harder'n a rock," and HAVING TO BE BROKEN UP WITH A HAMMER before it could be used even in chunks for tea or coffee. And a large part of your grandmother's "sweet'nin'" in cooking was done with black Orleans molasses.

But we can best tell what your grandmother didn't have by hearing what she did have. Your grandmother's kitchen was furnished with a big brick or stone fire-place, where she burned cordwood three to six feet long. She had a frying-pan with a handle five feet long; a skillet with a similar long handle; two or three pots to hang over the fire on hooks hung on the iron crane in the chimney; an iron tea-kettle with legs, to either hang on the crane or set on the coals; a big iron bake-kettle with a thick iron cover like a saucer—(it was set amid the coals to bake, and coals were also piled upon the saucer shaped cover); and a tin bake oven, fixed to sit on its long legs over coals, with a sloping roof that reflected the heat from the fire down on top of the bread or biscuit baking.

YOUR GRANDMOTHER HAD NO WASHBOILER. She boiled her clothes in a big iron or brass kettle hung over the fire. She had no soap except she made it herself, either for washing or toilet. She couldn't send to the grocer, as you do, and take her choice of a dozen different kinds of soap.

Your grandmother not only did all the family sewing and knitting by hand (sewing and knitting machines were then undreamed of), but she actually had to make the cloth of wool and linen, and her yarns, with her own loom and spining-wheel, and dye them, and cut and make underwear for the whole family, both male and female.

The furniture in your grandmother's house was scanty, though the best might be solid mahogany. She had no piano. Your grandmother had not more than one carpet, unless it was home-made; so she had no use for a carpet sweeper, had there been any such thing in her days. So barren, so hard, so poverty-stricken, we should consider the conditions of her life. But grandmother got on pretty happily, after all, and managed to train up BRAVE SONS AND CHASTE DAUGHTERS. Both were bred to live useful and industrious lives.

If the wives and daughters, as well as the fathers and sons of the present day, want to appreciate the comforts and luxuries of modern homes, let them, bearing in mind the scantiness that grandmother endured, visit the Detroit International Fair and Exposition, Aug. 26 to Sept. 5, inclusive, and see the rich and immense collection of goods, wares, inventions, tools, utensils, machines, and the thousand useful, elegant, and toil-saving articles for the family and household that will there be exhibited, all of the latest styles and best makers. From the richest jewels, embroidery, laces, furs, and the latest styles of bonnets, hats, robes, silks, velvets and all dress goods for both men and women, to all the finest furniture and furnishing of a modern home—all the latest and handsomest stoves for heating and cooking, from the elegant and artistic art tile stove through all grades to the latest and best nickel-plated kitchen range; from all machines and inventions, through the finest sewing and knitting machines, meat choppers, cherry-stoners, fruit-jarers, raisin-seeders, down to the smallest of the thousand ingenious devices and inventions; all the most elegant and artistic pottery and glassware; all the richest silver and gold plate; mantels, hearths, beautiful carpets, and all sorts of floor coverings; curtains and draperies; pianos and all musical goods; ALL THE SUBSTANTIALS AND ALL THE LUXURIES that render home pleasant, elegant or comfortable, and that have so elevated and softened the condition of wives and mothers by lightening and lessening their formerly incessant toil—all that delight the eye, please or cultivate the taste, and fit the length of every family purse from the poorest to the richest, will be exhibited in abundance at this great exposition.

Meanwhile all machines and inventions for the farm and the shop, to lighten the toil and increase the profit of the labor of men will also be on exhibition, mingled with the delights of grand concerts, beautiful and thrilling spectacles, processions, displays, races, games, balloon ascensions, regattas, immense animal and stock shows, and a ten days' round full of profit, education and pleasure.

Busy wives who use SAPOLIO never seem to grow old. Try a cake...

A complete wreck of domestic happiness has often resulted from badly washed dishes, from an unclean kitchen, or from trifles which seemed light as air. But by these things a man often judges of his wife's devotion to her family, and charges her with general neglect when he finds her careless in these particulars. Many a home owes a large part of its thrifty neatness and its consequent happiness to SAPOLIO.

Grocers often substitute cheaper goods for SAPOLIO, to make a better profit. Send back such articles, and insist on having just what you ordered.

How's Your Liver?

Is the Oriental salutation, knowing that good health cannot exist without a healthy Liver. When the Liver is torpid the Bowels are sluggish and constipated, the food lies in the stomach undigested, poisoning the blood; frequent headache ensues; a feeling of lassitude, despondency and nervousness indicate how the whole system is deranged. Simmons Liver Regulator has been the means of restoring more people to health and happiness by giving them a healthy Liver than any agency known on earth. It acts with extraordinary power and efficacy.

NEVER BEEN DISAPPOINTED.

As a general family remedy for Dyspepsia, Torpid Liver, Constipation, etc., I hardly ever use anything else, and have never been disappointed in the effect produced; it seems to be almost a perfect cure for all diseases of the Stomach and Bowels.

CATARRH—CATARRHAL DEAFNESS—Hay Fever—A New Home Treatment

Sufferers are not generally aware that these diseases are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of living parasites in the lining membrane of the nose and eustachian tubes. Microscopic research, however, has proved this to be a fact, and the result of this discovery is, that a simple remedy has been formulated whereby catarrh, catarrhal deafness and hay fever are permanently cured in from one to three simple applications made at home by the patient once in two weeks.

N. B.—This treatment is not a snuff or an ointment; both have been discarded by reputable physicians as injurious. A pamphlet explaining this new treatment is sent free on application by A. H. DIXON & SON, 337 and 339 West King St., Toronto, Canada.—Christian Advocate.

Sufferers from Catarrhal troubles should carefully read the above. ly

ELF SONG.

I twist the toes of the birds a-doze,
  I tinkle the dew bells bright;
I chuck the chin of the dimpled rose
  Till she laughs in the stars' dim light.
The glowworm's lamp I hide in the damp,
  I steal the wild bee's sting;
I pinch the toad till his legs are a-cramp,
  And clip the beetle's wing.
    O ho! O hey!
    My pranks I play
  With never a note of warning.

I set a snare for the moonbeams fair
  All wrought of spider web twine;
I tangle the naughty children's hair
  In a snarl of rare design.
I flit through the house without any noise,
  There's never an elf so sly;
I break the toys of bad little boys
  And the cross little girls who cry.
    O hey! O ho!
    I work them woe,
  Till crows the cock in the morning.

—Samuel Minturn Peck in St. Nicholas.

Took Him for a Tree.

Not very long ago the keeper of the wild cattle at Chillingham escaped being injured by them in a way which shows how much may be accomplished by presence of mind. They were being fed, and he in some way had got between them and the hills, when, something having alarmed them, they made one of the mad rushes in which, like Highland cattle, they often indulge. He gave himself up for lost, as he was in the open ground where the two contingents had to meet as they came flying round the paddock. Partly because he was a Scotsman, and resolved to die with "his face to the foe," but still more because he knew flight to be certain death, he folded his arms, drew himself up to his full height, and stood perfectly motionless. He says himself that he expected to be killed, but the cattle, perhaps mistaking him in the dusk for a tree stump or a gate post—to which his gaunt figure bears no slight resemblance—swerved as they approached and scampered past without touching him.—Montreal Star.

No Error.

Young Mr. Hale is one of the people who think it must be the easiest thing in the world to write a book, or at least a poem.

"You have your desk, your paper and pens," said he, hopefully, in discussing the subject of literature with a more experienced friend, "and there you are!"

"Yes," said the friend, dryly, "but you've omitted one implement of the trade which ought to be in the hands of beginners—an eraser, to rub out what they have written. Now take this petition you have just drawn up for the 'Widows' Mite Society.' Look over the paper with me. You haven't explained your object with clearness, and you've repeated the word 'charity' nine times in thirteen lines."

For a moment the ambitious young man looked disturbed; then suddenly his composure returned.

"Oh, well," said he, "I don't consider that repetition a mistake. You can't have too much charity!"—Youth's Companion.

Penmanship at the Vatican.

Autotype machines have just been served out for the first time to some of the copying clerks at the Vatican, but they are only to be used for the roughest kind of proof work which has to be done in a hurry. The pope dislikes the innovation, for he is anxious—and rightly so—not to break up the admirable school of penmanship which flourishes at the Vatican. There is no such writing in the world as that which is seen on the documents sent out by the Curia. All the copying clerks of the first rank are priests and monks, and many of them real artists in caligraphy. They are allowed to exercise their fancy in the tracing of illuminated capitals and ornamental rubrics or margins, but there must not be a single erasure on a page which has to be issued in the pope's name. A misplaced comma causes a whole page to be rewritten.—Letter to Glasgow Herald.

Proving Their Sanity.

According to a somewhat dubious tradition, the Greek dramatist, Sophocles, at the age of 90, was accused of imbecility by his son Jophon. He rebutted the calumny by reciting before his judges, the Phratores, the magnificent passage in his tragedy of Œdious Coloneus, which describes the arrival of Œdipus in the sacred forest of Colonna. Having thus vindicated his genius, he retired amid applause. In the Seventeenth century, says Lelanne, the Abbe Cotin, having sold his property in return for a life annuity, was denounced by his relatives as out of his mind. In self defense the abbe invited the commissioners de lunatico inquirendo to come and hear him preach. They went, they listened, and decided in his favor.—All the Year Round.

A New Barometer.

It is nothing more or less than the figure of a general made of ginger bread which Clavette buys every year at the Place du Trone. When he gets home he hangs his purchase on a nail. You know the effect of the atmosphere on ginger bread? The slightest moisture renders it soft; in dry weather, on the contrary, it grows hard and tough. Every morning on going out Clavette asks his servant:

"What does the general say?"

The man forthwith applies his thumb to the figure and replies:

"The general feels flabby about the chest; you'd better take your umbrella."

On the other hand, when the symptoms are "hard and unyielding," our worthy colleague sallies forth in his new hat.—Almanach de l'Atelier.

A Striking Episode.

When the fortune of the White Rose wavered on the bloody field of Towten, the Earl of Warwick, the king maker, in order to kindle the enthusiasm of his soldiers, dismounted from his favorite charger, and stabbed it in the presence of the contending armies. Then, drawing his sword, he kissed the cross at the handle, and said to his men: "Whoever chooses to return home may do so, for I shall live or die this day with such as may like to remain with me!" This striking episode is described with great spirit by Lord Lytton in his romance of the "Last of the Barons."—All the Year Round.

Taxes are Taxes.

"Protection," sings the Waterloo Press, "has proved a boon to consumers by making the protected article cheaper today than when the tariff was first levied." And once more we ask how this state of things will enable the manufacturers to pay their men better prices? When manufacturers go to Congress and ask to have a duty put on their line of goods, or the duty made higher, they say they want it so they can keep up prices high enough to leave such a profit as will enable them to pay higher wages than are paid abroad. This is the sum and substance of the whole protection business. They say they can't make a certain articles as cheap as can be done abroad, because, we pay better wages here. So they ask for protection to enable them to keep out foreign competition, or so that if the foreign article comes in, it will be forced to sell at a higher price. This will enable the home manufacturer to sell at a high price. Now, if the effect of a tariff is to reduce the price, how are our men protected? Will the Press tell?

* * *

The Press says "Certain lines of cotton goods are now exported, and American calicoes find sale in English centers of cotton manufacture." Of course they are, and so are many other American productions. We can make multitudes of articles here as cheap and even cheaper than they can abroad. That proves we don't need "protection." The whole system is a legalized steal, created only to take money from the people at large and put it into the hands of a few men who are already making too great profits. The Press also says, that railroad iron and other things are quoted at the same price in this country and in England, and concedes that, "This could not be so if it were true that the duty is added to the price of the home made article." And again we ask. "If nothing is added to the price of the home article, how is the home manufacturer protected?" Will the Press please explain?

* * *

To make it a little plainer, if possible, take the present price of railroad iron—such as he mentions. He says it is now quoted the same here as in England. That is not remarkable. It might have been so quoted long ago if our protected iron-masters like Carnegie, had been willing to take reasonable profits. We can make iron as cheap here as they can in England, and hence, don't need protection. Protection is a robbery that takes from those who are making the least and gives it to those who are making the most. There should be no tariff for protection. It should be a tariff for revenue only.

Reading Room and Public Library.

The board of directors has decided to make a canvass of the city to secure loans and gifts of books. As an inducement to the contribution of books the following offers are made.

1. Any person who desires to sell or donate a book or books, will receive therefor annual membership cards equal to the value of the books, which value will be determind by a committee selected for that purpose.

2. If a person simply desires to loan a book for one year, and it is of the value of $3 00, or more he will receive one annual membership card.

3. A membership card entitles the holder to all the privileges of the Reading Room and to take books from the library under such restrictions as are usual in public libraries.

The ladies of the W. C. T. U. will begin the canvass for books in a few days.

Thousands Poisoned.

In a recent work on heart disease, Dr. Franklin Miles the noted specialist gives many new and startling facts. Thousands of people are slowly poisoning themselves, weakening their hearts by the use of tea, coffee, tobacco and alcohol. These are heart whips, causing it to beat rapidly, thus gradually wearing it out, producing shortness of breath when exercising, pains in side and shoulder, hungry and faint spells. Finally heart failure and sudden death. For weakened and irritated hearts the press everywhere highly recommend the New Heart Cure discovered by Dr. Franklin Miles, which is for sale at F. E. Davenport's. 5

We Can't Agree.

The Dispatch, in speaking in favor of refunding the county debt, either mistakes the nature of the question, or else over-estimates its own ability to understand financial affairs. The great objection we made to refunding the debt, is that bonds would have to be issued for twenty years. In all this time, we could not get them back if we had the money to pay them. But the chances are, that in a very few years, we will pay off the debt and stop all the interest. Suppose we are able to pay this in five years, which would be at the rate of $8,000 a year. In this case the interest expense would be only half what it would be, by the Dispatch's plan. A saving of $12,000 in interest is quite an item. There would be that much less of the people's money to be sent out of the county into the hands of foreign or distant bondholders. Besides there would be, as we said before, quite a sum saved in taxes on the orders held in this county. The Dispatch's words about our paying $1.06 for $1 is intended to deceive. No one proposes to do this. A dollar, and one year's interest on our plan would be $1.06; on the Dispatch's plan, it would be $1.03 for one year. But our plan is to pay up in five years, making $1 debt at simple interest cost us $1.30; the Dispatch's plan is to let the debt stand for twenty years, so that $1 would cost us $1.60. The COURIER's plan saves thirty cents on each dollar, and gets the debt paid in five years, while the Dispatch wants to let the debt hang over the county for twenty years. Our county, has in years past, paid from $4,000 to $14,000 a year, on its debt. It can do it again, and no doubt will. We did it, even before we had the Dispatch editor to help the board of commissioners, and how much easier we can do it now, while he is conveniently near!

The New Election Law.

A subscriber writes to ask how he is to vote one of the big tickets under the new law. The best way we know of is to stamp the small square at the head of the democratic ticket, as that will be a vote for every man on the ticket, without any other stamping. If a republican, however, wants to vote for some of the very excellent men on the democratic ticket, he can do this by going through the list and stamping each name he wishes to vote for. Suppose his own ticket has ten names in all, and he wishes to vote for one democrat. He goes through his ticket stamping the small squares by each name, till he comes to the office for which his democratic friend is running. At this office, he don't stamp the square by the name of the republican for that office, but leaves it without a mark, and goes over to the democratic ticket, and stamps the small square by the name of his democratic friend. Then if he wishes to vote for the rest of the republican candidates, he goes on and finishes stamping the squares by the names on that ticket, till he gets to the end. Then his ticket will show a vote for nine republicans and one democrat. He then folds up his ballot so that all names are inside and cannot be seen, gives the ballot to the inspector, and returns the stamp to the poll clerk, and then goes out. It is simple when you have voted once.

Married.

July 6, 1890, Mr. Dode Rex, of Newville, and Miss Libbie Smith, of Wolcottville, were united in the holy bonds of matrimony, by Rev. C. H. Blanchard. Mr. Rex is a fine young man, in good standing with the Lake Shore company; has been in their employ about three years. He is worthy of a good wife, and we believe he has one among the best. Miss Smith is a highly educated young lady whose brilliancy and intellect have made her many friends. She has retired from the school room to be mistress over her own household, and is worthy of a noble husband. We join with friends and relatives in wishing the happy young couple all the blessings that the future may bestow upon them.

Hits the Nail.

(Lagrange Democrat.)

What is the use of a farmer joining the Alliance or any kindred organization designed to relieve his distress when his prejudices compel him to vote for a "protective" tariff that is responsible for all the burdens imposed on him?

THE NEWS RECORD.

A SUMMARY OF A WEEK'S EVENTFUL HAPPENINGS.

Intelligence by Electric Wire from Every Quarter of the Civilized World—Political, Commercial, and Industrial News, Fires, Accidents, Crimes, Suicides, Etc., Etc.

Seized an American Sealer.

Port Townsend (Wash.) special: Capt. Thomas, of the North American Commercial Company's steamer Arago, which arrived here from Ounalaska, says that Capt. Mockler, of the schooner Mattie C. Dyer, was seized at Ounalaska June 19. He claims that the vessel is held without good grounds. He had anchored off Ounalaska and went ashore to the custom-house and surrendered his papers, when Deputy Collector Edmunds, who is stationed there, seized his vessel. She was towed into harbor and her guns and hunting paraphernalia and skins taken ashore. Capt. Mockler claims to be able to prove that he has not been inside of Behring Sea, and says there is no evidence on which to hold his vessel. The revenue cutter Bear was at Ounalaska when the seizure was made. The Rush had not arrived up to a week ago. The British sealing schooner Harry Dennis also put into Ounalaska with a large number of skins aboard, but skipped out during the night without giving the authorities a chance to take her. Capt. Thomas says that all sealing vessels heard from had been making big catches.

A Frightful Wreck.

A special from New Albany, Ind., says: The Gosport accommodation train on the Monon collided with freight No. 41 at Smithville, a flag station eight miles south of Bloomington and eighty-four miles north of this city. Twelve people were injured in the collision. Following is the list: Conductor William Brown, fatally injured; Grant Johnson, Chicago, seriously crushed; William Mitchell, of Indianapolis, conductor on the freight train, dangerously hurt in the back; Henry Whitsell, engineer, dangerously hurt in the back; James Meyers, engineer of the passenger, badly cut about the head; Mrs. Patton, of Smithville; Engineer Hendricks, of the freight train; Jeff Robertson, brakeman; Everett Foster and wife, Worthington; Ada Pearson, Bedford; David Warren, Bloomington; Charles Marain, conductor of the freight train; William Bagley; Alice Wells, Bloomington; Kate Taffe, Indianapolis.

Flags at Half Mast.

The President has issued the following order: The death of John C. Fremont, a Major General on the retired list of the army of the United States, is an event calling for some appropriate expression of the nation's sorrow and of a grateful appreciation of his public services. His career was full of adventurous and useful discovery, and of devoted and conspicuous service both in civil and military affairs. He opened the passes of the Rocky Mountains and gave value to his discoveries by aiding to locate an American State on the Pacific coast. It is, therefore, ordered that the national flag be displayed at half mast upon all the buildings of the executive departments until after the funeral shall have taken place.

Terrible Slaughter.

A special from Tangier, says news has been received here of a raid by the Zemmeur tribe on the camp of the Sultan's son near Salee. The camp was taken completely by surprise. The troops and slaves were mercilessly slaughtered by the raiders, and fifteen prisoners were burned alive. The Sultan's son is furious and has sent to his father for reinforcements and threatens to retaliate and exterminate this wild, warlike tribe if it costs a general war with all the tribes of the interior. It is believed the Sultan will now wake up to the dangers menacing him from these unconquered enemies and move with swiftness to conquer them.

Shot by Desperadoes.

It is reported that July 13 a constable's posse near Hazard, Perry County, Ky., in search of Buck and Zach Fugate, two desperadoes, had a conflict with their band in the mountains. The constable and one of his assistants were killed and two others wounded, but Buck Fugate was captured and lodged in jail at Hazard. His friends threaten to rescue him and further bloodshed is feared.

Struck It Rich.

A telegram from Landers, Wyoming, says that two boys, Phil Horsch and Sam Davis, 16 and 17 years old respectively, who for some weeks have been working three mining claims 500 feet south of the famous Buckeye Mine, twenty miles south of there, struck ore which assays from $23,000 to $40,000 per ton in free gold. This is the richest discovery ever made in the territory, and miners have started for the new fields by hundreds.

Two Brothers Killed.

C. L. and T. P. Huddlestone, brothers, were shot and killed near Pine Bluff, Ark., by Charles Parrott. The shooting was the result of an old feud between the families, who are numerous and wealthy. There are four more Huddlestone brothers, and, as they swear vengeance and as the Parrotts swear to stand by their kinsman, considerable more bloodshed is expected.

Jacob J. Kern has been appointed Clerk by the Commissioners of Allen County, Ind., to fill the unexpired term of Geo. W. Loag, deceased.

RIOT AND BLOODSHED.

Terrible Fights in the Allegheny Mountains.

Wheeling (W. Va.) special: News is received from Bromwell, Mercer County, that there is great excitement throughout the mining region, growing out of a terrible riot occurring on the night of July 9 on the line of the Blue Stone branch of the Norfolk & Western Railroad, and that further trouble may occur at any time. It seems several hundred negroes made an excursion over the road, and as there was a good deal of liquor on board the train a number of fights occurred. When a few miles from Bromwell three or four negroes attempted to cut a white man's throat, when Detective W. G. Baldwin and three of his men attempted to protect him. They were at once attacked by about thirty drunken negroes, who broke the car-seats and used the pieces as clubs. The lights were knocked out and a terrible conflict ensued, and nine negroes were disabled. Detective Baldwin was stabbed in the side and head and terribly clubbed. Baldwin shot the negro who stabbed him. At Bromwell the citizens attempted to interfere to quell the disturbance, when there was a second outburst. Six negroes have been arrested and a number were beaten nearly to death.

BLOWN UP.

The Boilers of the Steamer Tioga Explode and Hurl Thirteen Persons Into Eternity.

A Chicago special, dated the 12th inst., says: The steamer Tioga, of the Erie Transportation Company, was badly wrecked by an explosion at 7:45 this morning, while lying at her dock at Randolph street on the river. It is reported thirteen people were killed, but at this writing (10:30) the report cannot be verified. Up to this time only three bodies have been recovered. The explosion was a terrific one, and a column of smoke shot 200 feet into the air, succeeded a second later by a whirlwind of flame, which illumed bridges, water and spars in a frightful glare. The startled crowds rushed to the river banks, docks, bridges, and soon the scene was thronged with an immense crowd. A general fire alarm had been turned in, and some fifty streams of water from the steamers and firetugs were pouring into the hold of the big iron boat through the gaping hole amidship, from which the flames poured in a torrent. The Tioga, which was one of the largest and finest propellers on the lake, is badly wrecked, her upper works being nearly blown away. When the explosion occurred there were between ten and twenty men in the fan tail of the boat while scores of others were forward. There were also several stevedores on the dock and in the warehouse. Bridgetender Gaynor, at Randolph street bridge, less than a hundred feet away, saw a man whirling upward into the air midst a tremendous mass of blazing wreckage. The poor fellow fell into the river but was rescued unconscious and cared for. The explosion did much damage to surrounding buildings, and windows were broken nearly half a mile away. Up to midnight seven dead and wounded men had been taken from the boat, and it was then believed that no more than eight others were in the hold. These men are doubtless dead, as ten fire engines have poured tons of water into the big hold just above the spot where they were at work at the time of the explosion. It will be at least another day before the water can be pumped from the hold and the bodies recovered. There is good reason to believe that the explosion was caused by gas generated from oil barrels which were stored near the fan tail. So far as learned the following are the names of the killed and injured.

AWFUL CYCLONE.

Scores of Wealthy People Killed by a Cyclone Which Destroyed Their Cottages.

St. Paul (Minn) special: A cyclone having its origin in the vicinity of the village of White Bear swept the shores of Lake Gervais, on which are a large number of cottages occupied by wealthy residents of St. Paul. The death and devastation resulting therefrom is simply awful. Eleven persons were killed outright and at least forty injured. The list of dead and injured so far as known is as follows: Killed—George Miller, paying teller First National bank, St. Paul; J. H. Schurmier, millionaire manufacturer, and his wife, Mrs. J. H. Schurmier, Peter Oieson, John Goetschke, Mrs. John Mullaney and family of children, Charles Schurmier.

Injured—Mrs. George Miller, Carrie Misse, Charles Good, Clark Haven, Joseph Bernon, John Guenter, Mrs. Charles Hastings, Nellie King, Susie King, George McPherson, H. C. Schurmier, Mrs. H. C. Schurmier and a lady guest, name unknown; Simon Good, Ray Good, all of St. Paul, and Mrs. Charles Pfaffle, of Brennan, Texas.

Messengers arrived in St. Paul bringing the news of the calamity, and at once a dozen physicians and several ambulances were dispatched to the scene. Many of the bodies of the dead were brought to this city, others being left at the Coleman Hotel to await the identification of friends and relatives.

A strip of territory sixteen miles long and three wide was stripped of almost everything and the property loss will be enormous.

LATER—It is feared that the loss of life by the cyclone at Lake Gervais may reach half a hundred. The coachman for J. H. Schumier, one of the victims, arrived in St. Paul with the body of his employer. He states that during the hour preceding the tornado fifteen rowboats were loaned by the proprietor of the boat-house, and that each of these row-boats contained from five to six persons, and none of them have been seen or heard from since the cyclone. It is supposed that they have gone to the bottom of the lake. No one knows their names, not even the man who let the boats.

CARELESSNESS

Causes an Awful Disaster on the Little Rock and Memphis Road.

Memphis special: A Passenger train on the Memphis & Little Rock Railroad was run into by a freight train on the Kansas City, Memphis & Binghampton road at the Kansas City crossing. The passenger train left Memphis at 5:45 and arrived at the Kansas City crossing about two miles from the shore just before seven. As is customary, the engineer stopped and blew the whistle, then proceeded. A freight coming at a good speed crashed into the forward part of the smoking car, cutting it in half and overturning it and the Texas sleeper ahead of it. The engineer of the freight train jumped off and made for the woods and has not been seen since. Everything was confusion for a moment but finally quieted down and the work of rescue began. In a few minutes the one killed and ten wounded were extricated from the wreck. A man named Brown was killed outright and Catherine Beacham lost both legs. J. H. Stoner and wife, bruised; Lee Morton, brakeman, dangerously wounded internally; Harry McDonald, conductor, injured internally; Charles Hackmeyer, will lose his left arm; P. H. Ward, both hips broken, will die; William Sellors, head and back mangled, not fatal; Georgiana Selmons, internally injured; Frances Farron, internally hurt; Ida Bowden, small bruises. The passenger train was pulled back to Memphis and the wounded taken to Duff's Hotel, where medical attendance was rendered. Catherine Beacham suffered greatly during the ride back and died in the car before time to remove her. The names of the engineer and conductor of the freight have not been learned, as they have failed to show up since the accident, and the railroad officers are dumb.

Dreaded Hydrophobia.

New York special. The latest addition to Dr. Paul Gibler's list of patients is a cowboy. A well-built man with long hair and a heavy mustache, wearing a large sombrero and top-boots, walked into Dr. Gibler's office and asked to be treated. He said he was Vaquero from Arizona. Last May, after a hard day's work at "Rounding up," he and his companions threw themselves on the ground to sleep. During the night the fire went out and he was awakened by feeling a painful sensation in his left ear and arm. Springing to his feet he discovered that four of his companions as well as himself had been bitten, either by a coyote or a dog. The cowboys thought nothing of the bites and failed to have them attended to. About two weeks ago his companions died with symptoms of hydrophobia. He then became frightened and came on to this city for treatment. Dr. Gibler was surprised at the novel story, but inoculated him and told him to return again the next day.

Lord Wolseley's Views.

Lord Wolseley, in a letter received in Baltimore, writes: "The closer the bonds of union between mother and child, England and the United States, the better it will be for both, for our race is indeed for civilization. Those who rant about causes of quarrel between us are not friends to neither nation nor humanity. There must never be war between us no matter how much either or both be egged on by those who hate the English race, and would therefore like to see us at one another's throats. We feel quite as proud of the United States as any of its people can do. Its honor and reputation are as dear to us as they can be to those on the other side of the Atlantic, and I rejoice above all things to think that the mutual respect we have always had for one another is now maturing into a sincere and mutual affection."

A Prominent Man Dead.

Dr. George W. Loag, County Clerk of Allen County, Ind., died at his residence in Fort Wayne, from heart failure. He leaves a widow in comfortable circumstances. The doctor was a member of the Masonic, Odd Fellows', and Elks' orders, in the first-named being a 32-degree member and a Knight Templar. He was an energetic, public-spirited citizen, and was associated also with Willis Pearse in the livery business, conducting the well-known stable of Pearse & Loag. In politics the doctor was a Democrat, and he was an ardent worker for his party and a prominent and influential member thereof. He was interested in the management of the Indianapolis Sentinel, held stock in the company controling it. and is the present member of the Democratic State Central Committee from the Twelfth District.

Pythian Knights.

The Supreme Lodge of the Knights of Pythias, in session at Milwaukee, elected the following officers:

Supreme Chancellor, G. B. Shaw, Eau Claire, Wis.; Supreme Vice-Chancellor, W. W. Blackwell, Henderson, Ky.; Supreme Prelate, E. T. Blackmer, San Diego, Cal.; Supreme Master Exchequer, S. J. Willby, Wilmington, Del.; Supreme Keeper Records and Seals, R. S. C. White, Nashville, Tenn.; Supreme Master at Arms, G. H. Morrison, Nevada, Mo.; Supreme Secretary Endowment Fund, W. B. Kennedy, Cincinnati, O.; Supreme Inner Guard, Dr. D. C. Barkwell, Cheyenne, Wyo.; Supreme Outer Guard, John H. Thompson, Washington, D. C.

One of the Boies.

A New York Herald's Washington special says: It is reported that John K. Boies, of Hudson, Mich., will be shortly appointed to a place in the diplomatic service. The resignation of Ex-Senator Thomas W. Palmer, as Minister to Spain, leaves the State of Michigan without any representation in foreign service, and the Republicans of that commonwealth are insisting upon another appointment. The probabilities are that one of our representatives to some of our minor continental courts will be sent to Madrid, and that the vacancy thus created will be given to Mr. Boies.

A Hero Dead.

Boston special: John T. Kilty, the noted life-saver, until recently assistant draw tender of the Mt. Washington avenue bridge, is dead of heart trouble, aged 31. During his life he saved eleven persons from drowning. In February, 1889, in saving John Warren, Kilty received the injury that caused his death. Warren weighed over two hundred pounds, and in lifting him from the water Kilty ruptured a blood vessel near the heart. In 1883 the Massachusetts Humane Society gave Kilty a handsome silver medal in recognition of his bravery, and two years ago he received a gold medal from Congress for his many brave deeds.

Brutes Imprisoned.

James A. Jacobs, a prosperous farmer living near Lawrence, Mich., nine years ago became provoked at a pair of fine Norman colts and shut them up on a hard floor in his stable, vowing that they should never step out of the stall again. All these years he has kept them tied up, never once allowing them outdoor exercise. None of the neighbors dared interfere on account of Jacobs' violent temper and influential position. The Sheriff has now stepped in and promises to make it warm for Jacobs. The hoofs of the horses have grown out and their hair is long and gray. They can scarcely see, and are thin and wan.

Riot at Superior, Wisconsin.

Superior (Wis.) special: The strike here of the common laborers assumed a serious aspect, when on charging the Stolbarge works employes, the foreman of the latter shot the leader of the strikers, Andrew Sederson, fatally wounding him. After some skirmishing the police started with Anderson for the jail, but some one in the crowd fired at Anderson, the ball hitting one of the strikers in the leg. He was taken to the jail, but later, under guard, was removed to Duluth. Serious trouble is expected.

Congressional Nomination.

A special dispatch from Orrville, Ohio, states that the dead-lock in the Democratic Congressional Convention of the Sixteenth Ohio District was broken after two days and one night of balloting by the nomination of Ex-Lieutenant-Governor John G. Warwick, of Massillon, Ohio. Mr. Warwick, who will be the opponent of Congressman McKinley, is a business man, engaged for many years in extensive milling interest and owner of coal mines. His first and only political office was Lieutenant-Governor of Ohio.

Fatal Blasting Explosion.

Three kegs of blasting powder exploded with terrific force at the deep cut on the Columbus, Lima and Milwaukee Railroad, three miles east of Bellefontaine, Ohio. Patrick Best, an overseer, and an Italian, only known as "No. 27," were frightfully burned from their heads to their feet, the flesh being nothing but a blackened mass. All their hair was burned off and their eyes burned out. The Italian died, and death is only a matter of a few hours with the overseer.

Wales Intercedes.

London special: The police strike has completely collapsed, and the men who are still held out are seeking reinstatement. The Prince of Wales has interested himself and promised to intercede in behalf of the men. There is a reason to believe the requests of the force will be considered and some measure of relief accorded.

To Have a Lieutenant General.

The House Committee on Military Affairs has directed a favorable report on the bill to revive the rank of Lieutenant General of the army. The bill permits the President to appoint to that office an officer distinguished for skill and bravery in the late war and the office is to expire upon his retirement.

A $600,000 Fire.

Philadelphia special: A disastrous fire broke out here in the large planing mill of Campbell & Atkinson and Casey Brothers' immense wall paper factory at Tenth street and Susquehanna avenue. The latter building is several stories high. When the firemen arrived the flames had gained such headway that a third alarm was sent out, the first time in ten years. Both buildings, which practically covered two blocks, were entirely destroyed and a number of dwelling houses on adjoining streets badly damaged by water. The total loss is about $600,000. There are many conflicting stories about the origin of the fire. The watchman claimed the flames started in an adjoining stable, while the firemen held that on their arrival the planing mill and paper factory were on fire in four different places. They are inclined to treat it as the work of an incendiary. Casey Bros.' establishment was the largest of the kind in the world, they turning out from ten to eleven million rolls of paper a year.

Found a Petrified Indian Queen.

Fox hunters accidentally discovered a cave near Staunton, Ind., and explored it. The leader of the party stumbled over a petrified Indian woman whose ornaments proclaimed her a princess of a powerful tribe. Her shapely arms and ankles were encircled with bracelets of gold and bone, while around her neck was a band of human teeth. Three other bodies were found in a less degree of preservation, and scattered throughout the cave were specimens of gold jewelry and a collection of stone cooking utensils, axes, knives, and tomahawks.

Must Live Together.

The principle that a husband and wife, while they live together as such, can have but one and the same residence, and that the home of a married woman is presumptively with her husband, was assented to by Secretary Noble in a decision rejecting the appeal of Mary Haywood, formerly Sullivan. Her homestead entry in the Stockton land district, California, had been cancelled because it appeared that she was trying to maintain a residence on one entry and her husband on another.

An Editorial War.

Goshed (Ind.) special: The editorial war between C. G. Conn, of the Elkhart Truth, and E. D. Fuller, of the Sunday Call, has at last resulted in a libel suit. Colonel Conn filed with the clerk of the court here a suit against Fuller and asks $10,000 damages for articles published in the Call. About a year ago Conn began libel suits against all the Elkhart papers, but soon withdrew them. This time he says he is in for good.

A Collision.

An excursion train containing 250 Mississippi business men, collided with a freight at Pratt mines, on a branch of the Mineral road. Twenty-four people were hurt by jumping from the cars. For a time there was a panic and many women passengers fainted. The seriously injured are: J. Stein, Bairds, Miss.; A. Warmas, Greenville, Miss.; J. G. McGuire, Yazoo City, Miss.; Geo. Handy, Corona, Miss.

A Dreadful Accident.

John McCormick, who lives seven miles west of Fort Wayne, fell from a load of hay on the prongs of an upturned hay fork. The points penetrated his abdominal cavity and tore an awful gap, exposing his entrails and lacerating his body in other ways. One of the prongs was broken by the fall and the point lodged in the young man's flesh. He will probably die.

Crushed to Death.

Josiah Jones, a man of 60, met an untimely end near Briceton, Ohio. He went to the woods to help his sons load some logs, one of which fell on him, crushing him to the ground. He lived about three hours and was conscious to the end. Mr. Jones was well respected and leaves a host of warm friends to mourn his sudden death.

Burned to Death in a Barn.

The barn of Henry Fenner, near Bear Lake, Mich., was burned. The skeleton of a man was discovered in the smouldering ruins. It is supposed that a tramp got into the barn for a night's lodging and set things on fire with his pipe.

The Michigan Wheat Crop.

The bureau of farm statistics estimates that Michigan's wheat crop will be 18,851,540 bushels. This is an average of 13.13 bushels per acre, or over four million bushels less than last year's crop.

A Very Ugly Wound.

William Altevough, while working a planer in Bass's machine shop at Fort Wayne, had a large piece gouged out of his left leg from the knee to the hip by the planer. The wound is a very ugly one.

A Leg Cut Off.

S. Robinski, a Pole, living at 1221 Lucas street, Toledo, Ohio, was run over by a Michigan Central train at the Lucas street crossing. His right leg was cut off and his back seriously injured.

—John F. James, of Terre Haute, a freight brakeman on the Vandalia, had his arm terribly mashed while coupling cars at Bowers, Montgomery County. Amputation may be necessary.

—O. M. Tyler, aged 59, died very suddenly, of heart disease, at his home in Muncie. He was a Director in the Muncie Savings and Loan Company, and was a well-known insurance agent.

—Peru's Law and Order League has given notice that the Sunday law must be strictly observed in that city hereafter, or prosecutions will follow. A careful watch will be kept on all saloons.

—Nathaniel Straight, of English Crawford County, is 99 years of age, and is so robust that he was accepted, last week, by the road Supervisor as a competent hand to labor upon the highways.

—James Catlin, William Bowman and Otto Cramer, three inmates of the Orphans' Home in Muncie, ran away. They range in age from eight to twelve years. No cause is given for the action of the little fellows.

—Mr. and Mrs. Louis Griebel, of Fort Wayne, celebrated their golden wedding recently. The aged couple have lived at Fort Wayne all these years, and all the children and grandchildren were present at the celebration.

—George B. Andrews, charged with burning the stock barn and thirty-five polled Angus cattle belonging to Col. C. E. Briant, was found guilty in the Huntington Circuit Court and sentenced to nine years in the penitentiary.

—John Cawley, of Greencastle, broke in two a large block of ice, and was surprised to find imbedded therein a turtle measuring four inches across the back. After being thawed out the turtle crawled around as lively as a cricket.

—At Burney's Station, on the C., H. & G. division of the Big Four, Eli Davis, a prominent farmer and stock-dealer of Bartholomew County, dropped dead. He was 68 years of age and strong and robust. Heart disease was the cause of his death.

—Samuel and Martin Cutsinger and others, of Edinburg, have just sold to Eastman & Co., of New York, 470 head of fine beef cattle, to be shipped direct to England. The cattle made a general average of 1,525 pounds per head, and were sold at 4⅝ cents per pound.

—At Hope, Bartholomew County, Nesbit Merriditb, a young man 18 years of age was accidentally shot through the right knee, shattering the bones, with a thirty-two calibre rifle, carelessly handled by himself. It is thought that amputation of the fractured limb will be necessary.

—Wm. Martin & Sons' ice-house, near the junction at Crawfordsville, was set on fire by a drunken man with a pipe. The house contained nearly all the ice in the city, which had been shipped there from Wisconsin. The Water Works Co. had the water turned off and caused much delay of the fire company. There was some insurance, but the amount could not be ascertained. Some of the ice may be saved, but the loss will be $2,000 and will cause much inconvenience to the consumers in the city.

—The store of Hale Wert, at Alamo, Montgomery County, was entered by thieves, the safe blown open and $75 secured. There is no clew to the burglars.

—Jesse F. Hutchins, of Wabash, died on a train between Delphi and Lafayette of heart disease. Deceased was forty-five years of age, and until recently a law partner of Hon. Warren G. Sayre, late Speaker of the Indiana House of Representatives. He was returning from Lafayette, where he went on legal business. He leaves a wife and two children.

—Arrangements have been completed for the holding of a soldiers' reunion at Seymour, Sept. 11 to 13. Every old soldier in southern Indiana is invited, and ample preparation will be made to entertain the largest assembly of veterans that has met in that part of the State since the close of the war.

—John McCormick, who lives seven miles west of Fort Wayne, fell from a load of hay on the prongs of an upturned hay fork. The points penetrated his abdominal cavity and tore an awful gap, exposing his entrails and lacerating his body in other ways. One of the prongs was broken by the fall and the point lodged in the young man's flesh. He will probably die.

—While Miss Rebecca Martin, a young lady of Elkhart, was crossing a railway track in Goshen, she was struck by a freight train which was rapidly backing and approaching from the rear, and thrown through the air fully twenty-five feet. Her escape was marvellous, for she scrambled up unhurt and boarded the Lake Shore train for her home in Elkhart. Her deafness was the cause of the accident.

—Lit Moore, George Moore, Isaac Moore, Frank Peters, George Elliott, Sam Roberts, Link Davis, Henry Black, all of Blue River Township, Harrison County, have been arrested on warrants sworn out by one James McKinney, who claims to have been "white capped" by them one night last March. The defendants were brought before Justice Kirkham of Corydon and a preliminary will be held immediately.

—The White Caps of Harrison County took August Colin from the side of his sweetheart and gave him a severe flogging. He is a young man of good reputation, and it is not known why he was whipped. John H. Denbo was severely flogged by about thirty White Caps. He is Superintendent of the County Poor Asylum, and is charged with mistreating the inmates of the institution. He was taken from his bed, tied to a tree in his yard and given seventy-five lashes.

—The Postoffice Department has established money order and postal notes offices in this State as follows: Money order—Fairfield, Franklin County; Ferdinand, Dubois County; Newcomer, Delaware County; Perrysville, Vermilion County; Prieto, Wells County; Ramsay, Harrison County; Rosedale, Parke County; Sharpsville, Tipton County; Swaysee, Grant County; Young America, Cass County. Postal notes—Fallen Timber, Randolph County; Holo, Washington County; Kingston, Decatur County.

—Six South Haven County, Michigan, women, Mrs. Cherry Cooper, Louise Doer, and Ray Dalamere, Louise Bacon and Hattie Thompson. started from home June 25 in a rowboat, with a tow full of camp equipment, bound for South Bend. The trip is a hard one, twenty miles along the Lake Michigan coast and twenty-five miles up the St. Joseph River. with swift currents, rapids and dams. The party all arrived safely at South Bend. They camped every night and report a most enjoyable trip. The young women are the first who ever made the trip, which has not been attempted by men since Indian times. They will return by the same route.

—A few months ago William Simmons returned to his home in Muncie after serving a term in some Western penal institution. The other day he was arrested at Lima, Ohio, and is now in jail under bond of $400, charged with breach of trust. Simmons got caught at a trick he has been working with success for some time, going into a shoe store, buying a pair of fine shoes, paying the cash for them, and after getting well acquainted with the proprietor or head clerk, professing to go home with the shoes, but returning in a short time, saying the shoes did not fit and asking to take one, two, three, or more pairs to try on. Securing them he would not return.

—At Vencennes, the two-story grain warehouse of Thomas Barrowman collapsed, burying the proprietor and two laborers, George Miles and William Hunter, beneath the ruins. Miles escaped by his own efforts. Hunter was released greatly bruised and crushed about the head and legs by the axes of the firemen. Great timbers pinioned the proprietor to the floor, but after an hour of toil the timbers were raised from him by jack-screws and he was taken out. It is feared he is fatally crushed about the hips. The building was new and the mortar was green. There were about five thousand bushels of new wheat on the floors at the time of the collapse. The building was designed to hold fifty thousand bushels.

—Patents have been granted to Indiana inventors as follows: Charles Anderson, assignor to South Bend Iron-works, South Bend, sulky plow; Jacob Barrow, Windfall, pressure regulator; John G. Campbell, Majenica, corn planter; James Milley, Richmond, wire and picket fence machine; William Leoney, assignor of one-half to J. Pickering, Oxford, grain measuring or weighing apparatus; Herman Prather, Jonesville, corn planter; James W. Quinn, assignor of two-thirds to C. C. Copeland, North Madison, and to M. Copeland, Madison, motor vehicle; James E. Bemington, Scott, device for building wire and picket fences; Frank W. Samuels, Indianapolis, game; Jesse Warrington, assignor of one-half to Nordyke & Marmon Company, Indianapolis, hominy mill.

—An accident occurred on the farm of E. H. Webeker, about a mile north of Covington, which resulted in the death of John S. Sharon, who was about 37 years of age. He was engaged in boring a well, and had loosened some rock with a charge of dynamite. The explosive collected fire-damp, and when Sharon re-entered the well he was overcome. He signaled his brother to draw him up, but his strength gave way, and when within seventeen feet from the top he fell back and was either drowned or killed.

—The musical congress to be held Aug. 8 and 9, at Manlove Park, near Cambridge City, promises to be a great musical treat. Among the leading attractions are Blind Tom and Mrs. Shaw, the greatest living lady whistler.

—Mrs. Nancy Lightcap, who escaped from the Woman's Reformatory at Indianapolis and went back to her home at Crawfordsville, and subsequently was captured and returned, was married in the Crawfordsville jail before she was taken back, to "Can" Seering, the man who was the indirect cause of her occupying her present quarters.

Full Text of the Disability Pension Law Passed by Congress and Approved by the President, June 27, 1890.

Following is the full text of the Disability Pension Bill as approved June 27, 1890:

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That in considering the pension claims of dependent parents, the fact of the soldier's death by reason of any wound, injury, causalty, or disease, which under the conditions and limitations of existing laws would have entitled him to an invalid pension, and the fact that the soldier left no widow or minor children having been shown as required by law, it shall be necessary only to show by competent and sufficient evidence that such parents are without other present means of support than their own manual labor or the contributions of others not legally bound for their support; Provided, That all pensions allowed to dependent parents under this act shall commence from the date of the filing of the application hereunder and shall continue no longer than the existence of the dependence.

SEC. 2. That all persons who served thirty days or more in military or naval service of the United States during the late war of the rebellion and who have been honorably discharged therefrom, and who are now or may hereafter be suffering from a mental or physical debility of a permanent character, not the result of their own vicious habits, which incapacitates them for the performance of manual labor in such a degree as to render them unable to earn a support, shall, upon making due proof of the fact according to such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may provide, be placed upon the list of invalid pensioners of the United States, and be entitled to receive a pension not exceeding $12 per month, and not less than $6 per month, proportioned to the degree of inability to earn a support; and such pension shall commence from the date of the filing of the application in the Pension Office, after the passage of this act upon proof that the disability then existed, and shall continue during the existence of the same; Provided, That persons who are now receiving pensions under existing laws, or whose claims are pending in the Pension Office, may, by application to the Commissioner of Pensions in such form as he may prescribe, showing themselves entitled thereto, receive the benefits of this act; and nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to prevent any pensioner thereunder from prosecuting his claim and receiving his pension under any other general or special act; Provided, however, That no person shall receive more than one pension for the same period; And provided further, That rank in the service shall not be considered in applications filed under this act.

SEC. 3. That if any officer or enlisted man who served ninety days or more in the Army or Navy of the United States during the late war of the rebellion, and who was honorably discharged, has died or shall hereafter die, leaving a widow without other means of support than her daily labor, or minor children under the age of sixteen years, such widow shall, upon due proof of her husband's death, without proving his death to be the result of his army service, be placed on the pension roll from the date of the application thereof under this act, at the rate of $8 per month during her widowhood, and shall also be paid $2 per month for each child of such officer or enlisted man under 16 years of age, and in case of the death or remarriage of the widow, leaving a child or children of such officer or enlisted man, under the age of sixteen years, such pension shall be paid such child or children until the age of sixteen; Provided, that in case a minor child is insane, idiotic or otherwise permanently helpless, the pension shall continue during life of said child, or during the period of such disability, and this proviso shall apply to all pensions heretofore granted, or hereafter to be granted under this or any former statute, and such pension shall commence from the date of application therefor after the passage of this act: And provided further, That said widow shall have married said soldier prior to the passage of this act.

SEC. 4. That no agent, attorney or other person engaged in preparing, presenting or prosecuting any claim under the provisions of this act shall, directly or indirectly, contract for, demand, receive, or retain for such services in preparing, presenting, or prosecuting such claim a sum greater than $10, which sum shall be payable only upon the order of the Commissioner of Pensions, by the pension agent making payment of the pension allowed, and any person who shall violate any of the provisions of this section, or who shall wrongfully withhold from a pensioner or claimant the whole or any part of a pension or claim allowed or due such pensioner or claimant under this act, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall, for each and every offence, be fined not exceeding $500 or imprisoned at hard labor not exceeding two years, or both, in the discretion of the court.

GRETCHEN'S GRIT.

BY OZIAS MIDSUMMER.

He'd wandered about amid vales of disaster,
And climbed the high mountains of woe,
And now he sat perched on a stump in the pasture,
And did not know whither to go.
Oh, why, sang his heart, has the earth in its make up
No place where a tramp may find rest?
I'll go to yon house and will ask them to shake up
Some kind of a wanderer's nest.

He went to the window, and saw within, sitting,
Some son of the Rhine, on a chair,
While close by his side a wee fraulein sat knitting
Some beautiful striped foot-wear.
He smelt the sweet Limburger cheese through the keyhole,
Mixed with the rare flavor of kraut,
And mingled with these was the smell of the beer-bowl
Coming through the keyhole without.

His heart went up into his mouth in an instant,
When fell his hard fist on the door;
Then, instead of coming unto his assistance,
They left him stand just as before;
And, furthermore, then and there all became darkness,
And not the least sound could he hear,
Except now and then, as they blamed their remissness,
And then again sampled the beer.

Thus forevermore might these things have continued,
So far as the tramp was concerned,
Had not a man then and there, bony and sinewed,
Him in the deep darkness discerned.
The words of the man came, in deep thunder language,
And said, "You Dutch son of a gun;"
But ere he said more the poor, poor tramp languished,
And for his life could not have run.

The man quit the tramp when he thought he was dying,
Might very soon give up the ghost;
When the tramp heard the dear little Dutch lady crying,
And learned that the man was his host.
He learned, furthermore, that though he was the victim,
He'd just got what was the girl's beau's;
Her father'd designed and intended to fix him,
And give him a lesson to go.

The tramp soon arranged a plan whereby they put him
To bed in the tidy spare room,
And there he made love to the little Dutch fraulein,
The tramp, indeed, had struck a boom.
He stayed through the cold stormy days of the winter,
And lingered along into May,
Declaring, on honor, he was a great sinner,
If able to go on his way.

But time brought a change. "You must go, or be put out,"
The father said; "now do you hear!"
When Gretchen's arms folded the tramp's form about,
She told the old man to stand clear.
The father beheld in his daughter the mettle
Which came to them from his good sire.
He thought the pan should not say black to the kettle,
So put his foot down on his ire.

They sat by the kitchen stove calmly discussing
The ills of the tramp and his woes;
The little Dutch fraulein the meantime kept fussing
To tickle the old father's nose;
And soon was delighted to see him smell gently,
Then fill his lungs with the perfume
As came out the kraut, beer, and Limburger scently,
Their odors pervading the room.

"The hope of the woman lies in her lord's stomach,"
Thought wise little Gretchen, with smile;
"If father will eat and drink all I see him take,
The will of her lord's is his child's."
The plan was successful, and worked in a minute,
As Gretchen had hoped that it would;
So winked to her lover again to begin it,
And settle the matter for good.

The lover began, but, before he could finish,
A lawyer drove up to the door;
Who said: "My dear sir, if your name is Jay Winnish,
You're worth forty thousand or more.
Your uncle is dead and has left his whole estate
To you on condition you wed.
So go about quickly and hunt up a good mate,
Or be a poor tramp till you're dead."

He said: "I am Mayor of Centerville town here;
As such have the right and the will
To tie a knot snugly, and do it up brown, dear—
Just now, if you two will stand still."
So while the old father was taking a long pull,
To settle Limburger and kraut,
The dainty wee knot was tied quickly, for fearful
Of kicking should he find it out.

CHICAGO, ILL.

BETRAYED;

—OR—

A DARK MARRIAGE MORN.

A Romance of Love, Intrigue and Crime.

BY MRS. ALICE P. CARRISTON.

CHAPTER XIV.—(Continued).

"Well, I interpret it thus: I imagine two beings, equally free and strong, loving and valuing each other beyond all else, having no affection, no loyalty, no devotion, no honor, except toward each other; but possessing all for each other in a supreme degree.

"I give and consecrate absolutely to you my person, all that I can be, or may be to come, on condition of an equal return, still preserving the same social conventionalities, without which we should both be miserable.

"Secretly united, and secretly isolated, though in the midst of the human herd, governing and despising it; uniting our gifts, our faculties, and our powers—yours which cannot be greater, and mine which shall become greater if you love me—and living thus, one for the other, until death.

"You have dreamed, you told me, of strange and almost sacrilegious love. Here it is: only before accepting it reflect well, for I assure you it is a serious thing.

"My love for you is boundless. I love you enough to disdain and trample under foot that which the meanest human being still respects. I love you enough to find in you alone, in your single esteem, and in your sole tenderness, in the pride and madness of being yours, oblivion and consolation for friendship outraged, faith betrayed, and honor lost.

"But, mark you, this is a sentiment which you will do well not to trifle with. You should thoroughly understand this.

"Well, if you desire my love, if you consent to this alliance, opposed to all human laws, deign to tell me so, and I shall fall at your feet. If you do not wish it, if it terrifies you, if you are not prepared for the double obligation it involves, tell me so, and fear not a word of reproach. Whatever it might cost me, I would ruin my life, I would leave you forever, and that which passed last night should be eternally forgotten."

He ceased, and remained with his eyes fixed on the beautiful woman, with a burning anxiety. As he went on speaking, her air became more grave. She listened to him, her head a little inclined towards him in an attitude of overpowering interest, throwing upon him at intervals a glance full of gloomy fire. A slight but rapid palpitation of the bosom, a scarcely perceptible quivering of the nostrils, alone betrayed the storm raging within her.

"This," she said, after a moment's silence, "becomes really interesting. You said something about leaving me forever; but you intend, in no event, to leave this evening, I suppose?"

"No," said Eugene.

"Very well," she replied, bowing her head in sign of dismissal, without offering her hand: "we shall see each other again."

"But when?"

"At an early day."

He thought, notwithstanding the past, she required time for reflection, a little terrified doubtless by the monster she evoked; he gravely saluted her and departed.

The next day, and on the three succeeding ones, he vainly presented himself at her door. Mrs. Elliston was dining out or dressing.

It was for Eugene a whole century of torture. One thought, which often disquieted him, revisited him with double poignancy. Cora did not love him. She only wished to revenge herself for the past, and after disgracing would laugh at him. She had made him sign the contract, and then escaped him. In the midst of these tortures of his pride, his passion, instead of weakening, increased.

The fifth day after their interview he did not go to her house. He hoped to meet her in the evening at the residence of a mutual friend, on Madison avenue, where he usually saw her every Thursday.

This friend, Mrs. Louisa Morgan, was a connection of his mother's family, and from his earliest boyhood had been very kind to Eugene. She was a widow and no longer young, but being wealthy, she had no difficulty in rendering herself and her home attractive.

She had no taste or inclination for religion, but affected a great liking for literature and art, and every week received many distinguished authors and artists, who piqued themselves on being freethinkers.

Cora Elliston had permitted herself to be introduced by her husband, because she knew Eugene frequented the house.

On this particular evening the gathering was small. Eugene had only arrived a few moments, when he had the satisfaction of seeing his uncle, who had returned from Washington, and Mrs. Elliston enter.

She tranquilly expressed to him her regret at not having been at home the preceding day, but it was impossible to hope for a more decided explanation in a circle so small and under the vigilant eyes of certain ladies present.

Eugene vainly interrogated her face. It was as beautiful and cold as usual.

His anxiety increased; he would have given his life at that moment for her to say one word of love.

Mrs. Morgan liked the play of wit, as she had but little herself.

They played at her house such little games as were then fashionable. Those little games are not always innocent, as we shall see.

They had distributed pencils, pens, and little packages of paper—some of the players sitting around large tables, and some in separate chairs—and scratched mysteriously, in turn, questions and answers.

During this time Mr. Elliston played whist with an elderly lady for partner. Cora did not usually take part in these games which fatigued her.

Eugene was therefore astonished to see her accept the pencil and paper offered her.

This singularity awakened his attention and put him on his guard.

He himself joined in the game, contrary to his usual custom, and even took charge of the basket to collect the small notes as they were written.

An hour passed without any special incident.

The treasures of wit were dispensed. The most delicate and unexpected questions—such as "What is love?" "Do you think that friendship can exist between the sexes?" "Is it sweeter to love or be loved?" succeeded each other with corresponding replies.

All at once Cora gave a slight scream, and they saw a drop of blood trickle down her forehead.

She commenced laughing, and showed her little gold pencil-case, which had a pen at one end, with which she had scratched her forehead in her abstraction.

The attention of Eugene was redoubled from this moment—the more so from a rapid and significant glance from Cora, which seemed to warn him of an approaching event.

She was sitting a little in shadow in one corner, in order to meditate more at ease on questions and answers.

An instant later Eugene was passing around the room collecting notes.

She deposited one in the basket, slipping another into his hand with the cat-like dexterity of her sex.

In the midst of these papers, which each person amused himself with reading, Eugene found no difficulty in retaining without remark the clandestine note.

It was written in red ink, a little pale, but very legible, and contained these words:

"I belong, soul, body, honor, riches, to my best beloved, Eugene Cleveland, from this moment and forever.

"Written and signed with the pure blood of my veins, this 18th November, 188—. CORA ELLISTON."

All the blood of Eugene Cleveland surged to his brain, a cloud came over his eyes, he rested his hand on the marble table, then suddenly his face was covered with a moral paleness. These symptoms did not arise from remorse or fear; his passion overshadowed all. He felt boundless joy. He saw the world at his feet.

CHAPTER XV.

THE PRIVATE SECRETARY REPORTS.

But what of that paragon of excellence, honor and integrity—to say nothing of the other virtues—Mr. Oscar Slyme?

How was he conducting himself during all this time?

Was he watching the growing intimacy between Cora Elliston and Eugene Cleveland with indifference? or did he not notice this growing intimacy at all?

From what has already been said of Mr. Slyme, we think the reader will give him credit for more acuteness than to suppose him wholly ignorant of what had passed since that interview in the library, of which he was an unseen and unsuspected witness.

Just how much he knew it is not at this time worth while to inquire; but what he did know, for reasons of his own, he kept jealously to himself.

He promptly waited upon Mrs. Elliston whenever she summoned him to her presence, and carried out all her instructions to the very letter, showing her, in every word and action, that he was, as he professed himself, her humble and willing slave.

It was some months after the little episode in Mrs. Morgan's drawing-rooms—indeed, winter had passed and spring had come. Mr. Elliston had been duly elected to the United States Senate, and had taken his seat more than a month before. Cora was in the library waiting to receive Slyme, whom she never admitted to her boudoir.

There was a faint knock at the door.

"Come in," she called, somewhat impatiently, and the private secretary sidled into the room.

"You wanted to see me, Mrs. Elliston?" he said, in his low, fawning voice.

"Yes; I understand my husband has sent for you, and that you will be obliged to start for Washington almost immediately."

"It is true. The Senator writes that he can no longer do without me, and so I am to join him at the earliest possible moment."

"And when will the earliest possible moment be?"

"I think I can get matters into order here so as to be able to leave in a week's time."

"So soon? I shall be very sorry to part with you, Slyme. I shall miss you very much."

He raised his eyes a little, and gave her a quick, searching glance.

"But you, Mrs. Elliston, you will soon join your husband in Washington?"

"Yes, but not before the latter part of May."

"The last of May! I am sure he expects you before that."

"I dare say," she rejoined carelessly, "but I can not leave New York for a month yet."

A black look settled on the private secretary's face, and in a somewhat different voice he said:

"I am very sorry to hear it. But you did not call me here merely to say this. What information—what new service do you require of me before I go away?"

Cora paid no attention to his altered looks and tone, but promptly replied:

"In the first place, I want to know about that girl at Roxbury. Is she being well cared for?"

"Treated like a queen."

"She still lives in the cottage you hired for her?"

"No, she is with the family of Mr. Nathan Metcalf, the owner of the cottage."

"What kind of people are they?"

"Very agreeable, I assure you. Mr. Metcalf is an elderly man, well informed—in fact, the oracle of the town. Then there are his daughter and granddaughter, and several servants."

"His daughter and granddaughter, you say?"

"Yes, his daughter, Mrs. Clara Denton, is a young widow, and, out of pure compassion, acts as companion to Mrs. Cleveland."

"Mrs. Cleveland? I thought that name had been dropped?"

"True; in Roxbury she is only known as Mildred Lester."

"Lester! Why did you give her her own maiden name?"

"It was a risk, I admit; but there was no help for it. Mrs. Denton found the name on her linen, and besides, strangely enough, she remembered that when she had forgotten all else."

"But will not the people around her find out who she really is?"

"Little fear of that, the people of Roxbury are not likely to run upon any one from Riverside."

"I hope you are right. Has she quite recovered from the effects of that fever?"

"In a way—yes."

"What do you mean by that?"

"I mean that she is well—as well as she will ever be, and yet she is not what she was before that accident."

"I suppose you have reference to her mind. You have already mentioned that her memory has become impaired; to what extent has she lost it?"

"She has lost all recollection of what happened before that fearful night. Her life, as I may say, dates from the hour when she recovered consciousness after the fever."

"Strange, but very fortunate."

"Yes—for you."

Cora gave him a quick, searching glance.

"Is there any hidden meaning in your words, my friend?" she asked.

"None whatever, I assure you."

"It seems to me that it is fortunate for you as well as for myself."

"Oh, certainly."

"Is she happy?"

"Who? Mrs. Cleveland?"

"Miss Lester."

"Beg pardon. Yes, very happy."

"Very happy," repeated Cora, musingly.

"Yes, and why shouldn't she be? She has no cares to trouble her, and remembers no sorrows."

"Remembers no sorrows!" Then quickly: "But isn't she curious about the past?"

"Naturally, somewhat; but I have made up a past for her, which Mrs. Denton communicates to her from time to time, as occasion calls for."

"You are a remarkable man, Mr. Slyme."

"Thank you."

"And now about those Fieldings, what do you know of them?"

"They are still at their old quarters in West Forty-seventh street. The young man is getting on at the bank, and the sister is slowly recovering her health."

"Does Mr. Cleveland visit there often?"

Again came that strange black look.

"You ought to know as to that better than I, Mrs. Elliston."

"What do you mean, sir? I know nothing about it."

But Slyme had already repented his hasty speech.

"I believe," he said, rapidly, "that he goes there not oftener than once a week—Sundays usually."

"Does he see the sister alone then?"

"Never alone."

"Are you sure?"

"Quite sure."

A pause followed this assertion.

Slyme broke the silence by asking:

"Is there anything further at this time, Mrs. Elliston?"

"One question more: you will go to Roxbury before you start for Washington?"

"I shall be obliged to do so."

"And you will see that every provision is made for that—that unfortunate's comfort while you are away?"

"I will see to everything."

"That is all, then, just now."

Slyme, who had been standing all through the interview, moved noiselessly toward the door. With his hand on the knob he paused.

"What is it, Slyme?" asked Cora, looking up.

"Were you aware that the Lelands owned property in Roxbury?" he inquired, in a peculiar tone.

"The Lelands! I knew that some member of the family owned property in Connecticut, but had no idea it was there."

"It's an immense farm, and belongs to the young man, Warren Leland; he inherited it from his mother's father."

"Well, you are going to say something unpleasant, I think. What is it?"

"He has taken a strange notion into his head. He is having the house thoroughly remodeled and is going to live there."

"What! Warren Leland?"

"Yes; says he is going to turn farmer, but I fancy, after gaining a residence in Connecticut, he intends to run for Congress; indeed, I have heard several hints to that effect, and from those who ought to know, too."

Cora became very grave and thoughtful.

"This is very disagreeable news," she said at length. "I wish I had known it before."

"I would have told you, but for some months past, you know, you would not even let me ment on Roxbury or Mrs. Cleve—Miss Lester."

Cora made an impatient gesture.

"Let me think," she said. Then half aloud:

"What can possess Warren Leland to bury himself in that out of the way place? Even if he is ambitious to go to Congress that seems a roundabout way to get there."

"I can't enlighten you on the subject," said Slyme. "I only know he hasn't acted like the same man since his bosom friend's misfortune and disappearance."

"His bosom friend? To whom do you refer?"

"Brownell, the civil engineer. He was his classmate in college, you know."

"Ah! the young man whose wife died so strangely some two or three months ago."

"Yes: and who, directly afterward, disposed of everything and disappeared—went off to Mexico, some say."

"And Warren Leland hasn't been himself since! I didn't suppose him capable of so much affection for his friend."

"Some say the affection was for his friend's wife," remarked the private secretary, dryly.

"I fear you are disposed to be cynical, Slyme."

"Oh, not at all—quite the contrary."

"At any rate, I hope you have never run across Warren Leland in Roxbury."

"I have taken good care not to do so, and shall use the same caution in future."

"That is well; but sooner or later he will form the acquaintance of your friend, Mr. Metcalf, if he has not already done so."

"I fear that is inevitable."

"And then is he not likely to learn something of you and your visits to the Metcalf farm?"

"What can he learn? Merely that I am Miss Lester's brother, that I am connected with a large commercial house in New York, that I am constantly on the road; and when I can snatch an hour or so from my multitudinous cares I run up to Roxbury to pay a visit to my most unfortunate sister."

"Very good, indeed, Slyme; but he will see her, and may become interested in her."

"Aye," exclaimed Slyme, with a perplexed look, "there's the rub."

"You had thought of that?"

"I have thought of little else of late."

"Well, we must endeavor to concert some plan to head him off—to turn him from his purpose—if he develops such a purpose."

"Unfortunately, I shall not be here to aid you in carrying out a plan, even if we can mature one."

"But there must be some way out of the difficulty. Do think, my good Slyme, and come to me here to-morrow."

"I will do my best, as ever, to serve you," and with a low bow he withdrew, softly closing the door behind him.

For some time Cora remained seated as he had left her, but her head was bent forward, her hands were tightly clasped in her lap, and her whole attitude denoted deep and earnest meditation.

Presently the heavy portiere was drawn aside, and Eugene Cleveland entered.

In an instant the cloud fled from her brow, and a radiant smile appeared upon her face.

He hastily crossed the room, knelt by the divan, raised her shapely head, and imprinted a burning kiss upon her lips.

"At last you have come!" she murmured, returning the kiss and clasping her beautiful arms about his neck.

Again the curtain in the doorway was drawn aside, and the eager eyes of the private secretary were fixed upon the pair, and there was malignant, mortal hatred in the glance.

CHAPTER XVI.

SHAPING DESTINY.

Oscar Slyme, the private secretary, had told Cora Elliston no more than the exact and dreadful truth.

Amy Brownell, the wife of the civil engineer, was dead, and her husband was a wanderer.

Warren Leland was indeed changed; but perhaps not wholly for the better.

The shock had been a sudden and terrible one for him, and he had not recovered from it.

He had not again visited the attractive home at Bedford Park, thinking, for the lady's sake, he would not do so until he was sure the master of the house had returned.

It was three weeks after Brownell's hurried and unfortunate departure; Leland had had another "night of it" with Charley Raymond and friends of that ilk, and awoke with a splitting headache and a remorseful heart, when his valet noiselessly entered the room with several notes and letters on a salver.

"Set it down here, and draw back the curtain," ordered the master.

The valet obeyed, placing the salver on a stand by the side of the bed.

One note instantly attracted Leland's attention.

The handwriting he well knew, and the envelope was bordered with black.

He snatched it up, and opened it with trembling hands. And this is what he read:

"My wife is dead. I am in no fit condition to see you now. I have disposed of everything and am going away—no matter where.

"You will hear from me later.

"HOBART BROWNELL."

"Great God!" exclaimed Leland, letting the note fall from his hands, and turning ghastly pale.

And it is but just to say that it was the knowledge of her death, and that alone, that affected him; he did not even think of the seeming threat in the note.

"Great God! Dead! Can it be possible?"

The valet turned, and regarded him with a look of astonishment.

"Get out!" he cried. "But say! bring me some brandy and a bottle of soda."

The valet disappeared.

Then, in spite of his aching head, he gave himself up to serious reflection.

"I wish I knew more about it," he muttered, at last.

And later in the day he set himself the task of finding out something.

His efforts were rewarded with some degree of success. He found the dead woman's mother, and was received graciously by her.

Her daughter, she said, had not been herself since his visit and her husband's departure that evening. She had drooped; she was dispirited; she was crying all the time.

The morning of her husband's return, he was with her alone for some time. Directly after that she was seized with congestion——

"Congestion!" repeated Leland, inquiringly.

"Yes, of the lungs—of the brain. Really I don't know! but she is dead! and Hobart is gone, and I, alas! am alone in the world!"

"But—excuse the question—not unprovided for, I hope?"

"Oh! no, no! Hobart was very kind and thoughtful. My future is secure."

Leland questioned her further, but could learn nothing more.

She was as ignorant as himself with regard to the widower's movements. He was gone, that was all she knew. Where he had gone, she had no idea.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

An Octogenarian Athlete.

A queer-looking little specimen of humanity with an armful of newspapers stood outside of the Grand Central Depot the other afternoon crying his wares. His hair was long and unkempt, his trousers were frayed at the edges, there were patches of poverty on his little jacket, but his eye was clear and his flattened nose showed that he was the hero of many a gutter battle. A pompous-looking individual, with his great-coat thrown open, a heavy cane in his hand, and dressed in the height of fashion, came swinging himself down the street in gorgeous style. The boy pulled one of his papers out, offered it to the swell, and was rewarded for his efforts by a thump on the back with the heavy cane. The little fellow howled with pain. The cabmen who were at the gate at the depot smiled and the other boys laughed in derision. The swell had proceeded about three steps on his way when a firm hand grasped him by the collar, shook him vigorously, and an old man, six foot two, as straight as a grenadier, and holding a heavy malacca stick threateningly over him, asked, "How dare you hit a boy?" The swell tried to shake himself loose, but it was no use. The old man's hand was firm, the crowd was growing larger, and the boy was howling as if his heart would break.

"You, sir," went on the old man, as the blood mounted to his face, "are a disgrace to humanity. Old as I am I can thrash you for that cowardly act. And if I ever know you to again lift your hand to a boy I will take the law into my own hands."

The swell's head dropped a little and his face was pale. The old man looked him firmly in the eye, shook him again as a cat would a mouse, and walked on. As he did so the little boy, wiping the tears from his cheeks, followed after and thanked him. The old man patted him affectionately on the head and disappeared in the crowd. There was no comment except by the small boy, who exclaimed: "Ain't he a daisy?" He brushed the tears from his eyes and in a moment was as busy as ever selling his papers.

The old man was a daisy. It was none other than David Dudley Field, the greatest constitutional lawyer in the world, brother of Cyrus W. and Stephen J. Field. He is nearly eighty-three years of age, but as vigorous as a man of fifty. In his young days he was a famous boxer and athlete, and the way he tackled the howling swell showed that his good right hand had not forgot its cunning.—Pittsburg Leader's New York letter.
